LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 16, 1964

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome to the Legislature today, in the east gallery, students from Harwood Public School and Queen Alexandra Public School, both of Toronto; and in the west gallery, students from Swansea Public School, Toronto and members of the junior council of the town of Penetanguishene.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. members of the Legislature I know, will learn with regret that the absence from the House today of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) is occasioned by the death of his father, Mr. Herbert Robarts of Galt.

One does not like to see parents go, Mr. Speaker. Their passing is always a matter of such keen personal loss that no words of sympathy suffice.

A very close and affectionate relationship existed between our hon. Prime Minister and his father, who would have been 80 years of age next month.

During his lifetime, the late Mr. Robarts followed a career in banking, which commenced in Galt and took him to western Canada, where he served in Banff and Winnipeg. Then he returned to Galt and later was transferred to London, where his talents were also devoted to the work of a number of community organizations which included the Canadian Red Cross Society and the Victorian Order of Nurses. Upon retirement, he again took up residence in Galt.

Hon. members of the Legislature will join, I am sure, in an expression to the hon. Prime Minister of our sorrow in the passing of his father, the late Herbert Robarts.

To him is paid the highest tribute by all who in any way were associated with him, in view of his acts of kindness, his homely philosophy, his business acumen and integrity of character, and his keen interest in the everyday affairs of the people of his native province of Ontario.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would want to join with the hon. Attorney General on behalf of my hon. colleagues, in saying quietly and reverently that we extend to the hon. Prime Minister our deepest sympathy on the occasion of the death of his father. Insofar as it is given to us, we share that sorrow and the passing of one who was very dear to the hon. Prime Minister of the province.

It is true, as the hon. Attorney General has said, that over four decades he has lived a useful and a productive life. But even having lived for four score years, it still leaves a void and it still brings the occasion for those of us on all sides of the House to extend to the hon. Prime Minister our sympathies at this time.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, the burdens of public office are great enough as it is, particularly for a person in the position of Prime Minister of the province of Ontario and I am sure that I express the wish of not only those of our group, but of all hon. members of the House in joining with the hon. Attorney General and the hon. leader of the Opposition in expressing our deep sympathy to the hon. Prime Minister on this, the occasion of his bereavement.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to bring to the attention of this honourable House, that once again athletes from the province of Ontario showed their superiority over the rest of Canada this past weekend when the University of Windsor, a new university in the first year of its existence, won the Canadian collegiate basketball championships, defeating the University of Nova Scotia—that is Acadia University in Nova Scotia—on Friday night and following through with a victory over the University of British Columbia on Saturday.

It is very fitting, because this is the first year of this new university, and in their first year they have been successful in winning the Canadian collegiate basketball championships.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a question that I have submitted to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond). I understand that he is involved in some important meetings at the moment. Perhaps I can put the question on the record and when his commitments permit him to return to the House he will be able to reply to it.

My questions were: has the government any further statement to make on the hospital bed shortage in view of the emergency meeting of medical doctors with representatives of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission on Friday evening?

Further, what answer has the government given to the convalescent homes of the Metro area on their offer more than a week ago, to make 1,000 beds available?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 50th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HIGHWAYS

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Mr. Chairman, it is usually helpful in reaching a better understanding of what an organization is trying to accomplish in its over-all operations to know something of its basic philosophy or principles. For that reason, I should like, at the outset, to state that a primary principle of The Department of Highways is simply this: all road mileage, wherever it may be—and regardless of the jurisdiction responsible for it—forms part of the whole. Accordingly, in the department's planning, the close relationship and interdependence between all segments and the department's provincial road system is always given due recognition. To put the matter in another way: all our studies and observations over the years have established beyond doubt that the King's highway system can reach full efficiency only when augmented by an efficient municipal road network in all parts of Ontario.

The report I am about to make on some of the work carried out last year and new work planned for 1964—condensed as it must be—together with the new measures of assistance for the municipalities implemented in 1963, will amply substantiate that The Department of Highways operates in full accordance with a total roads concept.

On the trans-provincial Highway 401, 98 miles were opened to traffic, permitting a through drive of 502 miles from Windsor to the village of Lancaster, eight miles west of the Quebec boundary. Construction is continuing on the sections where only two lanes are now in use to provide, as a minimum, four lanes throughout as soon as possible.

To recap in brief the sections opened last year, they were, in sequence from west to east: from Highway 2, east of Tilbury, to Highway 4, south of London—71 miles; from two miles west of Marysville to Napanee—nine miles; and from the Aultsville Sideroad to Cornwall—18 miles.

Permanent service centres were opened at eight strategically located points on Highway 401 between Belleville and London. The success which attended the opening of these facilities and the numerous expressions of appreciation received from many quarters is most gratifying to report. As announced in this House on January 23, the department has decided to open four new service centres in western Ontario as the result of the opening of 71 miles of Highway 401 in 1963 in that part of the province.

Similarly, the opening to traffic last fall of two new sections in eastern Ontario made possible a through drive of some 185 miles on Highway 401 easterly from the service centres west of Trenton. As a result, tenders have been called for two new service centres in the vicinity of Odessa.

An interchange numbering system on Highway 401 was implemented and a new strip map published showing the location of each interchange by number. The purpose in each case was to assist motorists, especially tourists and others not familiar with Highway 401.

I should like to refer for a moment to the department's ambitious project—over a five- or six-year period—to widen the Toronto by-pass section of Highway 401 to 12 lanes between Islington Avenue and Highway 48, a distance of 17 miles. The work is proceeding well on schedule thus far.

Seven major contracts were awarded in 1963 for the reconstruction of interchanges between Yonge Street and Highway 400. A contract has been let for the construction of the Spadina Expressway interchange, one of the first three-level interchange complexes to be built in Ontario. Last September a contract was awarded for the construction of the Highway 401/400 interchange, another three-level facility.

One innovation was the department's introduction of a 24-hour emergency road patrol to minimize delays resulting from accidents or breakdowns during the reconstruction of the Metropolitan Toronto section of Highway 401 and to assist motorists in trouble. During the first seven months the patrols were in operation, they travelled more than 200,000 miles, made more than 25,000 stops and provided some 1,200 gallons of gasoline. The operators also changed 847 tires, assisted 1,734 drivers with mechanical problems, assisted at the scene of 104 accidents, called a tow truck 737 times and made 18,261 other checks on stationary cars.

The contributions which these patrols have made to safety and to the orderly movement of traffic in the midst of an extremely large and intricate construction programme is obvious to anyone who travels with any frequency the section of Highway 401 concerned.

The patrols operate in complete liaison with the Ontario Provincial Police but do not have police authority. Many expressions of appreciation of this service have been received, as well as for the continuation of the winter patrol on other sections of Highway 401 where emergency service is not available.

The most spectacular construction opened was the Garden City Skyway over the Welland Canal at St. Catharines, thereby ending the last major bottleneck on the Queen Elizabeth Way. This magnificent structure has a total length, including approaches, of close to 3.5 miles. It is noteworthy that during the construction of the new skyway the longest continuous box plate steel girders ever fabricated in Canada up to that time were used.

Highway 405—a new, four-lane, controlled-access freeway providing a direct connection between the QE Way, in the vicinity of the Garden City Skyway, and the high-level Lewiston-Queenston international bridge, was opened in September. The six-mile long freeway is a significant addition to the choice of routes for traffic travelling between the northeastern United States and the most heavily populated sections of Ontario.

Still another link with the QE Way was forged in December when the first stage of a new multi-lane, controlled-access highway, No. 403, was opened to traffic from Longwood Road in Hamilton. This six miles of new expressway, built at a cost of more than $7.5 million, opens a highspeed route between the Queen Elizabeth Way, near Burlington, and Highway 2, in the west end of Hamilton.

Just five days later, on December 9, controlled-access Highway 126 was opened. This freeway runs northerly from Highway 401 for three-and-a-half miles to connect with Highbury Avenue in the eastern end of London. The new artery, built at a cost of $2.5 million, will relieve the heavy flow of traffic over Wellington Street, until now the only direct route between Highway 401 and the downtown area of London. The new Highway 401 connection is also significant for the roads network in the area because of the popularity of Highbury Avenue and connecting east-west roads north of Highway 2 or Dundas Street as a convenient by-pass to many points north and west of London.

Another controlled-access facility—with a similar purpose of providing a faster, safer, connection between a metropolitan area and Highway 401—the Freeport diversion section of Highway 8, had been opened in September. This new 2.5 mile freeway, costing close to $2 million, by-passes Freeport en route between Kitchener and Highway 401 on a new alignment which is a pronounced improvement over the section of highway it has replaced.

Work progressed favourably on stage three of the Ottawa Queensway, the 2.5-mile section from Carling Avenue to Bronson Avenue, where six lanes are being constructed. The controlled-access Queensway, as many of you know, forms part of the main trans-Canada highway through the province.

Another project of a high order of importance in the Ottawa area is Ontario's part in the construction of the Macdonald-Cartier bridge across the Ottawa River between Ottawa and Hull. The structure and approaches at Sussex Drive in Ottawa were opened in January. The estimated over-all cost to the province for this phase, known as stage one, is $12,275,889. The work for stage two, consisting of the Ontario approaches to the new bridge from Sussex Drive and King Edward Avenue, is scheduled to be awarded during the 1964-65 fiscal year.

Dealing with the main route of the trans-Canada highway through Ontario, satisfactory progress can be reported. There were 138 miles under construction in 1963 to bring sections up to the required standard for all trans-Canada highway mileage, most of the work being concentrated in northern and northwestern Ontario. By the end of the year, 46 miles had been paved and completed and reconstruction of the remaining 92 miles was well advanced. Of the 1,453 miles of trans-Canada highway in Ontario, 1,095 miles were constructed to the required standard by the end of 1963.

One of the highlights of highway development in northern Ontario last year was the opening to traffic in September of a new 12-mile section of Highway 11, known as the Tri-town by-pass. This is the longest by-pass built to date in northern Ontario—one of the longest anywhere in the province. Constructed at a cost of close to $3 million, this new section provides a by-pass for the towns of Cobalt, Haileybury and New Liskeard and saves approximately five miles over the old route of Highway 11 through the three towns.

Closing of the gap on Highway 101 between Wawa and Highway 129, south of Chapleau, has been proceeding apace during the year. Grading has been completed from Highway 129 westerly for some 22 miles to Big Pine Lake and new grading is in progress for a further 10.5 miles westerly from that point. A clearing contract for 11 more miles of the right-of-way was awarded in December last. At the Wawa end, grading, drainage and other extensive work is in progress easterly from a point eight miles east of Wawa and a clearing contract from Highway 547 southerly was recently awarded.

Last November a new international bridge across the Pigeon River between Canada and the United States was opened to traffic. The new structure was built as a joint project between The Department of Highways, Ontario, and the state of Minnesota. This border crossing is located at the southern end of King's Highway 61, south of Fort William. At the same time, Ontario opened an entirely new five-and-a-half-mile section of Highway 61, providing a new approach to the bridge, located east of the former structure. The cost to the department for both its share in the bridge and the new section of highway was approximately $1.2 million.

By the end of last year all contracts for grading the 80 miles of new Highway 11 between Atikokan and Fort Frances had been awarded. At the western end of the new highway, paving of the $6 million Rainy Lake Causeway is now under way and will be completed by the summer of 1964. In line with the previously announced policy of giving the Fort Frances-Atikokan highway extension a special priority, the new road will, it is hoped, be open for winter travel during the winter of 1964-65.

Another example of the way in which the department practises, as well as preaches, a total roads concept can be found in the ambitious roads-to-resources programme. Under this programme, roads have been constructed since 1958 into areas of potential mineral, lumbering and other natural resources, many of them of great scenic beauty. Under the agreement between the federal and provincial governments to share the cost of building roads of this type, 272 miles of new road in northern and northwestern Ontario have been added to our road mileage, thereby opening large areas for development and recreation.

Specifically, the state of progress on the four resource roads now under construction is as follows: on the Savant Lake road from trans-Canada Highway 17 in the vicinity of Ignace to Savant Lake.

Forty-six miles of this route have been completed and an additional 12 miles are now under construction. Clearing of the remaining 22 miles of this road is now under way.

Construction is in progress on the remaining 11 miles of the 75-mile Spruce River road from trans-Canada Highway 17, near Port Arthur, to Cheeseman Lake. This road should be completed by the fall of this year.

We have also completed the first 15 miles of a new road from Central Patricia to Lingman Lake. Clearing of the right-of-way for an additional 15 miles, to make it the most northerly road in the province, is now under way.

The fourth road in the quartet of the roads-to-resources programme involves a seven-mile northerly extension from Highway 108 to provide a direct route from trans-Canada Highway 17 and Elliot Lake to the Mississagi Provincial Park. This was completed and opened to traffic last summer. An additional seven miles are now being constructed to provide a link with secondary Highway 546. Plans to extend this road to connect with Highway 129, under the same programme, were announced in October.

During recent months we announced significant plans for the opening of still more regions in northern Ontario through new roads. We went further and got work started on 104 miles of new highway to directly link Sudbury and Timmins. The first stage, now under way, involves clearing for 12 miles southerly from the junction with Highway 101, eight miles west of Timmins, and from Gogama northerly for 12 miles.

Work has also begun at the Sudbury end on the grading of eight miles, previously cleared, of a completely new section of road between Levack and Cartier, both of which communities are located on the new Sudbury-Timmins highway link. Following an improved alignment, the new section will offer a much more direct route.

This programme is being scheduled in such a manner that the Gogama to Highway 101 section will be the first to be completed, thereby giving Gogama a direct highway link with Timmins.

Another major project which will open up virgin territory for the mining and forest industries, tourists and outdoorsmen, is planned through the linking by road of Smooth Rock Falls, on Highway 11, and Fraserdale, a distance of some 40 miles. This new highway—the result of meetings between Ontario Hydro and The Department of Highways—will provide access to remote Ontario Hydro projects in the James Bay watershed.

The road will open the door to Ontario Hydro's growing community at the Abitibi Canyon Generating Station on the Abitibi River and it will also link up with a 27-mile access road now under construction to Hydro's Little Long Generating Station, first of three hydro-electric stations to be built on the Mattagami River.

We should not overlook, in considering this expanded programme for the north, the greatly increased potential for recreational opportunities and the development of enterprises catering to tourists and sportsmen. In that connection it is a pleasure for me to record the welcome given the department's new folder on northern Ontario incorporating a map of that part of the province on a scale larger than those previously published. The folder, launched last April, appears to be accomplishing precisely what it was intended to do: namely, to encourage greater tourist travel and a more intensive examination of business and industrial opportunities in those regions.

Turning southerly again, on the Brantford by-pass section of Highway 403, grading was being carried out for four miles westerly from Highway 2, just east of Brantford, by the year's end and work on five structures was in progress.

The first contracts for construction of a new, controlled-access highway known as Highway 406, were awarded in January, 1963. Initially, this freeway will conveniently connect Welland and the adjacent heavily populated region with the QE Way at St. Catharines and later additional construction will extend the link to Port Colborne.

While referring to this part of the Niagara Peninsula, may I observe that the twinning of locks in the Welland Canal system will pose many serious road problems for the local municipalities and for not a few others. May I assure the hon. members that The Department of Highways will co-operate to the utmost in the seeking of solutions equitable to all concerned—as far as is humanly possible—working closely with the municipipalities, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and others directly concerned.

A striking illustration of the department's—what I like to refer to as the—total roads concept is the realistic recognition of the part played by the airlines in the overall transportation requirements of the province. In line with an established policy of improving road facilities between airports and the areas they serve, the department in January opened 1.5 miles of new, four-lane, controlled-access highway between Highway 401 and the new international air terminal at Malton, northwest of Metropolitan Toronto. This will afford a high-speed connection to the airport when connecting access roads have been completed by the federal Department of Transport.

We also assumed the airport road at Earlton last August. Surveys are being made to see if this road link, entering secondary Highway 571 and connecting with Highway 11, requires improvement to bring the road up to the required standard for a secondary highway.

This round-up of some of the more noteworthy highway construction projects completed in 1963 and report on the progress made on others, lengthy as it may appear, represents only a small part of what was actually accomplished. Just to put that observation in proper perspective, I should point to the fact that, before the 1963-64 fiscal year ends, the department will have approved, during that period, final payments to contractors carrying out departmental contracts for not less than 450 contracts.

I should like now to talk about the matter of qualification. In connection with the department's awarding of contracts, and payments to contractors, it is pertinent to comment at this point on the recent extension of prequalification procedures. The many advantages which have accrued to the department as a result of the decision to prequalify contractors bidding for specific contracts prompted a decision to extend these procedures to apply on other types of contracts not previously covered, the change becoming effective on contracts advertised on and after February 26 of this year. From that date onward prequalification will apply on all capital contracts, regardless of the amount involved. A specific example of one classification not previously covered is the fabrication of steel for structures. In addition, all large maintenance contracts—such as for resurfacing and winter sanding—will now be subject to prequalification procedures.

The objective of these extensions of prequalification is the same as that at the time prequalification procedures were first introduced: To ensure the carrying out of the department's programme on schedule to the greatest possible extent—allowing for the weather and other factors beyond control—by contractors qualified to do the work involved in such contracts.

A criticism which was heard during the early years of prequalification, but less frequently now, was that prequalification tended to favour the larger contractors to the detriment of the small. This is not borne out in facts and we are convinced that a sound system of prequalification is good for every part of the industry, both large and small.

Road assumptions in the fiscal year 1963-64, over and above those referred to in my estimates address of 1963, added more than 80 miles of King's and secondary highways to the provincial road system. The longest section of road assumed as a King's highway was the former Lambton county road No. 3 between Courtright and Alvinston, which, in August, was designated as a 30.5 mile extension of Highway 80. Other assumptions as King's highway mileage were: five miles in connection with construction of the Sarnia by-pass, signed as Highway 40-A; 14 miles of Essex county road No. 12 between Leamington and Highway 401, which, on April 1, was designated Highway 77; and in eastern Ontario, approximately one mile of township road was assumed to form part of a new route for Highway 41 which will cross the Bay of Quinte via a high-level bridge.

In the matter of roads assumed as secondary highways—and not referred to in my 1963 estimates address—some 30 miles were so assumed, the longest being 20 miles of local roads between Highway 28, near Lakefield, and Highway 36 at Buckhorn, which became Highway 507 in June.

An additional 98 miles of road, assumed during the fiscal year, was designated as tertiary road mileage—a relatively new type of road, of which the Spruce River road, mentioned previously, running northerly from Port Arthur, is the best known—and assigned numbers in a newly created 800 series.

On maintenance, I should like to say that the ever-increasing importance of the provincial system of highways for the economic and social well-being of Ontario, and the steadily rising volume of traffic using them, has placed constantly growing demands on the department's maintenance section. In terms of new mileage alone, this increased by some 320 miles either as King's highway or secondary highway additions between December 31, 1962 and the end of 1963, plus a further 98 miles added under the tertiary road designation.

These additions resulted in a new grand total of some 12,630 miles of road being under the jurisdiction of The Department of Highways by the end of 1963.

To convey an idea of the volume of work which the new tertiary road mileage has created for the department's maintenance forces—to take only one example—I shall simply observe that the only difference in the work load for roads so designated and for secondary highways is that the department does not carry out winter maintenance on such roads, although agreements may be made whereby it contributes toward the cost of any such work. Including earlier designations, there are now some 120 miles of tertiary road mileage.

In the overall increase of approximately 420 miles in the province's highway system in the 1963-64 fiscal year were nearly 40 miles of multi-lane highway, such as 403, 405, and so on. These additions in 1963 brought the total of multi-lane pavement to some 740 miles. The placing in service of the Garden City Skyway, last October, in itself represents a major maintenance job for the department's maintenance crews, as does any particularly large bridge.

Over and above the maintenance of mileage under the direct control of the department, to a standard not excelled on this continent and equalled by few jurisdictions anywhere, a very considerable amount of maintenance work is carried out on extensions of King's and secondary highways known as connecting links. All told, more than 275 miles of roadway are now covered by connecting link agreements and it is a fair statement to say that, by and large, the department's maintenance crews perform the lion's share of the maintenance, regardless of the rate of contribution by the department applicable to the connecting link concerned. When it comes to winter maintenance, most of the ploughing on these connecting links is done by DHO personnel and equipment.

The most efficient deployment of men and machines, particularly in the annual battle with snow and ice, is greatly helped through the effective use of two-way radio communication. With the extension in 1963 of the department's own radio system to the districts of Bancroft, North Bay and Sudbury—and the addition early this year of Cochrane and New Liskeard—15 of the department's 18 districts now have such facilities in operation. Some 140 stations are being used, and approximately 550 vehicles are now carrying two-way radio equipment. Pre-engineering of the three remaining departmental districts which as yet do not have two-way radio systems is now in progress.

I should like now, Mr. Chairman, to comment on roadside tables and picnic sites. The use of the department's roadside tables and picnic sites by both residents and visitors alike is such that I wish to devote a moment to these much appreciated free facilities. An examination of the record and a comparison with what other jurisdictions have done prompts these two comments: First, the department's facilities are as numerous, as well dispersed, and of as high a standard as can be found in any other province or state. Second, the department has more than kept pace in expanding both the sites and the number of tables as the total mileage in the King's highway system has grown. So much so that today there is an average of one picnic site for every 12 miles of highway. In the three-year period ending December 31, 1963, more than 600 picnic tables were added, swelling the total to approximately 3,850.

As to the selection of sites, the emphasis is placed on the major travel routes across Ontario, the purpose being to have these facilities for nourishment, rest and relaxation available at fairly frequent intervals, especially for those on long trips. In recent years, many improvements have been made to existing sites, while others have been relocated in safer or more attractive surroundings, or both. During the present winter the department expects to spend some $61,000 in this way, as well as in the creation of entirely new sites, all within its "Make Winter Work" programme.

A new development, which I am pleased to mention, will be the opening this year of picnic areas adjacent to the eight service centres now in operation on Highway 401. Some landscaping has already been done in preparation and each site will be opened at the earliest possible date.

Before leaving the general subject of maintenance, I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the men who do the 101 day-in day-out jobs of maintenance—some of them not too exciting, at that—without which our highways would not be anywhere near as safe nor as pleasant to drive.

Obviously, the way in which our provincial highways are maintained is something which directly affects everyone who travels them and so the standard of "highway house-keeping" is the norm by which the overwhelming majority pretty well judges The Department of Highways as a whole. However, maintenance, vital as it is, constitutes but one aspect of the department's work. As Minister, I have had an opportunity to see just how great a number of facets there are to this department. It is a most complex organization indeed, requiring many different types of highly specialized skills, engineering ability and talent generally. Even the day-to-day direction of a department the size it is presents a formidable administrative challenge, and I here wish to express my appreciation to those in management functions—beginning with the deputy Minister, his two assistant deputy Ministers, and right down the line.

A ship, of course, is no better than its crew and I hasten to extend this tribute to a dedicated staff, both at head office and in the district and regional offices. Without the devotion to duty and the spirit of pride in the work at hand, which it has been my pleasure to observe all over this province, The Department of Highways simply could not accomplish what it does in so efficient a manner.

In reporting earlier on road assumptions, I referred to the assumption of the former Lambton county road No. 3 over its full distance of some 30.5 miles between Courtright and Alvinston as a King's highway. The reconstruction of the road to the standard of an ordinary King's highway, from one end to the other was done, as a development road project, at a cost to the department of approximately $3 million. This road was assumed because of its obvious importance, and proven popularity, as an east-west route in this part of Ontario.

The department's development road programme—under which the department bears 100 per cent of the cost for reconstruction, with the exception of any property purchases and fencing required—again brought about significant improvements on sections of township and county roads throughout the province. Direct aid of this type is provided in the case of roads important in the local road network requiring reconstruction on a scale beyond the financial resources of the municipalities involved. When these considerations apply, The Department of Highways steps in and lends the necessary hand to enable such roads to perform their proper role adequately. Here again is evidence—to the extent of an estimated expenditure of $10,125,000 for 1963-64—of the tangible ways in which The Department of Highways acts in accordance with the "total roads concept" to which I have referred; that is, the department appraises all roads in the light of their part in the over-all road requirements of the area concerned.

Before the end of the 1963-64 fiscal year, counties and townships to the number of 199 will have received this type of assistance in the period, spread over 191 individual development road projects.

It is the policy of this government to effect, as conditions permit, progressive changes in legislation relative to the division of responsibility for and the financing of municipal roads and streets which will have the greatest long-term benefits. Factors which influence the degree of progress which can be made in this sphere are, of course, fiscal limitations and the adoption of more advanced administration techniques on the part of those we are trying to assist.

I make that observation of general policy by way of announcing that legislation will shortly be introduced to enable the formation, under a new Act, of local roads boards where desired in place of the present statute labour boards. The establishing of such boards will be on a voluntary basis and will not, in any way, be imposed in any instance.

At the time the new legislation is presented to this House, the manner in which these local roads boards will be formed or constituted and administered will be carefully detailed. Broadly speaking, the local roads boards will perform a function similar to that of the present statute labour boards, but with significant advantages. At this time I shall confine any elaboration on that point to the disclosure that The Department of Highways would, under the new Act, contribute on a two-for-one basis to road work carried out by local roads boards, compared with the one-for-one basis for statute labour boards.

Here, once more, is a case of action being taken to implement constructive measures for roads under other jurisdictions, the type of action which confirms the department's concern with the total road requirements of Ontario.

The manner in which the department is "moving with the times" in the allocation of expenditures is shown graphically in the 1964-65 table of proposed expenditures. The record amount of $112,450,000 budgeted for road subsidies and other forms of assistance to the municipalities represents an increase of almost 14 per cent over the corresponding 1963-64 figure. In comparison, the increase in the sum proposed for the department's own capital expenditures is just over five per cent.

An important component in the proposed financial aid for the municipalities is a much higher allocation for the development road programme, up to a record $15,150,000. Many municipalities, rural and urban alike, have serious road problems and the budget I am presenting is concrete evidence that The Department of Highways is both aware of the situation and is prepared to implement the maximum amount of assistance.

With reference to the capital construction programme, the increase of approximately $7 million for capital expenditures on King's highways in the 1964-65 programme we have proposed will enable the awarding of a high volume of work. In the interest of conserving time I shall refer to only a few examples.

In northwestern Ontario as mentioned, work will be carried forward to close further, the "gap" between Atikokan and Fort Frances. The reconstruction of Highway 105, already completed over the 49 miles between the town of Red Lake and Ear Falls, will be extended southerly. New contracts will be awarded on Highway 101 between Wawa and Highway 129 to hasten the linking of these two highways south of Chapleau. As mentioned previously, work will go forward on the new Sudbury-Timmins highway, for which 104 miles of new road will be required. Clearing of the right-of-way is now in progress, both northerly from Gogama and southerly from Highway 101.

A good volume of work, either grading or paving, will be in progress along sections of the trans-Canada highway to bring it up to the required standard of some of the older sections. On the Ottawa Queensway, which forms part of the trans-Canada highway, stage 3—most of it six lanes—will be opened to traffic as early as possible this year and work on the fourth and final stage, begun in 1963, will be continued. In eastern Ontario, it is expected that construction will begin on the new high-level bridge across the Bay of Quinte near Deseronto, to form the key part of a newly located section of Highway 41. In southern Ontario, work will be under way on many sections of Highway 401 to bring existing two-lane sections to four in an uninterrupted programme. The last remaining "link," an eight-mile section from the Quebec border westerly, will be opened to traffic in 1964.

Widening of Highway 401 on the most critical sections of the Toronto by-pass will be carried forward with the degree of dispatch dictated by the need. On Highway 403, it is expected that it will be possible to open the section from Longwood road, in the Westdale section of Hamilton, to the Aberdeen Avenue interchange. Also forming part of Highway 403, work will again be in full swing on the Brantford by-pass section. On another freeway, Highway 406, in the St. Catharines area, new contracts will be awarded to extend the large volume of work completed in 1963.

The tendency of people in any given area to consider their highway needs as being among the most pressing in this province is, of course, understandable. However, if there is to be any reasonable relationship between expenditure and revenue, some deserving projects must necessarily be deleted in the sifting process and placed on a future programme.

On the subject of revenue and expenditure, the figures for the 1963-64 fiscal year show that the government of Ontario will once more have spent considerably more on roads than it received through the operation of motor vehicles. This can readily be seen from these tabulations:

Estimated total revenue derived from the operation of motor vehicles, all sources	$271,625,000
Estimated total expenditures:
Department of Highways	277,400,000
Department of Transport	6,477,000
	283,877,000
Pointing up an excess of expenditure versus related revenue of	12,252,000

Another way of stating the $12.25 million deficit or "over-spending" is to say that revenue amounted to only 95.6 per cent of expenditure.

However, the comparison between revenue accruing to the government of Ontario from the operation of motor vehicles of all types and the total roads expenditure in any given area is by no means consistent throughout the province. On the contrary, if The Department of Highways operated on the principle of a dollar of expenditure for every dollar collected, the most heavily populated parts of Ontario would by now have considerably more road facilities of all types than they do and the more sparsely settled regions would have infinitely less. The "total roads concept" of the department dictates a much more enlightened use of the revenue coming in, namely, to keep pace, as far as possible, with the steadily rising demands in areas of great urban growth, and at the same time, set aside a generous allocation for new construction or needed improvement in the rural areas and the far-flung northern regions of the province in order to promote their development and prosperity.

As I said in my opening remarks, The Department of Highways views all roads—regardless of where they are or the jurisdiction responsible for them—as forming part of the whole road network of the province. To distribute the expenditures of this department as equitably as possible over the length and breadth of Ontario, according to need, is to match action with that fundamental philosophy.

By way of illustrating how the department adjusts according to the changing road requirements of the municipalities, I would refer to the far-reaching modifications in road subsidy legislation effected in 1963 through amendments to The Highway Improvement Act. Some of the principal extensions were increased subsidies to rural townships in cases of demonstrated need, direct aid on specific major projects, and increased participation in connecting link facilities which tie in with the King's highways. By way of comment on the first of these modifications, more than 200 townships have been advised that a higher rate of subsidy became applicable in 1963-64.

Many of the hon. members represent ridings in which the growing traffic volumes on urban main arteries of all types—both within towns and cities and adjacent to them—impose demands which are frequently beyond the capacity of these roads. I need only mention the traffic loads placed upon such roads by "suburban sprawl", as it has so aptly been described. That, however, is but one aspect of the trend to urbanization in Ontario—especially from the end of World War II onward—so that by 1961 more than 79 per cent of Ontario's population was classed as urban.

Urban municipalities have truly formidable road problems. The adequate solution to them is, in not a few cases, beyond their financial resources unless assistance is forthcoming on a scale and of a type not available prior to the subsidy amendments of 1963, and supporting changes in policy in this field by The Department of Highways.

By way of extending this line of thought I would now like to draw to your attention the following facts: In an ever-growing number of cases, and to an ever-increasing degree, whenever The Department of Highways embarks on a programme to construct new, or to expand or improve existing King's highway road facilities in urban regions—or equally, to share in some major road project initiated by a municipality—a great many more people benefit directly than merely those living within the particular municipality where such work is carried out.

The most obvious "outside" beneficiaries are those who already travel over such roads —or promptly switch to a new road facility upon completion—en route to and from work. These people—and their numbers continue to grow as more and more of the population tends to travel by car, farther and farther, between home and the place of employment—benefit equally from new road construction or reconstruction in the heavily populated areas of the province. Advantages which they share are: savings in time in commuting to and from work; easier, safer, more convenient driving; less wear and tear on the car, not to mention the driver!

However, improved road facilities in urban areas are likewise important for a much wider cross-section of people, a considerable number of whom use such facilities daily, such as deliverymen and servicemen of every description. Moreover, many urban arterial roads are also frequently used as by-passes by traffic originating outside the area.

It was a forthright appreciation of these and related facts which led the department to announce in 1963, at the same time as the subsidy legislation amendments to which I have referred, new measures of financial aid for the municipalities with respect to the construction of extremely costly, controlled-access urban expressways.

Provision was made in the department's estimates for 1963-64 for financial assistance on a much more generous scale to some of the larger urban centres in the construction of such controlled-access expressways. In the interval since I presented those estimates, two such applications by cities for participation by the department have been approved.

Port Arthur and Fort William, jointly, were the first to apply for such participation, in what they refer to as a ring road, to serve both cities. Shortly thereafter, Kitchener and Waterloo received approval for a similar type of ring road, 15 miles long. In both cases, The Department of Highways will subsidize both construction and property acquisition at the rate of 75 per cent, a notable increase in the former rate of 50 per cent on construction and 33½ per cent for property purchases.

Discussions relative to similar urban controlled-access expressways are now in progress with the cities of Windsor, Hamilton and Peterborough. In view of the undiminishing growth in traffic in and adjacent to most of the larger urban centres, it may be expected that similar applications will in time be received from most of the major cities in Ontario. Because of the considerable sums required for projects of this type—75 per cent of the cost of property, construction and maintenance now being borne by the department—it is obvious that each application will be examined most thoroughly.

A word about freeways and what they mean for Ontario: Freeways, such as Highways 400, 401, 403 and 405 and the Queen Elizabeth Way mean many things for a great many people—far more than is generally realized—and, to a lesser extent, bring benefits to all the people of this province.

At the time the figures were compiled, which was late in 1962, it was estimated that some 5,350,000 people, or 84 per cent of the total population of Ontario, were living within a 50-mile radius of Highway 401. Narrowing down the "corridor" to a ten-mile belt on either side of Highway 401, the same survey indicated that more than 3.1 million people, representing some 49 per cent of the population, lived within this 20-mile band. There is every reason to believe that today both percentages would be even higher; and they will continue, we believe, to get higher.

From such statistics it is obvious that anything done to open new, or improve existing, sections of freeway in the more heavily populated areas of Ontario benefits a very high percentage of our people in a direct way. Also, as with every major highway improvement—but more so in the case of Highway 401 and the other freeways which are so important for our American visitors, regardless of their final destination—a stimulus is given to the tourist industry every time a freeway is built as new, or improved.

Commenting on the opening of a section of Highway 401 in western Ontario last fall, a newspaper in that part of the province observed that, "Toronto became five miles and 1.5 hours closer" to Windsor and Chatham as a result. The item also said, "The decreased travelling time, achieved through by-passing of low speed zones in and near municipalities, means hundreds of dollars saved in time and other expense of road transportation."

Similarly, this direct quotation from a Kitchener industrialist, as to the economic impact of Highway 401 for that area: "The mileage between here and one of our plants in eastern Ontario used to be about 180 miles, which took well over four hours to drive. When Highway 401 from Highway 8 easterly was opened, the distance shrank to 165 miles—which can be driven easily under three hours. Transportation costs have been reduced materially."

Wholesale businesses and light industry dependent on truck transport have gravitated toward Highway 401 and other freeways to take advantage of substantial savings in both storage and delivery costs. Because freeways like 401 cut hauling time so appreciably, plants located conveniently adjacent to them can serve a wider area from a single operation. This, in turn, means less investment in buildings and reduced operating costs all down the line.

As might be expected, the extent of the sprouting of industrial plants and other enterprises alongside the major freeways is usually related to the length of time a particular section of freeway has been in service. For example, business concerns of one type or another line the QE Way at many points between Niagara Falls and Toronto and the rate of new locations is rapidly increasing. Similarly, a complex of manufacturing concerns straddles both sides of Highway 400 at Barrie which, by the way, has never looked back since it was by-passed by Highway 400 some years ago. The same type of new industrial growth has been evident on sections of Highway 401 and, generally speaking, the pattern has been the same, namely, the greatest development has occurred on those sections which have been in use the longest.

In any consideration of the economic impact of freeway construction the resulting creation of job opportunities should not be overlooked. Upon the completion of each new section of freeway, employment possibilities are opened for people, many of them living in rural areas, for whom the travelling time would otherwise make these jobs unattractive, if not out of the question. In this connection I was pleased to note, in a report recently received from the Eastern Ontario Development Association as part of a survey, that one of the benefits of the opening of new sections of Highway 401 in eastern Ontario in 1963 which they listed was the reduction in travelling time for many employees who drive 30 miles to their work at a plant in the Prescott-Brockville area.

A report from the Kingston Industrial Commission states, in part, "In this area we have located some eight industries, all of which were to some degree influenced by the nearness to 401, and in at least two cases it was a decisive factor."

The Ontario Seaway Valley Industrial Development Association also favoured the department with a report, dated January 28 last. After commenting on new industrial growth in the region, the report refers specifically to the construction now under way on "a very large warehouse" on a 250-acre site adjacent to Highway 401, east of Morrisburg. The accompanying comment, and I quote, was: "There is no doubt at all that Highway 401 has contributed to this company's decision to locate in this area."

Finally, on this line, the report from the Cornwall Industrial Commission concluded with this telling observation:

We fully expect the development along Highway 401 in the future will be similar to those communities where the highway has been in existence for a number of years.

So, Mr. Chairman, if I have dwelt at some length on the economic impact of Highway 401, it has not been without reason. In this province we have reached a stage where the importance of our freeways for the province as a whole should be fully understood by people everywhere in Ontario—regardless of the way various segments earn their livelihood.

The concrete examples I have just given of commercial enterprises of many different kinds locating along Ontario's freeways to so marked a degree is clear-cut evidence of one of the most valuable benefits resulting from freeway construction, namely, the decentralization of industry.

Freeways put all the adjacent country through which they pass "on the main line," so to speak, in much the same way as railroads, but with far greater flexibility in so far as the locating of plants is concerned. It has been established beyond any measure of doubt that the freeways, such as Highway 401—in conjunction with related highways and other road facilities—create new values by opening up undeveloped areas, by putting land to more profitable uses and by encouraging industry to disperse or decentralize, as well as to expand. Thus, new business and new jobs, with resulting general prosperity for the regions served by freeways, can be attributed directly to their construction.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss briefly the matter of the county needs study and simply say that the study, now in progress, is further convincing evidence of how The Department of Highways concerns itself with the over-all requirements of Ontario. About a year ago we asked all the counties to undertake a new needs study which will re-evaluate the road requirements of each county road system in the province. The department is paying a 50 per cent subsidy in each instance.

The purpose of the new study is to up-date the data compiled in the course of a previous departmental study which included an appraisal of the county road systems generally and their relationship to the over-all road needs of the province. The findings of that study were published in a 1959 report entitled, Ontario's Roads and Streets.

In the interval since the 1957-59 needs study, many of the county road systems have changed noticeably due to higher standards of construction necessary to handle greatly increased traffic, changing traffic patterns, the effect of annexations and other causes.

The county needs study is designed to bring the road inventory and other information compiled in the earlier study up to date, thereby providing a more current guide as to the needs of the county road system over the next five to ten years. Thus, the counties and the department may, together, prepare construction programmes in which the funds available will be directed to the areas of greatest need. Here again, is a striking example of The Department of Highways acting in accordance with its "total roads concept"—that is, taking positive and effective action to the end that all roads will contribute the maximum level of service for the common good.

As I made clear at the time of writing to the county councils a year ago, and now wish to repeat, the study techniques being employed will in no way reduce the authority of the counties to determine their yearly expenditure. Rather, a basic objective of the study is to organize the data on county road requirements in such a way that the counties will be in a much better position to prepare realistic programmes for the next five or six years.

Precisely because up-to-date factual information on the counties' needs is necessary for the most effective application of direct aid of the development road type, there is a natural and close relationship between the county needs study and the total development road programme. The department intends to use the information so compiled to evaluate requests for development road aid, bylaw submissions and also for long-range estimates of subsidy requirements.

It is our sincere hope that each county will use the resulting report as a guide in setting a reasonable road levy; to increase the "lead" time for pre-engineering; to revise the county road system where necessary—both additions and deletions are included here; to make the road committee and the county council more keenly aware of the necessity for financial and physical planning beyond the current year; and, finally, to encourage everyone, including county engineers, county councils, county taxpayers and users of county roads to take a more realistic view of the need for adequate county roads for the good of the economy of the province as a whole.

Mr. Chairman, I have attempted in these remarks to convey to the House something of what I like to consider the "total roads concept" in Ontario, which includes roads of every description, whether under the jurisdiction of The Department of Highways or the municipalities—whose road and street facilities are subsidized so extensively by the government through the department.

I would say to the House that it is difficult, if not impossible, to see any lessening of the demand for adequate transportation and communication facilities—if we are to keep pace with the development that we all hope will continue. But I would also suggest to the House and to the people of Ontario—and to road authorities at all levels of government across this great province of Ontario—that we can start today to examine every conceivable means of getting more for our "roads dollar."

In The Department of Highways we have recognized this fact to the extent that our capital expenditure for road construction in the year ending March 31, 1960, was in excess of $147.5 million. This, incidentally, was an all-time high, and you will notice in the figures presented here today that we are estimating our expenditures for capital construction on King's highways for the year ending March 31, 1965, to be $141.5 million. During this levelling-off period, and of course, previous to this, the portion of the highway budget applied to direct subsidies to municipalities has increased by leaps and bounds. For example, in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1961, our municipal assistance totalled $80 million. We are estimating for the year ahead of us that the total for this purpose will reach $112.5 million. What we must now examine, together, are the various means by which we can make this amount of money, along with the amounts raised by the municipalities, do at least as much and, desirably, more work in the ensuing year and probably for several years to come.

If we are going to preach—then it is only fair that we should practise, so I will describe two of several methods by which we in the department are endeavouring and succeeding in the "tightening-up process" at our level.

For the past three years a thorough internal departmental study has shown us how to effect what amounts to a gross staff reduction with no evident impairment of efficiency. This has been accomplished largely by eliminating many redundant job classifications upon the retirement of incumbent personnel. The work loads were redistributed among remaining staff and I make the proud boast here today that the administrative and technical efficiency of The Department of Highways still ranks as, or at least with, the best in government.

Implemented less than a year and a half ago, another area where the adoption of a new internal policy is revealing interesting economies is in the equipment section of the department. As the result of a study by a staff committee, the department is in the process of reducing many lines of construction and maintenance equipment. Our survey revealed that in a good number of circumstances the utilization factor did not warrant ownership of equipment and accordingly it is being disposed of and it is now being rented where required. The obvious and substantial savings associated with ownership are, of course, the costs of maintenance, housing, operating staff, capital costs and carrying charges. These savings can be well substantiated, in that over the past few years we have added many hundreds of miles to our provincial roads system with very little appreciable increase in our maintenance expenditures.

In other words, we maintain a constant scrutiny of our internal cost factors and will continue to explore every practical avenue of economy and develop more efficient methods of operation. I would therefore earnestly urge all road building authorities—cities, towns, counties and townships—to re-examine the various areas of their operations and effect those economies that are possible without impairment of the efficiency of their respective programmes. In this way, the premise of a “total roads concept” will keep Ontario in the forefront as the jurisdiction with the finest road system on the continent—or, for that matter, in the world.

On vote 801:

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, I just do not know where to start in here, this afternoon.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Just dive in.

Mr. Bukator: There are a lot of places to dive in, I can assure the hon. Attorney General. I might start off with these two books I received this afternoon in the mail. I would like to read the hon. Minister's letter accompanying these estimates:

In deference to requests made in the Legislature, I am making available to the hon. members, the 1964-65 capital construction programme and municipal road programme books in advance of the presentation of my estimates. In doing so, may I respectfully request that the material therein be treated as confidential until the estimates have been tabled.

Can you imagine anyone in the Legislature here this afternoon being able to pick up these estimates, digest them and be able to discuss them intelligently here this afternoon? I do not know anyone in the Legislature, in my short experience, who is capable of that. If they have the ability, they will have an opportunity this afternoon to display it.

I would like to say this pertaining to the hon. Minister and his officials. I am not here to condemn him or his people. I am here to condemn the programme that he has before us and I think we can find many areas in which we can debate this intelligently. So, if anyone gets the impression that I am out to try personally to crucify anyone, it is not my intention at all—at the moment, anyhow. Mind you, if needs be, one can get involved in that area too.

I find that the hon. Minister made quite a presentation pertaining to the two skyways. I think this is closer to home and so I can talk about that for a little while.

The Homer Skyway has been recently opened and it is a wonderful way of transportation. It shortens the route between Toronto and Niagara Falls, or the Peace Bridge, for trucks. The Burlington Skyway also shortens the way, and for this I think the government should be commended.

About a year ago, one of my colleagues was here to debate these issues with you. He suggested at that time that the government should consider eliminating the tolls for trucks on the Burlington Skyway. Now that argument is greater than it ever was. You have put a two per cent sales tax on gasoline and I realize it is not The Department of Highways—but you have put an additional two per cent sales tax on gas and I would think they may be paying more than their share. I think the tolls should be eliminated as far as trucks are concerned.

As far as Burlington is concerned, I think the hon. member who represents that riding is not here this afternoon, but as far as Burlington is concerned, the congestion—

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): I am right here.

Mr. Bukator: Yes, I am sorry. I was thinking it was a Conservative. I do not know how I by-passed the hon. member for Wentworth East. I knew the name, but I forgot the riding.

This particular bottleneck, with which the people in that area have to contend—because there are tolls to be paid they naturally take the route along the lake front. Since the sales tax has been added on, I do believe they should be given the privilege of using the skyway because, Lord knows, they are taxed high enough.

With licences from The Department of Transport, and with gas tax and fuel tax from The Treasury Department—at the same time there is revenue coming in for road purposes—I feel that should be done away with. I do not just speak on my own behalf; I speak on behalf of the Liberal Party this afternoon.

There are many areas one can discuss in what the hon. Minister has already read off to us this afternoon, but the hon. Minister is talking about the great job your people do along the highways, in assisting the travelling public. I know many truckers have done the same service for the people; this would be one way of giving them some concession, where you can show your appreciation for their efforts on behalf of the people.

I was quite interested in the submissions pertaining to Highway 405. It is almost complete now, I gather—from the new bridge to the Queen Elizabeth Way. You will recall that a delegation came to you to consider a fly-off, or a way into the industrial area of that particular district. It would be in Lincoln county. I wish the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Welch) was here to assist me in my effort this afternoon. I still hope your engineers are looking in that particular area, and I do hope that they will see fit to make some concession to that riding.

I was very much impressed with the trip we made about a year ago into the north country. We were put on the Ontario Northland Railway, and took a trip out to Timmins. From Timmins we wound up in Cochrane, and from Cochrane we wound up in Moosonee. As we drove along, or rode along in this train—am I on the right route?—I was amazed at that immense country, and its natural resources. I was impressed with the mining possibilities, and I was impressed with the timber land. I was impressed with the fishing and hunting, and the tourism. As a matter of fact, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) was boasting about his area for tourists, and I think he had something.

But let us take it from a development standpoint. We were speaking to a group of people in one of those towns or cities. They advised us, on that particular trip, that Quebec, bordering to the east of us, has roads up to the boundary of the province of Ontario, and yet we are not tied in with them at the moment—except for the completion, about a year ago, of 101, I believe it was. That is only one. There are many areas which could be developed. The two provinces could do business across that particular boundary, because they have roads up to the boundary, but we do not—from what I gathered on that trip. It would appear to me that that would be an avenue you should explore a little more thoroughly.

The people of that particular group, I recall—I guess you would call them unorganized municipalities—from the board of trade or chamber of commerce, did an exceptionally good job, early in the morning, trying to convince us these roads should be opened up.

The only road you have beyond Cochrane is at Gardiner. They have moved up that far. It would appear to me that the road could be opened further up, because two of the trains which travel through the Ontario northland have recently been cut off. You are not opening up the northland. If anything, you are closing the door. I believe that should be looked at.

I understand that on the other boundary, in Manitoba, they, too, have roads adjoining our province, but we do not have connections to them.

I could give you many arguments pertaining to the north-south roads you were talking about. You were talking about the job you did in the north country in the riding of my friend, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha). I remember that, on two or three occasions, he talked about opening the road from Foleyet to Chapleau, and then to Wawa.

I understand that portion of road has been opened from Foleyet to Chapleau and Wawa. It is being worked on now. My hon. colleague suggested that there may be a chance to open a road from Timmins to Sudbury, a direct north-and-south artery, so that people would not have to travel many miles to get to those two points. While the hon. Minister is at it, he could even put a branch off to Chapleau from the Sudbury road which goes to Timmins.

The hon. Minister says that this is in his programme. I have watched programmes come to the Legislature on many occasions and I find, too, that the departments have, for some unknown reason, a habit of changing their plans.

If I may be permitted, this afternoon, to say that the government, The Department of Highways in some instances—not too many of them—have used a bit of imagination, it would appear to me that the man who tugged at your sleeve in an area where they are bottled up is the man who was listened to. Naturally, he has to be. There are people there, and there are votes there, and there is the possibility of retaining or getting new seats. So, when the time comes, before an election in many cases, the hon. Ministers of all departments of government go to those areas to see what is needed. That does not apply to the hon. Minister of Highways, he claims. He shook his head, "No." I will accept that for the time being until we come to areas where maybe we can confirm it.

There is no imagination used, in my opinion. Someone said this road must be in because if you do there may be a chance that we can retain or get another seat.

Now this has happened. Not in the hon. Minister's term of office, let us say, just to be good to him for the moment, but this has happened.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Never in my term.

Mr. Bukator: It never happened? Why, they tell me, I would say to the hon. Attorney General, that it even happened while the Liberals were in for nine years.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Oh, that could not be!

Mr. Bukator: Wait until we come to the individual votes and I get a little closer to familiar in my own backyard.

You know, I feel that there are areas where you cannot use politics. I feel that there are areas where you cannot consider the fact that there are only a few people. For the good of this province you must expand the roads system; if you want to get to the natural resources you must put in highways with a bit of imagination.

Look at your Quebec map, if you will, and see the roads that butt up against this province and then look at the ones that we have in between, and we do not have too much.

If we are going to develop this great country of ours, we have to have highways. If you open the highways, as you have found in many areas, people will build along them. It brings traffic in and gas is used up and taxes do come to the hon. Minister. All across the country, you cannot get away from it, it improves the economy.

I feel that this would be a good time to touch on the wage question in your contracts. I remember one of my first arguments in the political field back in 1955. They were doing a bit of work in the riding at that time and the contractors were paying the employees 87.5 cents an hour.

Now, if the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) would have considered that the people of the province should all be treated alike recently when he made his announcement to the press that there would be an increase in the minimum wage from Oshawa to Hamilton, certainly he could have spread that across the province. Certainly he could have said that for construction workers there should be a minimum of at least $1.25 an hour. Basically speaking, this is where the contractors would start to bid if they were going to bid on unskilled labour in their contracts with the province.

I know this: anyone who gets $1.25 an hour certainly does not hoard that money. He spends every nickel of it and winds up owing money at the end of the year. So there should be an increase from the bottom at least. I think construction workers should be paid well and I think The Department of Highways should set the pace. This is worth considering.

Mind you, possibly your hands are tied; but if the hon. Minister of Labour had done what he should have done when he came into this House with his estimates, he could have said that $1.25 an hour across the board for construction work in the province of Ontario should be it and not from Oshawa to Hamilton only.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We had better than that.

Mr. Bukator: Yes, even better!

The hon. Minister can answer this question when we come to it. Yes, he can answer this. If you ask in your contracts that they give a minimum, at least, then you are on the right track. I will tell you that it must have been a fairly recent proposition that has not been in effect too long.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: One year. Would you like me to comment on it now?

Mr. Bukator: No. You will have a lot more to comment on when I get through. You might have a few more things to discuss as time goes on.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I imagine we will.

Mr. Bukator: I feel that under no circumstances should people work on that type of work for low wages. I realize that it is unskilled labour but they should get much more money than that.

That was not the case when I referred to 1955. It was 87.5 cents an hour and it is not too long ago that they got their minimum of $1.25, if they get that from The Department of Highways.

In making reference to suburban and county roads, I think this is one I can dwell on for quite some time because I am acquainted with the subject. I was on the county road committee for some six years and I found that originally suburban roads were built to assist the traffic to the centre of population. I understand that the roads were not too good into a certain municipality and the people would not come there to trade. So the people of that municipality felt that they should make some contribution and assist by way of finances. They originally used to help get wagons out of the mud en route to their municipalities. This was the basis later for them to contribute a portion of money and suburban roads came into existence.

I am going to say this for the suburban roads commission: they do a good job. Their work is supervised and administered by the county engineer in most cases, so the county roads committee has one job to do and the suburban roads commission has another job to do.

Now then, I could take it right off the top but I think this bears reading into the record. On the county suburban roads, let us take, for instance, Brant. In the counties of Brant and Brantford, 61.1 miles of county roads are maintained. The approved expenditure was $242,000 and the government gives a subsidy of $135,000. In other words, 50 per cent or a half of one mill is borne by the county of Brant and the city of Brantford.

So this has been in existence for many, many years. I was with many delegations and many groups that came before the former premier from municipal bodies asking why they maintain that cost to those municipalities and counties. If we are concerned about the individual in the low income bracket or on a fixed income with a low pension, I do not know why they should have to bear a half a mill on their taxes to maintain suburban roads.

Now the money total is not too great. The total at the end of this particular column is $6,947,000. Half of it is borne by the municipalities, that is something like $3,663,000. This particular tax on the shoulders of the wrong people is unfair and should be eliminated.

Now, let us go down the list a little further and find that in Carleton—and I read this for the hon. members who may not be acquainted with suburban roads and how they operate—Carleton maintains 108 miles; their expenditure is something like $946,000; the government subsidy is $508,000. In other words, Carleton and Ottawa is bearing a cost of $508,000. Again, people of that area and those counties are bearing an unfair tax burden.

I would think that with the increase in expenditure over revenue of some $7 million, it would be a good place to put some of that money.

Take Elgin, if you will, Elgin county and St. Thomas. They have only 25 miles to maintain and they pay $255,000. Those municipalities bear $134,000 in suburban road costs. Essex and Riverside, with only four miles; $22,000 is borne by the taxpayers of the county and that particular municipality. Frontenac and Kingston, 41 miles, $66,000 again is borne, if you will.

If you would like to take your annual report for 1963, you will find those figures on page 65. Grey and Owen Sound—these are coming into familiar ground—the people of Owen Sound have to bear a half a mill, some $33,000 borne by the county and that municipality.

Hastings and Belleville, 16 miles; $40,000 and $21,000 is borne by the people who should not be paying the bill. Kent and Chatham, 27 miles that is outside of that particular town; and they have to pick up the tab for that amount of money and they have absolutely nothing to say about it.

The suburban roads commission wrote to that municipality and said: "Your assessment is, let's say, $100 million, you will give us $50,000." Then they go out and spend that money, where and if they see fit to spend it.

Lambton and Sarnia—the new hon. member here might be enlightened to something if he has never been in municipal affairs. His particular municipality, along with the county, bear the cost for suburban roads to a total of $68,000.

This is an unjust tax of the people of his area, an unjust tax to the people of the province as a whole. It is a method which was put into effect many years ago, and it is about time that was put on the right side of the ledger. The province of Ontario, The Department of Highways, should pay the whole cost. Suburban commissions can still maintain their positions if need be but at least I do not see any reason why the people of the hon. member's municipality should pay that kind of money for no reason at all. This should be a provincial matter.

Leeds and Grenville, Brockville and Gananoque, Prescott and Smith's Falls all have a portion to pay. They maintain a lot of highways and their portion is $7,000, $8,000 and $5,000. Then we come to Lincoln county. Lincoln county and St. Catharines have 46.8 miles to maintain and the cost there is $246,000, and Lincoln county has to bear with the city of St. Catharines a cost of $128,000.

Middlesex and London, where our hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) comes from, may do something about their costs. He finds himself in the position where the people of his city, along with the county, have to pay $243,000 for suburban roads. Northumberland and Durham, along with Trenton, only pay $13,000. I think that is fair amount of money.

In Ontario county and Oshawa, $212,109 is borne by the county and the municipality. Oxford and Ingersoll pay only $3,000, and the municipality bears $1,600 of it. I do not know what happened there. I would think that the county council road committee should look into this matter. There is more there for them under the present system and I think they are entitled to it.

I will move on down to more familiar ground. I might say to the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter), that his people in Galt have to pay $58,000 a year toward suburban roads. Niagara Falls has to bear $47,000 for suburban roads, some 17 miles. The city of Welland in the riding of my friend, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Morningstar) has 15.8 miles. The county pays $105,000 and the city of Welland in the county of Welland, for the benefit of the hon. member, $62,000. We complained when we sat on road committees for many years, we complained during our experience on county council together, and I am continuing to complain. I hope the hon. member for Welland picks up the argument on his side of the House for us.

In Wellington and Guelph, $36,000 is borne by those two. Wentworth and Hamilton—here is quite a figure of money—bear $230,000 of the cost. And the Toronto Yorks, their portion to the municipality and the county is $1,019,000. This is an unfair tax on the people and an obsolete way of collecting it, especially since the gas tax has been raised. It would appear to be that that is the proper place to put that added cost and take it off the people's shoulders. People who are on a fixed income and on pensions, who own a little piece of land, certainly should not have to pay a mill or a half a mill on their taxes, and many of them do not drive at all. I think this is an argument well taken. I hope the hon. Minister will take a good look at that, and that in another year it will be eliminated from the records, particularly from that group of people who should not be paying the cost for that purpose.

All the arguments that I had planned on giving and putting before you this afternoon seem to be dwindling. I did not prepare myself too well. Something that the government should think about is The Department of Transport with its $80 million. The Department of Highways, I understood, was $218 million. The hon. Minister said the total revenue was $271 million and the expenditure is going to be $277 million, or there would be a deficit of some $7 million. For the life of me, I cannot see why The Department of Transport could not be merged with The Department of Highways and operated through one office. I do not think it is necessary. I realize the federal government, mind you, touches on many more fields. But provincially there is no need whatsoever for The Department of Transport not to come under the heading of The Department of Highways. I do not say this to offend my friend, the hon. Minister from Ottawa South (Mr. Haskett), but the facts are that it is not necessary.

I was hoping someone would ask me what we were going to do about that $150 million that was going to be cut off if we get a new leader.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): May I ask the hon. member what he is going to do with—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): He has 15 pages of speech prepared in reply.

Mr. Bukator: No, I do not have. I was going to say that if you recall in his speech he said it was a personal opinion and nothing to do with the party that he represented or that he is a part of at the moment. So you see it is not our opinion at all. We need not only the $150 million but many more millions of dollars. And it is going to be revealed to you as the votes are debated. There are many roads that have been neglected and should be looked into, and you cannot do it by cutting the Budget in that particular department. This I say on behalf of the Liberal Party.

Why does not someone ask me the question about the subways here in the city? How do we feel about the subways, especially in Niagara Falls and Wentworth—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): If the hon. member will give me a list of his questions, I will ask them.

Mr. Bukator: My friend, the hon. member from Owen Sound (Mr. Sargent) is not here this afternoon, but just to get it on the record, we do not object to Toronto—

Mr. Bryden: Are the hon. member and the hon. member from Owen Sound in the same category?

Mr. Bukator: There are some people in our party who are free thinkers, I suppose, the same as in the NDP. If the NDP get together, they might make a concerted effort in what they are going to do. But it would be rather interesting to see—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member means they never get together.

Mr. Bukator: How can you catch up to him? But I wanted to make this clear, we are not opposed to assisting the subway and the cost of the subway. We realize this, that if that particular road was put on top rather than in a tunnel, the government would be paying 50 per cent toward the cost of that. There is no question about that. The thing we object to is that there are many areas of the province of Ontario that have been neglected by the hon. Minister, and I say this as sincerely as I know how. The hon. Minister has looked at the political atmosphere in that particular riding. All one has to do is go beyond the limits of Lincoln county, all one has to do is go into many areas, and let us take Highway 401—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I take back the question.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Too late.

Mr. Bukator: Let us take 401 if you will.

An hon. member: The price is right.

Mr. Bukator: I think it is from Tilbury to Tempo—70 miles of a four-lane highway that has never been completed. Our colleagues on this side of the House have constantly got to their feet, year in and year out since I have been here, asking for the completion of this highway. Seventy miles and it has never been touched.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Dead wrong.

Mr. Bukator: The hon. member will have to take it up with my hon. friend. My hon. friend informs me that there are 70 miles there that are not completed—not the four lanes, there are two.

Mr. McKeough: You said there were 70 miles that had never been touched.

Mr. Bukator: Well, all right, two lanes are completed and there should be four. And so the two lanes have never been touched.

Mr. Singer: How much straighter do you want than that?

Mr. Bukator: And the two lanes have never been touched. Not only in that area—

Mr. McKeough: They have been touched. They are all graded. Why does not the hon. member read his books? They laid the dust on it.

Mr. Bukator: I drove over that highway; and since we are on 401 I will give a bit more—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bukator: They are young and are active, and they have to say something. I am a very tolerant individual—they are naturally having a bit of sport with me. But I assure the hon. members I will be going to the Falls and I will be coming back here and I will be going to the Falls for many more years than some of these people will be doing.

Mr. McKeough: Those are good highways too, George.

Mr. Bukator: No, they are not good highways. They are not good highways; not as good as they are in some areas.

By the way, I would like to get that clear, since the hon. member seems to know so much—he is from Chatham, and the hon. member should know. The two lanes which are not completed—are they in good shape?

Mr. McKeough: They could be better.

Mr. Bukator: The hon. member not only does it with a smile on his face but has a tendency to shoot a little bit.

The hon. member says there is only eight miles incomplete. Is that the far easterly portion of 401 beyond Stormont? I would like to get that clear at the moment so that I shall know.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There are eight miles west of the Quebec border with nothing yet. This is to be completed this year.

Mr. Bukator: This is according to the book which the hon. Minister had sent to us.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: But the hon. member is quite wrong about that section in western Ontario. There are 71 miles, with two lanes of pavement and two lanes of grading, and the final contracts for those remaining unpaved portions will be let this construction season.

Mr. Bukator: This is according to the book of the hon. Minister but this has happened before. I have heard remarks similar to this before.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The hon. member has not heard it from me before.

Mr. Bukator: At least we can check the record another year and see whether the hon. Minister is a little more truthful than some of the Ministers in the past.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I wish the hon. member would.

Mr. Bukator: Yes, I will. From Cornwall east to the Quebec boundary, I see it here in the book with the many colours. There is a portion between 32 and 24 which has only two lanes; the hon. Minister mentioned that earlier. Has the hon. Minister looked at Highway 16, from 401 to Ottawa? Is that not in a deplorable condition? Counties build better roads than that.

I was over that not too long ago, and I do believe to tie that in with Ottawa, that particular strip—I do not know how many miles it is—I drove on it not too long ago. There is a certain government in Ottawa which looks favourably on my requests, and I drove on that particular bit of road and it is not at all a safe highway.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Carried!

Mr. Bukator: The hon. member for Welland says "Carried". If everyone contributed as much as he does on the floor of this House we would have been out of here two months ago. We might have had nothing done.

Mr. McKeough: The hon. member means he wasted no time.

Mr. Bukator: The hon. member wasted no time doing it.

Well, I have touched on the minimum wages, I have touched on 401, I have touched on the skyways, on the gas tax, and it would appear to me that, all in all, if I have an opportunity to do this another year, I will be prepared for the hon. Minister, he may rest assured. When we get into the votes, my hon. colleagues will get into some of the problems, and the hon. gentlemen to my left can rest assured I will take care of Niagara Falls. I always have done.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark): Just under the wire, Don.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Well, Mr. Chairman, I was within reaching distance.

Mr. Chairman, in making an introductory statement to these estimates, I want to pick up at the outset a comment the hon. Minister made in the course of his remarks. He was referring, I suppose, to the inevitable competition for the dollars which are available for highways and the feeling, in some parts of the province, that they are being neglected, while other parts of the province are being provided almost with a surfeit of roads and the equivalent thereof.

One of the things I find very disturbing is the tendency to indulge in this kind of thing—pitting urban against rural areas. In my view, it is about as close to a clear revelation of bankruptcy in policy that one could get. It is divisiveness without any real accomplishment, because it is just really trying to make local political gain out of pitting your little area—presumably the little "David" which cannot cope—with the great giant somewhere else.

We have had an example of it which the last speaker tried to cover up a little in the course of his remarks, from the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Sargent) who, on two occasions so far this year, has referred to the fact that the subway in Toronto is being paid for by two-thirds of the people in the rest of the province. In so doing he provoked, quite understandably, the open objections of some of his own members. Indeed, if the hon. member for Grey North had been here last year he would have heard a regular song and dance—and I agreed with it—from the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) that, generally speaking, the city areas have tended to be neglected in being provided with facilities commensurate with their needs.

My thinking was moving along these lines because for years I have been conscious of it, not so much in "rural versus city" as in "north versus south". In fact, some years ago when I was on the select committee looking into toll roads or highway revenues, I recall a figure given to us at that time which has always stuck in my memory; on many occasions I have used it in northern Ontario, when one faces the inevitable complaint in northern Ontario that all the roads were being built in the south. The figure given to that committee was that, on Labour Day weekend alone—and this would be some seven or eight years ago now—more cars travelled the Queen Elizabeth Way from Hamilton to Toronto than did on the old trans-Canada, the No. 11 route, in a whole year, from, say, the Cochrane area through to the Lakehead.

This is not to argue that northern Ontario is not entitled to the construction of roads; but I was interested, in trying to pursue this and get some facts on it, to get from the department—after I called the deputy Minister—a little booklet put out by the department entitled, Annual Average Daily Traffic. In glancing through that, I discovered just a few illustrations of, I think, the basic reasons why more roads have to be built in the south. I am not arguing against them being built in the north where the need is—not so much for traffic requirements as for economic development, because that is the main reason for the development of roads in the north.

For example, I discovered, in looking through this booklet, that if you travel No. 11 highway from Barrie to the Timiskaming area the average annual daily traffic counts range from a low of 1,600 to 3,500 or 4,000 where there are junctions with other highways, and reach a peak of 8,500 in the vicinity of North Bay. Or, if you take No. 11 highway from Cochrane to the Lakehead, they range from a low average daily count of 600 to 800, to a high of only 3,000 as you approach the Lakehead. Or, if you take the trans-Canada, from Ottawa through to the Manitoba border, you will find that it ranges from a low of 1,000 to 2,000 or 3,000 in more developed areas like Sturgeon Falls or the Spragge area leading into Elliot Lake, or Dryden and finally it reaches to a peak of 7,000 to 8,000 only for areas like North Bay or Copper Cliff or the Soo.

Or, if you come back to a rural area, such as is so often mentioned by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) or the hon. member for Grey North, if you take No. 6 highway from Arthur to Tobermory you will find that the average daily traffic counts range from a low of 350 at Tobermory to 1,000 or 2,000 for most of the built-up areas, and reach a high of 5,000 in the area of Owen Sound. In other words, the peak figures on these highways are 5,000, or 7,000-8,000—on the trans-Canada, for example, in the North Bay area and the Soo.

Contrast that with the kind of situation you have on the Queen Elizabeth Way between Toronto and Niagara Falls, where the low is 14,000—double the peak of those other figures I was talking about—and it ranges up to a high of 50,000. Or, if you take Highway 400 from Toronto to Barrie, where the low is 11,000 and the peak is 19,000—I wonder where they get that 19,000 peak, because if you ever travelled that road on Sunday evening in the summertime, when they are coming back, you certainly think there must have been a lot of blanks in the road traffic during other parts of the year to even out at 19,000.

Or finally Highway 401, where it ranges, for small towns, from 4,000-8,000, to cities in the range of 12,000-22,000—by cities I mean areas like Oshawa and Preston—and finally to the Toronto area, where the average count is anywhere from 20,000 to 73,000 cars per day.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is pretty convincing proof of why money is being directed to the south. In fact, once again I recall an observation made to that committee some years ago when they pointed out that despite the cost involved in building a highway like 401, for example from Toronto up to Barrie, that this highway pays for itself in eight to ten years—out of the gasoline tax alone—this highway will be paid in an eight- to ten-year period.

Let us face it, there are some highways in the rural parts or in the north of this province which will take a generation or perhaps two generations before they will pay for themselves by gasoline tax alone. Indeed, this is in effect what the hon. Minister was saying when in the course of his remarks, if I have jotted it correctly, he said:

If The Department of Highways operated on the principle of a dollar expenditure for every dollar collected, the most heavily populated parts of Ontario would by now have considerably more road facilities of all types than they do and the more sparsely settled regions would have infinitely less.

In other words, the highways in the high population concentrations are paying for themselves in less than 10 years most of the time.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be misunderstood. I am not suggesting that this does not mean there should not be a more rapid development of highways, particularly in some parts of the north where, heaven knows, they waited for a generation to get a single road—if I mention Atikokan or Manitouwadge or Caramat or Nakina. I think the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Ward-robe) from up in that area, and his hon. colleagues in the Conservative Party, have been fighting elections for a generation on the prospects of opening some of those roads and finally he had the opportunity to cut the ribbon.

However, Mr. Chairman, the general point I wanted to deal with in my introductory remarks is to ask this question of hon. members: are we getting true value from the hundreds of millions of dollars we are spending in highway expenditures?

Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, I do not know. And what is more important as an Opposition leader I have no way of finding out.

These estimates are presented to us in three huge blocks. If hon. members have looked at them, you will find that there are about $4.5 million for main office estimate; your second sum, $86 million is for maintenance. True, it is broken down into a number of subdivisions; and finally you have a whopping $127 million for construction and other capital projects.

But there is no way of assessing in any detailed way how this money is being spent and if we are getting full value. All I can do is engage in something of a cat-and-mouse game with the government. The government being determined to hide some of the facts, I am equally determined to get them; but I will confess right at the outset I am licked in this kind of a game. Because it is not possible, in this kind of an uneven battle, to get the necessary details. To the extent that I do not get the details, I submit that I and every other hon. member of the Opposition is not fulfilling his responsibilities.

However, this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, I want to try to raise two specific cases. I recognize that I am taking two cases which represent only a small fraction of the multi-million dollar budget, but they will shed some light on the department's operations and I think they will at least provide some glimpse, a partial answer, to the question of whether we are getting full value for the money spent.

The first case relates to the accusations in the early stages of last year's election campaign by two former soils inspectors in the Owen Sound area contending that the contractors in that area had been cheating on contracts by substituting lower grades of material than called for in the specifications. Now the nub of the issue in this accusation and in this case, Mr. Chairman, the nub of the accusation is that inferior materials were used. Nobody, including the department, disputes this.

The department's first reaction was that this was a defensible procedure. While later maintenance cost may be higher because of the inferior material used, they explain, this is balanced out by the lower capital costs in the actual construction of the road. Perhaps I can put the department's views in a direct quote from Mr. H. W. Adcock, deputy Minister in charge of engineering, and the hon. Minister himself as quoted in the Globe and Mail of August 21. Mr. Adcock said:

The current economic theory in highway construction is to make the best use of available material.

And the hon. Minister said:

In other words, you have to equate the capital costs of construction against the maintenance costs that may follow. I am satisfied that the proper procedures were adopted right down the line.

The important point, Mr. Chairman, that is evaded in this explanation is that the contractor benefits from the lower capital costs in the construction of the highway, but the public Treasury has to foot the bill for the higher maintenance costs in subsequent years. What I would like to put to the hon. Minister, and shall in a moment, are some questions to clarify to what extent there is some protection of the public interests in this.

In face of this, I want to suggest that it is entirely unsatisfactory for the hon. Minister and his department to investigate the situation themselves and, not surprisingly, come up with the conclusion that all is well. In fact, the hon. Minister dismissed these charges, in headlines that got considerable space, to the effect that they were "irresponsible and frivolous." But I suggest that more pertinent than the hon. Minister's dismissal of it was the comment of one of these soils inspectors, Mr. Molock. I am not interested this afternoon in dealing with the personal grievances of Mr. Molock, I am interested in the underlying principles involved in the operation of this department.

Mr. Molock's comment was this:

The easiest way to make extra money on a contract is to substitute unsatisfactory material for specified material. This business is too lucrative to let a $3,600-a-year inspector get in the way.

Here obviously is one easy way in which highway contractors can reap the extra profits which enable them to make the expected contribution to Tory election funds.

The other way is to receive payment for extras arising from inadequate pre-engineering. Exactly how these extras are handled when you come to cope with inadequate pre-engineering, and on whose decision they are paid, I am not certain. All of these are intriguing questions. I would just say, in passing, that there is a case before the courts of the province of Ontario at the present time, and perhaps, in the fullness of time, there may be some light shed on this particular business of how extras are handled and who makes the decision on them.

But, in a Maclean's Magazine article some years ago, dealing with party funds, Blair Fraser made the flat assertion which I have quoted many times in this House:

—that the heart and soul and spinal column of old party funds at the provincial level come from those who get contracts from the government.

And there is no doubt that, from their profits, highway contractors are expected to, and do, make contributions to Tory election funds.

In fact, I know of one contractor who was told that he was expected to kick back two per cent of the contract figure. He was, frankly, informed as to what party official he should direct the monies. I cannot prove it, for the reason that if I did the future livelihood of this contractor would be seriously jeopardized. But that does not alter the fact that the practice continues.

It raises a number of basic issues and basic questions relating to policy. How good is the pre-engineering on contracts? This is one of the issues which grew out of the highway scandal in 1955—the desperate need for adequate pre-engineering so that you would not be moving in almost blind and having to revise your tendering and your contracts all during the course of their fulfilment.

When extras are required because of inadequate pre-engineering, what are the procedures for dealing with them? And when the department permits a contractor to use materials inferior to those called for in the contract specifications, how often does the government withhold those savings so that they might be available for the higher maintenance costs which will inevitably arise in later years? In fact, did that happen in the specific case which was raised because of public charges of these two men out in the Owen Sound area? Some time later, I hope the hon. Minister will comment on it.

The second case, Mr. Chairman, which I want to discuss is that of a claim against The Department of Highways by a Port Arthur contractor, Anton Omichinski Limited, with reference to contract 60-246. I am sure that the hon. Minister is familiar with this, perhaps painfully so. The matter has been before the department's special claims committee for some time, with Peter White of Toronto acting on behalf of the contractor.

The hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Ward-rope), the local member involved, has recently told the contractor that he can do nothing for him—at least so I have been informed — so I would conclude that the department is standing firm.

I propose, Mr. Chairman, to give hon. members some details on this, because I repeat, this is in the context of my basic theme this afternoon—it is impossible for us in the Opposition to judge whether or not we are getting value for the money being expended in The Department of Highways. I raised some questions in the instance of the case up in Owen Sound. I am now going to raise some questions in some detail with regard to this contract, because if this contract is in any way an indication of how The Department of Highways operates, then there is no doubt in the world as to what the answer to the question is as to whether we are getting full value. We are not.

Let me set the stage for this, to begin with Mr. Chairman, by quoting from—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I hope you are sure of your facts.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I think I am sure of my facts.

I want to quote to begin with from a précis of the claim that has been made to the department. In fact it was submitted, I understand, some weeks ago to the local member, the hon. Minister of Mines. This is entitled, "Brief Facts Relevant to DHO Contract 60-246, Omichinski Limited and The Ontario Department of Highways."

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): You have got that now, have you?

Mr. MacDonald: It reads as follows:

The contract advertised for tender in November 1960, for 125,000 tons of crushed rock at a DHO quarry, Hearst, Ontario. The contractor was awarded contract 60-246 in December, 1960. The contract commenced late in December, 1960.

In February, 1961, the contractor complained verbally to the district engineer, Mr. Jones, and by phone to Mr. Tackaberry of The Department of Highways, in Toronto, of the enormous amount of overburden and deep crevices encountered at the quarry, which delayed his crushing programme.

In April, 1961, Mr. T. Muir, contract control engineer in Toronto, informed the contractor's bonding company of the contractor's lack of progress in fulfilling his crushing contract. Early in May, 1961, the contractor went to Toronto to see Mr. Muir, and accompanied by Mr. Mitchinson of the bonding company, explained to Mr. Muir why he was making such slow progress in crushing. Mr. Muir apologized for calling in the bonding company and told the contractor that the difficulties he encountered were not his [the contractor's] worries, but the department's. Mr. Muir specifically opened the contract to page 213 relating to claims, and told the contractor that if the conditions at the quarry proved to be different from that of normal quarry conditions, to put in a claim against the department. This was substantiated by letter from Mr. Muir's office.

As the work at the quarry became progressively worse, due to the scarcity of rock, and as the financial strain on the contractor became unbearable, the contractor and his accountant on May 31, 1961, went to Toronto to see if the DHO would assist the contractor in his financial difficulties. Mr. Muir informed the contractor that before the department could assist him, officials from the department would have to investigate conditions at the quarry. Subsequently, Mr. Panter and Mr. Tackaberry made their respective investigations.

As the contractor was leaving Mr. Muir's office, Mr. Muir thanked the contractor for putting up with such abnormal quarry conditions.

After Mr. Panter and Mr. Tackaberry made their investigations, Mr. Omichinski and the accountant again went to Toronto to see the officials of the DHO. They were told by Mr. Muir and Mr. Panter to submit a claim against the department. An interim claim up to May 31, 1961, was duly filed with the department in July, 1961.

Later in July, Mr. Panter advised that this interim claim had to be submitted to the special claims committee. The contractor complied with this request. A special claims committee was held in August, 1961, before Mr. Mitchell, with the resulting offer of some $16,000 to the contractor. The contractor completed contract 60-246 on October 1, 1961.

Early in December, 1961, the contractor appointed Mr. Peter White of Toronto as his solicitor and to act on his behalf in connection with contract 60-246. Mr. White rejected the award of the special claims committee on December 28, 1961. A claim covering the complete contract was submitted by Mr. White in June, 1962, to the DHO, and to Mr. C. L. Dubin, QC.

Two auditors from The Department of Highways audit department conducted their audit of the contractor's records in November, 1962, and established that the contractor had lost $173,000 in completing contract 60-246.

A meeting was held in the office of the Minister of Highways in April, 1963, and a review of the contract was made. The contractor was told by the Minister that a further look would be made by his officials and that he would be notified in due course of their decision. To date the contractor has received no notification of any decision in this matter.

The contractor wishes another meeting with the officials of The Department of Highways so that a final settlement can be reached, or failing that, another special claims committee meeting, as he is entitled to, can be held, according to the terms of the contract. If these two requests are rejected, permission to sue the government will then be requested.

The department has admitted verbally during the claims meeting of August 29, 1961, and during a meeting held in the latter part of April, 1963, between Mr. MacNaughton, Mr. Omichinski, Mr. White, Mr. Dubin and other officials from DHO, and by letter, that the following directions were given to Mr. Omichinski by the departmental engineers:

1. Drill, blast and crush every large rock in the pit as no rock could be wasted. The fulfillment of this direction alone cost the contractor $56,000 in round figures, in labour, equipment and loss in production.

2. Discontinue the drilling of the area beyond the quartz showing; refusal to allow the blasting of the holes already drilled in the quartz area, thereby forcing the contractor into a second lift operation. The result of these instructions to the contractor in down time and loss in production amounted to $88,000 in round figures.

We are listing only two of the numerous instructions or directions that were given to Mr. Omichinski. However, the subsequent costs to the contractor in fulfilling these two instructions amounted to $145,000—in round figures.

That is a précis of the statement of claim, so to speak, against the government.

Involved in this case, Mr. Chairman, are a number of basic policy issues; if not policy, at least procedures in the operations of the department that relate directly to the expenditure of public monies and the question: are we getting full value? What I want to do at not too great length, I trust, but at some length, is to go back into this whole statement that has been presented by Mr. White on behalf of Anton Omichinski Limited to this government, and just indicate to hon. members of this House at least what went on in the instance of one contract. Then, in light of whatever the hon. Minister has to say about it, we will have to come to the conclusion as to how widespread is this kind of slipshod unprofessional kind of approach.

The first point I want to make—and I am quoting from this brief—is paragraph 1, which says “the call for tender, including all tender documents and the contract itself, calls for a production from the DHO quarry [giving the location] and there was no quarry at this location.” The explanation for that, without going into lengthy reading from the brief, Mr. Chairman, is simply this—that apparently the department had specified a certain area that it thought was adequate or suitable for a quarry—and I shall draw attention to it in a moment—they had drilled one hole only and blasted it to test the rock. But when the contractor came into the picture, he had a piece of territory which was The Department of Highways property, which was the quarry designated in the tenders, and yet in fact there was no quarry there at all. One question I want, at this early stage, to put to the hon. Minister is: Was this property owned by The Department of Highways? If so, how long have they owned it, and from whom had the purchase originally been made?

On page 2 of the brief you have these comments:

On this branch of the claim there are the following major differences between “the quarry” The Department of Highways of Ontario said to have been located as stipulated in the call for tender and contract, and a quarry, as that term has been defined, namely, (1) the quantity of rock called for by the contract just was not available at the location; (2) there was a vast depth of overburden; (3) there were numerous crevices, seams and other apertures in the face of the rock which didn’t permit cleaning by machines nor by any other method except by pick and shovel; and (4) this latter condition extended down to the floor of the lift, and crevices narrowed to a point where even pick and shovel could not clean it.

The quantity of rock originally called for was 125,000 tons. Ultimately the department contented itself with approximately 107,000 tons. And this quantity included a number of boulders, drilled and blasted, which would not normally form part of a quarry operation because of the cost involved. These were being bulldozed to one side when the department—Mr. Billings and Mr. Zebрук—ordered all boulders to be drilled and shattered; if this was not done the contractor would run out of rock.

And there is an affidavit in this statement of claim to document this. A little later:

The contractor claims the cost of clearing, stripping and grubbing additional acres, over what would have been required to produce the rock from a quarry. The claim in this respect is increasing because of having been required by the department to relocate in an area on which blasted and grubbed material had been piled, upon and under the direction of the department—Messrs. Jones and Billings—thereby increasing the original overburden substantially and the expense of that additional work so ordered.

Turning now to page five, we come to another aspect of the situation as documented by as responsible a solicitor as Mr. Peter White:

The call for tenders was publicly advertised on October 28, 1960, with a closing date and tender opening of November 30, 1960. The contractor visited the DHO quarry in November, 1960, at which time the ground was completely covered by snow. Neither the tender documents, nor the specifications, nor the contract documents, specified or stipulated that any portion of the area designated as a quarry could not be used or that material therefrom could not be accepted.

The department, through the said documents and their engineer—Birch—inferred on the one hand and stated on the other in the month of November, 1960, that the department had tested the rock from the quarry with the result that it was acceptable to the department laboratories at Downsview. It was stated to the contractor that one test hole, of 5 feet in depth, had been blasted and found satisfactory. This was in practice, and obviously assumed by the department to extend across the area of the whole quarry.

It is of interest that there had been no clearing or grubbing prior to the work of the contractor, only one small test shot in an outcrop as above, and that the department engineers—Billings and Birch—prior to tender and subsequent to tender, stated that there was practically no overburden—and, when the contractor commenced operation, indicated the area for excavation at the point where the one test hole had been drilled and shot.

It is submitted that, after the contract was let and after the contractor had started his work as directed, the department in February of 1961 located their road along the south of the work and located their stockpiles in the exact location where they had subsequently directed the contractor to strip 'as that is where the rock is'.

Again, later in the statement of claim we get to some comments on the question of overburden:

It is further pointed out that, during the continuing complaint of the contractor to Mr. Jones as to the depth of the overburden, Mr. Jones claimed that tests had, in fact, been taken, which was in contradiction to an earlier statement by Mr. Birch that the soils branch had taken no tests. It is submitted that the contractor, bearing in mind the condition of the ground at the time of the call for tender, was entitled to rely upon the statements of the department's own engineers, notwithstanding a provision in the contract which purports to guard against such a statement.

Then another part of this claim gets into the question of the poor rock which was available from this so-called quarry of The Department of Highways:

Work continued during the month of February, upon the direction and at the order of the department, and as work progressed the following difficulties emerged. The rock was of a seamy, schisty, blocky type with sheers that bent steel. The estimate the contractor had received, as to the quantity of anticipated drill footage in this type of country, was about 500 lineal feet per machine per ten-hour day. The biggest day per machine was 230 feet on a 12-hour day, which is approximately one-third of the production estimated. There was a great loss of drill steel, far in excess of the estimated quantity. This was contributed to by later being ordered to go back into the location from the four previous blasts, and further costs were incurred by having to timber the drilling and other machinery so as to provide a level platform.

Crushing commenced on the second day of March, 1961, much later than the volume of work done to that point had hitherto indicated. There was not sufficient rock from the quarry to occupy the crushing equipment for a full one shift, steadily throughout the month of March, let alone a two-shift operation of that crushing equipment on which the bid had been promised. There was continuing complaint to the department through this period, following a telephone conversation and complaint by the contractor to Mr. Tackaberry on February 21.

While working in a generally easterly direction, toward the area where the quartz subsequently developed, and having stripped and drilled a good few patterns in the latter area, the department, through the district engineer, Mr. Jones, advised that they were concerned about the production of the aggregate. Mr. Jones wrote on March 6, and again on March 17, emphasizing in the latter instance his idea that there was need for additional crushing equipment, notwithstanding the experience of the contractor on the ground, as above related, which demonstrated it was not the lack of crushing equipment but a lack of rock which occasioned the problem.

In April, The Department of Highways—Jones and Billings—ordered the blocks to be drilled and blasted, notwithstanding that this was not the normal practice and would involve the contractor in excessive costs. The contractor was not only ordered to drill and blast these boulders, but told to do so or the engineer would shut the job down.

Drilling and shooting of these boulders started about April 11 and continued daily up until July 21. This occasioned the contractor additional and unnecessary expense in drilling and blasting, additional equipment required for this purpose, the shutting down of equipment, and the moving in and out of locations when these boulders or blocks were shot. This further impinged in a direct way on the crushing equipment, which could not be used to its full advantage because of the time lost.

During the latter part of April the department's Mr. Muir wrote the contractor's bonding company in connection with this contract.

We now get into another interesting phase of this rather sorry tale:

No copy of this letter was sent to the contractor; or, if so, it was not received by him. In the result, the meeting was arranged in Mr. Muir's office on Monday, May 1, 1961. The problems of the inadequate supply of rock, the total unsuitability of the area as a quarry, the bouldery blocky nature of the formation containing seams and crevices, clay filled, and the abnormal amount of overburden were all explained. Mr. Muir advised the contractor that if the abnormal pit conditions existed to the extent indicated, the contractor should submit a claim. This was substantiated by a letter of May 2 written to the contractor. Notification of intent to claim was forwarded May 9.

At no time throughout the length of the contract was the contractor in a position of having a stockpile of shattered rock available to keep the crushing plant working to one shift, let alone two shifts capacity. The contractor continued in an easterly direction during the month of May until having drilled preparatory to shooting an area not far from the stockpile, the contractor was ordered by Billings not to load the holes. When asked why, he stated the rock would not be acceptable. The contractor had to shut his crushing operation down at that point.

In the latter part of May, and in the next phase, Mr. Muir agreed that the quarry conditions were poor and specifically asked if there was another quarry in the vicinity.

In other words, here is a department official at this stage acknowledging that conditions were poor and asking if there was another in the vicinity.

It was stated at the commencement of the meeting that the quarry problems were not those of the contractor, but those of the department, and it was suggested that one or two engineers from Toronto should attend the site.

Mr. Chairman, if this goes on wearisomely, I just ask the hon. members to put themselves in the position of the contractor who had to deal with conditions like these in these repeated pleas to the department, and repeated visits from departmental officials.

On page 11 there is another portion of this claim that I would like to read into the record:

In the latter part of June the contractor was contacted by the bonding company advising him that they had been asked to meet with the department. There was no request to the contractor to be present, and as a result there was a meeting at the department on July 5 between the contractor and his office manager, and Messrs. Muir, Panter and Jenkins from the department. Mr. Muir again suggested the contractor put in a claim. The matter of drilling and shattering boulders was discussed and it was agreed that this was a foolish and expensive procedure on the part of the department and this practice was discontinued.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that just a moment ago I read from this claim to the effect that some weeks, indeed, a couple of months or so before, the contractor had been ordered to drill and blast these boulders or else the department would shut down the operation. Now they realize it is foolish.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I could point out to the hon. member that this is only one side of the story.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, fine, this is a rather impressive side of the story and if there is another one, perhaps we shall have an opportunity to hear it.

A further factor which materially and adversely affected the contractor was that the second lift deepened the initial cut to the extent that it took on the appearance of a narrow and deep canal. There was no normal access to the face of the work. Machines and trucks had to move in and out, one at a time, over the work which provided a very uneven floor, thereby further slowing down production. One truck would proceed to the area where it would be loaded; it would then have to back out over the length of the cut created by the second lift. Only then could a second truck approach the loading area, as there was no room to pass or turn. In addition, machines had to be moved in and out of the location as shooting occurred. This is not part of a normal quarry operation and resulted, in this location, in further shutting down of work.

This condition was so bad that the road which was used by the contractor to haul material to its crushing plant was denied the contractor. On the orders of the department an alternative route closer to the lake had to be made into a road and the department accepted the cost of this alternative road.

In a normal quarry operation, it is submitted, as one truck is loaded and pulls away, the next truck is in a position to be loaded by the time the shovel has taken its next swing, with no loss of time or loading. This presupposes sufficient hauling equipment and the contractor had ample trucks and other equipment on the job. The loss of production was plainly, it is submitted, not because of or controlled by any lack of equipment. The crushing plant could not be located near the face where the work was being done because of three factors, namely, a lack of room, a lack of rock, and danger from blasting. In the result, the cumulative effect of the above-described conditions meant that there were two-thirds of lost time for one-third of productive time.

Drawing to a close in this part of my remarks, for the benefit of the hon. Minister from St. Andrew (Mr. Crossman), I now come to page 14 in which I quote:

A meeting on the claim was held on August 29, 1961. The contractor attended this meeting, accompanied by Mr. Fikis and the Canadian Industries Limited representative, Mr. Patrick. Representing The Department of Highways were Messrs. Mitchell, Panter, Flintoff, Jones, Gillespie, Billings and Tackaberry. Mr. Panter had this to say—

This, to my mind, is astounding; this is a departmental official—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, why does not the hon. member say, "This is what Mr. Panter is alleged to have said"?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, all I know is that this document has been—just a minute, we will get to what it is in the document.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, all right.

Mr. MacDonald: From the reputation that he has achieved up until now, I would think that if Peter White prepares a statement of claim he is going to document it. The original presented to the government is replete with affidavits and references—as I will come to in a moment—to the fact that there were tape recordings of certain portions of these discussions, and presumably they are available in the department and so on.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): What is that, a statement of claim again?

An hon. member: That is it, yes.

Mr. MacDonald: To continue:

Mr. Panter had this to say: (a) The quarry was too small; (b) the "quarry" resembled a rock cut on the highway; (c) there was no room to work in the cut; (d) there was not sufficient room for a truck to turn; (e) he produced pictures that he had taken of the "quarry area"; and (f) he produced pictures of McNamara quarry to show a proper quarry.

Mr. Mitchell picked up the picture of the "quarry", and showing it to the contractor, said, "It looks as though you have lots of room to work there." Before a reply could be made, Mr. Panter said, "No, there definitely was not room to work." Mr. Mitchell turned to the highways personnel. "This is a question for engineers, what have you to say?" Mr. Billings' answer was, "It was not a quarry." Mr. Tackaberry was not asked a question during this meeting and neither did he volunteer any information. There was a tape recording of this; this would be available to the department, so it clearly must be indicated whether this was a misrepresentation.

Following the meeting with the claims committee a letter from Mr. Mitchell dated September 21, 1961, advised that the committee had awarded $16,156.73 in settlement of the claim submitted. This was not accepted.

There is one final point that had naught to do with the actual operations of the quarry, Mr. Chairman, but rather with procedures that the department uses of its relationship with the contractor. I want to read this, because it raises some very interesting questions as to whether or not, once again, this is normal. Apparently this obtained from the very outset of the operation.

Had the contractor been permitted without interference by the department to develop the area in its own way and without limitations, the attitude of Mr. Flintoff and the department and the claims committee would be understood. If those mistakes were made by the contractor without interference or alterations in methods in areas worked, in quantity and type of materials and equipment force used had been effected by the contractor, this would be one thing. What actually occurred, however, was quite a different thing—a thing far different from what had been contemplated by the contractor or the contract—such changes, alterations in methods, extensions and increases, rendering useless as they did work already done and materials already furnished by the contractor, were the sole responsibility of the department's engineers who assumed and maintained control and direction of every move of the contractor throughout the entire period of work.

In general, the contractor's position with respect to running his own operation was that he had no control at any time throughout the length of the contract as to the disposition of his drilling or other equipment in order to get maximum efficiency, under the conditions that were imposed upon him by The Department of Highways and the engineers' direction. The Department of Highways, through the actions of its staff and its agents, ignored the right of the contractor to plan his own work and use his own methods for the production of the aggregate in location and with access and methods of his own selection. The Department of Highways in its controlling and directing, and placing of the equipment, and its direction of the method of operation throughout the length of the contract, effectively completed usurpation of the contractor's right to decide where, when and how the various phases of the work were to be done within the scope of the specifications.

These were not minor incidents but the exercise of complete control in all major respects. The methods used in order to obtain the product required under this work should have been entirely the responsibility of the contractor. The disposition of equipment and the method to obtain the required aggregate should not have come under the direction of the engineers, but by their direction to the contractor they controlled the method of operation and, although outside the authority or what was contemplated, the threat of closing down of the work and exercising the penal provisions were both used.

The contractor in effect, in this contract, was nothing but the servant of The Department of Highways, doing its bidding from time to time in detail and without regard to whether it was normal, reasonable or indicated by the circumstance.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that covers most of the relevant portions from the claim that I think are necessary to underline the three points that I want to make to the hon. Minister in trying to sum this up.

To sum it up, Mr. Chairman, the department specified the DHO quarry in tenders; in fact there was no quarry. The department specified this quarry in the belief that the area had been engineered; in fact only one hole had been drilled, blasted and the rock tested in the Downsview lab.

In relation to the overburden, one departmental official claims soil tests had been taken, another contended that no test had been taken. It was the department which instructed the contractor where to quarry his rock; and then when not enough was available, it was the same department which ordered the contractor to move operations to precisely the site where the overburden had been piled. The department ordered the contractor to drill and shatter all boulders or have his operations shut down. The same department months later reversed its order in view of the cost involved.

The department ordered extra crushing equipment installed, yet the conditions under which the operation was carried on never permitted its full use.

And so on, and on and on the story goes.

Let us face it, Mr. Chairman, obviously as one reads this—and I would like to hear any other side of the story, if there is one—the department “boobed” on this contract and the question is: how indicative of general departmental practices was the experience in this one case on which we happen to have the full details?

With that in mind I would like to put these questions to the hon. Minister. What explanation can the Minister give for tenders designating a quarry where pre-engineering was restricted to a single boring? What assurances can the hon. Minister give the House that this case on which we happen to have full details is not indicative of the quality of pre-engineering generally practiced by the department?

Second, what explanation can the hon. Minister give for repeated instructions by his departmental officials in the fulfillment of this contract—instructions which had to be varied or reversed repeatedly throughout the time of the contract?

Third, is it the normal practice of the department not merely to supervise contracts, which would be understandable, but virtually to take over the managerial responsibilities so that the company involved was not in any real sense an independent contractor, but rather an employee or servant of the department working under day-to-day directions?

Finally, in view of the basic responsibility of the department for the near comedy of errors in mismanagement, on what grounds does the department refuse to compensate Mr. Anton Omichinski for losses that have been, or can be, audited from the company's books?

I might add that I am aware of a comparable situation—if this gives the hon. Minister any comfort—involving a contractor on a project for the federal government, building a road through rocky areas into a radar station, in which the pre-engineering had been mismanaged in much the same way. The federal government submitted the whole matter to a special tribunal which verified the losses involved and the responsibility for them, and compensated the contractor at what, interestingly enough, was almost precisely the figure he had submitted. In view of The Ontario Department of Highways' major responsibility in this instance, why is the same procedure not adopted on clearly auditable expenses and expenditures in the books?

These are just a few of the many questions I would like to put to the Minister in trying to get a clear picture of how this department operates and, therefore, to what extent we are getting full value for the money we are spending.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed to discuss the detail of the votes, I must make certain comments on the observations of the hon. member for Niagara Falls. With reference to the matter of tolls on bridges, I recall, as he does, that we discussed this at some considerable length a year ago. I propose to give him some information on that at the moment.

I recall, Mr. Chairman, pointing out a year ago that these so-called high rates on trucks did not seem to inhibit the traffic over the Burlington bridge to any considerable extent, in that the percentage of usage of the bridge by all classes of vehicles had showed a substantial increase over the preceding year. I think, when I give some information here, I will be able to indicate to you that that increase by classes 1, 2 and 3, which involve automobiles and the various sizes and descriptions of trucks, continues to show a very substantial increase.

I also was able to point out, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member a year ago, that there is an alternative free route which is available to trucks which do not choose to pay the toll to use the bridge facility. I will have some facts and figures here in a moment to substantiate these.

It is interesting, I think, when we hear these figures once again, to point out that in 1962, which was the year under review when we discussed it in the House a year ago, the amount of class 1 vehicles using this facility was 7,183,682; whereas, for the comparable period for the year now concluding, the usage figure is 8,008,028, a rather substantial increase on the order of 11.48 per cent.

Class 2 — these are passenger cars with trailers, and trucks with two axles and capacity of one ton or more—for the year hence, the figure that is revealed to us is 191,508; and for the year presently being reviewed it is 223,013, an increase of 16.45 per cent.

Class 3—trucks with three axles or more and public vehicles—the comparable figures here are 7,505,848 versus, this year, 8,385,568, for a percentage increase of 18.27.

The point I am attempting to make, Mr. Chairman, is simply that our tolls do not seem to be inhibiting the use of this facility to any appreciable extent. Not only do the figures related to the volume of vehicles alone show these substantial increases, but the toll revenues earned in each of the classes show a similarly sharp increase. Whether this is the answer the hon. member is pursuing or not, I do not know, but I repeat the use of this facility does not seem to be seriously inhibited by tolls at the moment.

The figures, I hope you will agree, are rather substantial. Eight million vehicles in class 1, 223,000 in class 2, 154,000 in class 3 — a total of 8,385,568 versus a total of 7,505,848 vehicles a year ago does not look as though traffic is falling off too seriously.

Mr. Bukator: Well, I never questioned whether the traffic would increase or not. That was not the point I was trying to make, Mr. Chairman.

The point I wanted to make was that I think the trucks are paying sufficiently large amounts of money for their licence, and now there is the added burden of gas tax and the second bridge. I felt tolls should be lifted from that because they are paying through other channels. I am interested to notice that the figures have increased and that there are more people using the bridges because this will help pay the deficit you have on your toll concessions anyhow. I believe you have deficits there even though you are taking in more money. My concern was that the truckers have been paying sufficiently large enough sums now without the added burden of a second bridge, too. That is the point I tried to make.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Associated with that side of his question, I would say, Mr. Chairman, is the rather interesting fact that the revenue accruing from these tolls, I think it can be safely said, is not altogether paying for the operation and the carrying charges and the capital debt associated with the bridges. But to get back to the matter of revenue accruing from gasoline tax, it can still be stated that there is what might be called a short fall of revenue versus expenditure. In other words we are still spending more on roads and bridges and all transportation facilities than accrues to the government in revenue from the use of these facilities, so that I think until we reach that happy situation where the revenue side exceeds the expenditure side, it is a little difficult to ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) to let us reduce some of these forms of revenue.

I might discuss briefly the observation he makes respecting roads in those areas of the north adjoining Quebec. I do not think he is quite accurate there. We have recently called another contract which will extend the road easterly from Cochrane during this upcoming construction season for a distance of some 12 miles. It will connect with the Abitibi timber limit roads and provide satisfactory road service connection through that area to the Quebec border. We have the other highway, of course, which goes easterly from Matheson, I believe, and connects with the Quebec border and Highway 66 from Kirkland Lake.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): There are five.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There are five actual highways leading easterly in that area connecting with the Quebec border.

Mr. Bukator: From that point south.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, no. East. Cochrane, for instance.

Mr. Bukator: The hon. Minister says there are five connections from the boundary but the five roads are from 101 south. I would like an explanation. That is why I asked the question.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Some of them are north from 101. The hon. member pointed to the desirability of opening up the north, with which I completely concur. I think if I could have a print of that map here now, this would be interesting to all hon. members.

This glossy print of a road map shows the roads in northern Ontario in 1944. The mileage shown of King's highways in 1944, 20 years ago, was 1,896; the mileage of secondary roads was 1,540, for a total of 3,436 miles. Today as we look at this map, the mileage of King's highways in the same area has increased to 2,360 miles; secondary highway mileage has increased to 2,861 miles. We have highways committed and under construction of 530 miles, so we see that in this period the total mileage has increased from 3,436 miles to 5,750 miles.

Mr. Singer: How much has the motor vehicle registration increased in that period?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I think probably if you will refer to my general remarks as commented upon by the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. MacDonald) you will find that if we built roads and allocated funds on the basis of revenue earned they would not have nearly the mileage they do.

Mr. Singer: No, but if you are comparing 1944 to 1964—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Of course. Of course, you are right.

Mr. Bryden: In other words, the hon. Minister has not proved anything.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We have proved that there is a substantial increase in the road mileage in the north—very graphically we have proved it.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Remember that you rebuilt every foot of the roads you had 20 years ago.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is correct. I might observe to the hon. member where he makes mention of wages on contracts, that we implemented into our general conditions and contracts a year ago, a minimum wage of $1.30 per hour. This was threshed out rather extensively last year in the House. This is unskilled labour but it is at least the basis for a minimum wage, which was referred to a year ago. It probably did not please everybody then and it will not now but it is the answer to the question that the hon. member raised. All our contracts have this condition written in them.

Mr. Bukator: If I might interject, and the hon. Minister is very good-natured, I only wanted to make that point because the hon. Minister of Labour took in such a small portion from Oshawa to Hamilton. The hon. Minister of Highways has done it overall and I think general legislation should be across the board, $1.25 for construction workers. I felt at this point I could get it in because there is no more Budget debate nor Throne Speech debate.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I should like to comment generally on suburban road commissions. I might say that I share the hon. member's opinion to some extent but I think I would go back and agree with him, with the remarks he made at the outset, that is that suburban road commissions were set up to relieve the burden of expense on counties for maintenance of what might appropriately be called market roads, sir. These market roads were carrying an extensive volume of traffic which did not originate in the jurisdiction from which they had to raise revenues.

So, simply then, it was felt sensible, and I think it has employed a very useful service, in that it enabled these counties to obtain revenue from jurisdictions which were being serviced in that manner. The formula, of course, is that a one-half mill maximum can be levied by a suburban road commission; 50 per cent of these costs is paid by the department, and the remaining half is split in two. In other words, an eighth of a mill accrues to the one jurisdiction, an eighth to the other and the remaining portion is paid by The Department of Highways.

I am prepared to agree with the hon. member that this form of subsidization is becoming somewhat obsolete. It is under careful scrutiny and study at the moment. It has been proposed by some that we might effect a degree of parity, if you will, if we made it applicable to the equalized assessment. This also proposes many problems. I think this was suggested by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. Newman) a year ago. We have been pursuing our investigations ever since, but we find that those jurisdictions, where there are suburban road commissions, are almost split down the middle. Quite a broad number of them are assessing substantially in excess of the equalized assessment, and a similar number are assessing at something equally as much less than the equalized assessment.

So you can readily see that if we make this applicable to the equalized assessment, some municipalities would benefit rather extensively and others would lose out.

Mr. Singer: Yes, but your colleagues produce an equalization table every year.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is what we are using.

Mr. Singer: He says it works.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, does the hon. Minister not think, for the sake of fairness to all municipalities, that it should be on an equalized assessment basis? I mean, in spite of the fact one municipality may be assessed more than the other; but for the sake of fairness alone, it should be on an equalized assessment. It is not fair to ask one municipality to pay, one year, twice what it did the previous years, solely because in their wisdom they decided to reassess their properties.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I was leading up to the point, Mr. Chairman, of saying to the hon. member that these are some of the things which are being thoroughly investigated, because we realize this thing is out of joint. We realize it needs updating. I am just suggesting to you some of the problems that have to be considered in the process.

Mr. Chairman: Order! It is now six of the clock. I will now leave the chair, and we will resume at eight of the clock.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 16, 1964

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

On vote 801:

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned for dinner I was discussing a few of the points raised by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator), and I think I have got down to almost the last of them.

With respect to the reference of the hon. member to the section of Highway 401 between Temple and Tilbury, I would repeat what was said this afternoon: That is, that the north lanes are completely paved; the south lanes are graded, and some of the granular material is on the grades ready for paving.

I would say to the hon. member, and to the House, that all contracts for the completion of the south lanes of that section of Highway 401 will be awarded within a matter of a few weeks. If we get a few breaks with the weather, and the other associated breaks needed, it is quite possible that the section can be completed in 1964. If we run into some adverse weather, which characterized our operations a couple of years ago, a situation that is well known to the hon. member for Kent East (Mr. Spence), then certain delays may well be involved. All contracts will have been awarded for the completion of those south lanes in the course of the next few weeks.

I believe that essentially deals with most of the points raised by the hon. member for Niagara Falls and we now come to the observations of the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald).

I would comment on some of his observations as follows: The hon. member made reference to the substitution of materials, specifically stating that, with the approval of the department, some substandard material was used in the construction of a certain bridge, pointing out that approval was given because it was stated by the Minister and officials of the department that the use of the subgrade material would cost an estimated $10,000 whereas the use of better quality, granular material would have cost in the order of $60,000 to $70,000. I say this was done with the full approval of the officials of the department for good and sufficient reasons. Savings associated with this do not accrue to the benefit of anybody other than the Treasurer of the province. The suggestion that substitution of materials on contracts provides a method of some form of reward to a contractor is, of course, completely incorrect.

Substitution of materials on contracts of any description can only be done with the approval of the department, and the contractor gets paid only for what he puts into the contract. In this instance he would get paid an appropriate unit price for the substitute material, no more and no less, so I fail to see how the point raised by the hon. member has any validity or sense in fact whatsoever. No benefit can accrue to the contractor; the only benefit that accrued was the saving to the department in line with the comments which have already been made, and which I have attempted to amplify here tonight.

As a matter of fact, on the matter of patronage, which appears to be a pre-occupation or obsession with the hon. member, I can state without any equivocation whatsoever, Mr. Chairman, that no contractor today will fail to be awarded a contract for any reason unless he has failed, himself, to be the low bidder. There is no other basis of awarding a contract to a contractor properly qualified, and I have already pointed out we are extending our basis of pre-qualification to include almost all types of contracts. I simply say to the hon. member that there is no method, patronage or otherwise, which can result in a contractor failing to get a contract, if he is the low bidder and meets the requirements the department impose.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): May I ask the hon. Minister a question?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, you may.

Mr. MacDonald: The cat-and-mouse game goes on—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is not a cat-and-mouse game—

Mr. MacDonald: Let me come back further. How would the hon. Minister get into a situation in which inferior material would be used? For example, if specifications are stated and tenders called for—presumably it would be done on the basis of a knowledge of the materials available in the area. Are inferior materials used only when it is suddenly discovered, for some reason or other, that the material thought to be available in the area is not now available?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I would not say that. In this particular circumstance, I am sure there was some higher grade material specified, but in the cut that was required to perform the contract, material was excavated in sufficient quantity and, if of marginal quality sufficiently good in the opinion of the department, to warrant the use of it, notwithstanding that there might be some subsequent maintenance costs. But the estimates of the department associated with extra maintenance costs which might have followed and which probably did follow, were substantially less than the use of the specified material. So an election was made at the time, an agreement was made with the contractor, and the contractor performed his obligations with the strict approval of the department, otherwise he could not have done it.

We felt it was a good, economical move, and I might say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to all hon. members of the House, that up to this point it has been substantially proved that it was a measure of good economy. There has been some added maintenance, but about $10,000 versus $70,000. We think this was good economy. We think this is in the interests of the public and the taxpayers of the province, whether the hon. member does or not.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister could answer a question. Who did the cutting and the excavating that determined this sub-standard material could be used? Did the contractor who had the original low tender or did the—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, no, the contractor who had the contract, in the course of the excavation work required for the subsequent building of the grades and approaches and so on that were involved, turned up this material.

Mr. Singer: I wonder if it occurred to the hon. Minister or to his officials, that having turned up the material and having sort of changed the whole basis, that perhaps the whole thing could have been retendered? Was the hon. Minister at that point not giving a preference to the low tenderer or to the man who had the original contract awarded to him?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, that could not enter into it because these are situations that you cannot have any knowledge of until the work is proceeded with. The situation developed in the course of the work. No material advantage could have accrued to anybody else there; I am sure the department had what it felt was an advantageous contract based on the low bid at the time, but this alternative came up and these negotiations can go on during the course of the contract under many different circumstances. It is simply as I have stated it; there is nothing sinister about what was done, I must assure the House on that because it is quite true.

Mr. Singer: I am not suggesting for a minute, Mr. Chairman, there is anything sinister about it—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I know that the hon. member is not, but—

Mr. Singer: I am just suggesting that once it has been discovered that different grade material could have been used, the whole basis of the contract is changed, and other tenderers, for example, A, B and C might have been able to produce, with the material on the scene, a far different tender than they were able to produce when they first tendered.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I suppose there is a possibility if there had been any knowledge that that type of material was there before we got on with the excavation, but—

Mr. Singer: Yes, that is the very point I make.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Singer: At that point you did prefer the low tenderer.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, no, no! We just made the adjustment with the contractor who had the tender.

Mr. Singer: Yes, but you preferred it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, yes.

Mr. Singer: It gave him an advantage over the others.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No. How could it? Well, let us just say it did not, and leave it at that, because it did not.

To get on with the principal subject matter of the remarks from the hon. member for York South. During the time that has elapsed since the committee rose and upon returning to the House, I have put on paper in general my reply to what the hon. member has said. It will not be in detail because the complete file is at Downsview, but in general this would be my interpretation of the situation. If more detail is required, we can consider the matter of providing for that later. It was impossible to get it tonight.

I would simply say, in reply, that the audit which was conducted revealed that the contractor, Omichinski, referred to by the hon. member, had lost considerable money.

I might, at this point, clarify one point too, and say that this quarry was on Crown land in the area; it was not DHO property.

The claims committee, which by the way I should explain is an independent body—they are not civil servants; they are not associated with the department—

Mr. MacDonald: Who was on that committee?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I think the chairman is a man named Mitchell. There is another man named McQuaig, and the third one is Barnett.

Mr. MacDonald: Is it true that the committee is going to be abolished?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Would the hon. member like to come to that again, if he wishes? We can discuss that another time.

I have simply stated, then, that the claims committee is an independent body. As a matter of fact, I would also like to say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the hon. members of the House, that I would not know one of them if I saw them. I have never met them. I have never discussed anything with them. I have passed them on the street or in the corridors, that is quite possible, but I would not know them if I met them face to face.

So then the claims committee, after reviewing the facts and assessing the merits of the claim, recommended an award for costs which were beyond the contractor's control. The amount—which has already been referred to—was $16,000 or thereabouts; I am using round figures. The difference between the amount of the claim and the award proposed by the committee was felt to be associated with items which were entirely the responsibility of the contractor, and which manifested themselves because of inefficiencies in his operation. There was no shortage of rock. He simply did not have sufficient equipment to do the job and to keep on schedule.

At this point, I might explain our interpretation of what a quarry means. The hon. member asked, "What is a quarry?" A quarry is simply a deposit of material, of rock of one description or another, which can be made suitable for road-building purposes. It is plainly and simply that. There are several variations of it, but that is a quarry.

The direction of the department, which you refer to as management or intrusion, was related entirely to efforts to help the contractor keep sufficient material available for the paving contract for which it was urgently required. It was required for base material on the Atikokan-Fort Frances road. He greatly underbid the contract, as evidenced by other bids, and the next lowest bid was substantially higher than the unit price employed by Omichinski. It was substantially higher in total; and the unit prices employed by the second lowest bidder for the quarrying of this type of material was substantially higher, as were bids from contractors located in, and with experience in, the area from which the material was to be obtained.

Sufficient engineering and boring was undertaken to disclose the nature of the material. In fact it was disclosed to other bidders who tendered accordingly. I repeat, that one or more of the bidders were locally based firms who had a complete knowledge of the material in the quarry. They bid substantially higher, knowing of course, what they were going to encounter and they tendered accordingly. I have just been corrected. The material was used for Highway 17, not Highway 11.

Mr. MacDonald: I wondered how you got the material from Hearst to Atikokan.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Exactly, you are right. My geography left me for a moment.

After the claims committee had suggested that award, and at the request of Mr. Omichinski and his solicitor, I met them both and gave direction to the solicitor representing The Department of Highways to review the file with a fine-tooth comb, and I say with a fine-tooth comb, to determine whether beyond the engineering facts related to the claim, any legal validity could be attached to the items under review. This was done in an exhaustive manner, and again upon direction of the Minister, the benefit of every reasonable doubt was to be resolved in favour of the contractor—every reasonable doubt where anything could be associated to the advantage of this contractor in view of the unfortunate circumstances, and they were unfortunate. A higher award was then proposed than the one approved by the claims committee. It was something in excess of double the amount proposed by the claims committee, after this exhaustive survey by the solicitor for the department. This was refused by the contractor.

I would simply conclude this general statement in which I have explained—I do not have time to go into the complete detail of it as the material was not available to me, this was largely from memory—by saying, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member that it is my opinion based on advice from senior staff, based on the claims committee's original award, based on the advice and findings of the solicitor referred to on the terms of reference that I have stated to you and to the House, that every valid compensable item in the entire claim has accordingly been provided for.

This, Mr. Chairman, is all the statement I am capable of making tonight, but again, if you wish further documentation of the items that are in here, I can only ask you to be patient and we will try to produce them.

This allows me to lead up to something else. I am of the opinion that the hon. member completely contradicts himself, when you contrast this statement with some of his earlier remarks associated with a Maclean's article of a number of years ago on the matter of providing funds, out of approval for claims or approval of over-runs, or approval of this sort of thing. I have already explained that this is absolutely impossible. On the other hand, I would like him to contrast the observations he made in that sense of getting party funds from contractors, percentages off the top of contracts. Contrast that, if you will, with the attempt of the department to be fair with the contractor who has encountered a series of unfortunate circumstances associated with the claim.

I would like the hon. member to tell me this. Does he think that it is the responsibility of the Minister of this department, or the officials of this department, to use the public's money, the taxpayers' money, for payment of claims that cannot be substantiated? How, in the same breath, do you suggest that this is the way in which party funds are obtained?

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute, now—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is what you say. Leaving that aside, I would simply say to the hon. member—and we will deal with this matter of the claims committee now, it is as good a time as any—that I hope you will recall that just about a year ago now, we introduced and eventually proclaimed an Act known as The Proceedings against the Crown Act. I thought, and I am sure the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) thought, and I am sure all hon. members thought that this was a just piece of legislation.

Mr. MacDonald: They established it 15 years ago in Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that at the moment this is beside the point. We got it done and we got it done about a year ago.

Prior to that, Mr. Chairman, prior to the introduction of that legislation, the procedure related to claims was that they were first examined by the claims branch of The Department of Highways. If they were satisfactorily resolved there, as far as the departmental people and the contractor were concerned, that was an end of it. If the parties could not reach a satisfactory solution, the claims committee at that time was one more avenue of appeal. But with the introduction of this new legislation, I think it will be obvious to the hon. member and others that the general conditions of our contracts had to be changed somewhat against the possibility of claims finally going to the court where they have every right to go under this new legislation.

Our general conditions of contract, or procedures associated with general conditions, then were changed. The contract documents were rewritten. As a consequence, the function of the claims committee, as it is presently constituted, began to disappear somewhat. Its terms of reference are such that their decisions would not be as valid in court as they should be. The claims committee will continue to exist, to adjudicate claims arising from contracts entered into before the proclamation of The Proceedings against the Crown Act; and it will be some time before those contracts are completely off the books. Meanwhile, it is the intention of the department to change not only the contracts procedures but the job inspection procedures; in short, we hope to align all our procedures against this new legislation.

I would like to make to the House the statement I have made on a number of occasions to interested people—the Ontario Roadbuilders Association — that we are flexible. If, on a reasonable trial basis, there seems to be some deficiency, I am quite prepared to say to the House tonight that I, as Minister, if that still prevails, am quite prepared, along with the officials of the department and representatives of the industry, to review the position. At that time, if there is a need for any intermediate basis for settling claims, I am quite confident that something can be established which will satisfactorily take care of the situation. But I think we would like some experience before we make that move; consequently, it is the present intention of the department to move in the manner in which I have suggested with respect to claims.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, before we leave this perhaps I would be permitted to make a few comments in the light of what the hon. Minister has said.

First, let me deal with his comments on my observations on patronage, as he so delightfully refers to it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is what you called it.

Mr. MacDonald: Election kickbacks.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is what you called it.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not use the word "patronage". I said "election slush funds".

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: You have an obsession on this point.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister says I have an obsession on this point.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Of course, you have.

Mr. MacDonald: But I will tell the hon. Minister of somebody who has an infinitely greater obsession on this, and that is the Tory Party, for a year prior to an election. My obsession is an academic one to find out the facts; your obsession is picking up the $2 million-$3 million with which you fought the election—

An hon. member: And then keeping it quiet.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, and then keeping it quiet.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I repeat what I said earlier, Mr. Chairman. I hope, Mr. Chairman, you are not going to join that chorus. I said that I knew a contractor who got a contract, who was then approached and told that a two per cent kickback was expected. He was told to which official in the provincial party organization the money should be directed.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: When?

Mr. MacDonald: When? Within the last year or two. All you need do, if you have nothing to hide, is do not continue to hide it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We are not hiding anything.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, then, permit an audit of your election books and then we will know it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, this is in relation to highway contracts and if the business is not relevant I do not know where it would be relevant. I have made the statement that the Conservative Party does not get its election funds from nowhere; you do not get money off trees.

An hon. member: Where do you get yours?

Mr. MacDonald: I have told you where we get ours. Our books are open for audit, and you can look at them any time you want—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order!

Mr. MacDonald: And the—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. This is getting out of order.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I shall leave it there because this is part of the cat-and-mouse game. But until you are willing to permit an audit of your books so we will know where you get your funds, we are entitled to make such statements.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order!

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, before you proceed to rule out of order something which I submit is relevant to highway contracts, let me go on to the next point.

With regard to Anton Omichinski Limited—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I cannot hear myself speak.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

An hon. member: You should be grateful, old boy.

Mr. MacDonald: I would say, Mr. Chairman, it takes two to make an argument back here so let us not try to blame it on my hon. colleague.

Let me say this, I have made my case on the basis of Peter White's statement, and I am not in a position, obviously, to vouch for the authenticity of everything that is in this statement of claim that he made. I recognize that, as a solicitor, he is going to put the best front on his client's case. On the other hand, while I do not happen to know Peter White, my information is that he is a capable and reputable lawyer. I do not think, no matter what case you are presenting as a lawyer or otherwise, that you put up a weak case that can be battled down. Certainly throughout the copy of the statement that I have there are affidavit references, and references to tape recordings that are available in the department to authenticate what he is saying.

An hon. member: Are you trying to win his case for him then?

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps if he gets it into a court he may win it. The thing that strikes me about the hon. Minister's explanation on this is that only $16,000 was awarded for things where the responsibility was beyond the control of the contractor himself. I would like to cite briefly by way of review, five or six points:

The site for the quarry was chosen by the department. Not only that, but where he started to do the original quarrying, according to Peter White's statement, was also indicated by the department. Not only that, but when you get into the second point, the amount of overburden, you find one official of the department said no soil tests were taken and another official of the department said soil tests were taken—to discover how much overburden there was.

Be that as it may, they took the overburden from the site where they started to quarry the rock and they put it over here, and when they found that there was not enough rock in the place where they started, the next place that he was instructed to work was precisely where all the overburden had been put. So he not only had the natural overburden, so to speak, that was there to begin with, but all of the other overburden that was piled there and that had to be moved out. This is in White's documented case that he has presented to the department.

The third point is that the evidence apparently is documented that the department started out by saying he had to drill and blast all of the boulders which, according to contractors in the field, sir, is not done because it is very expensive. The department itself, some two to three months later, told him to stop trying to blast all of these boulders because it was too expensive a process.

There was a switch in roads. This was a bizarre business involving the running of an operation in which you could not have trucks in rapid succession to keep your assembly line working, so to speak. The truck had to go in and back out, or back in and come out, and everybody else had to wait until they had got over this one single narrow road.

The hon. Minister makes the suggestion that complete borings were taken—he rather skipped over that. In the statement that has been presented to the department it says categorically, with authentication, that only one boring was taken—one five-foot boring and blasting—and the samples were sent down to the Downsview lab. Is the hon. Minister saying that is inaccurate?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I am not saying any such thing. I am saying that sufficient boring was done and information was disclosed to permit others to bid. They all bid on the same information. It was quite satisfactory to the other bidders and they were sensible enough, I say, with respect to Mr. Omichinski, to bid what anybody can substantiate that the job should have been bid for. The problem with this man is that he simply underbid the contract. You make reference to us assigning roads. It has nothing to do with the department. The contractor lays out his own roads, works his own pit any way he likes.

Mr. MacDonald: Not according to this.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is the point, not according to that. With the greatest respect to his solicitor—I agree with you, I think he is a very capable man—but he can only use the facts that are disclosed to him. I suggest to you that the department has another set of facts. I dealt with them generally.

You speak of affidavits. We have affidavits, too, attesting to the accuracy of what I have said in a general way. Really, all you have done is put forward one side of the case. That is all you have done. You know that.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me say this: the evidence is conclusive, and nobody has denied that one boring was taken in a four- to five-acre area; one boring and blasting, with the rock sent down to the Downsview laboratory.

I am not an engineer, but if I were going to come to any conclusion as to the quality of rock in the quarry, covering a good many acres, would I take one single boring?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): But if you were not satisfied, you would not bid.

Mr. MacDonald: That is right!

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): You would go and bore it yourself.

Mr. MacDonald: Another hon. Minister intervenes now!

A man bids on a tender which specifies a DHO quarry from which the rock is to be secured, then he finds not only all these bizarre rock formations, which make it difficult, and which the department had not surveyed adequately—furthermore he discovers the more they went the more they were getting into quartz, and so they had to keep moving their sites. What a situation! Is the hon. Minister saying that all of the others who bid were aware of the quality of rock, its inferiority, of the geographical disposition of rock and everything else, and that this is why they made a higher bid? And that Omichinski was not aware of all this?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that either he was unaware of it or ignored it. The same information was available to all bidders. These borings the department makes, whether they are one or ten, are mainly to determine the suitability of the material that is to be used. How the contractor gets it out is his own problem.

Mr. MacDonald: But it was not suitable?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, but it was suitable.

Mr. MacDonald: No. There were great lots which were run through with quartz; so it was not suitable.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: One vein of quartz in this whole quarry. One vein.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it certainly was one of the areas from which they had to move it to another place in the quarry. Mr. Chairman, as the hon. Minister said, he could get more details, and I do not choose to assume to take over Peter White's job on this case.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: To be frank about it, I wondered why you did.

Mr. MacDonald: All I can say is this: Is this the quality of the department's operation where in a tender you designate a quarry and then you leave the contractors to come in and do their own boring to decide on the quality of the rock in it?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Why not?

Mr. P. J. Yakubski (Renfrew South): How does Omichinski vote?

Mr. MacDonald: I will tell you how Omichinski voted. Up until now he has voted Tory, but I suspect he is not going to any more.

I was very interested in the fact that the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope)—who is a very ardent and very close watchdog, Mr. Chairman, of what is said and talked about in his constituency—came in here this afternoon, found I was talking about that, and we have not seen him since. I think he is still running to get away from the issue.

We will have to leave it there.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would simply hope that we are through with this. We are pursuing a fruitless course here. There is no sense in it at all.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, may I ask my hon. friend one question in relation to this matter?

My hon. friend has suggested that it was clear when this contractor bid that it was an uneconomic bid, and that it was almost, in the words of the hon. Minister, impossible for him to carry out the contract. Should there not have then been some consideration that that contract should not be accepted?

An hon. member: That would be against the—

Mr. Oliver: Why would it? What is the matter with you?

Mr. Singer: That is the whole purpose of pre-engineering.

Mr. Oliver: Why would it not be fair? It is not necessary to accept every contract.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, may I point out to the hon. member that this was not a prequalified contract? I said it once before. It may be one of the good reasons why we have extended our prequalification procedures. It was not a prequalified contract.

I would simply make this observation to the hon. leader of the Opposition, that we are pretty firmly in support of the policy of the low bid in The Department of Highways today. I rather wonder, Mr. Chairman, what the hon. leader of the Opposition or any other Opposition member might have said to the Minister of Highways if he had arbitrarily set aside a low tender for a higher one.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one question before I get into the main point of the remarks I want to make.

What was the difference between the Omichinski bid and the next highest one? In round figures?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would have to confess that I do not have that exact information. That is some of the detailed information I have to get. It would be—I cannot tell you the total—but I think the difference in the unit price for removal of material was as much as 40 or 50 cents a yard.

Mr. Singer: In a total price of how much? Was it 100 per cent difference, or 50 per cent difference?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would put it on the order of, say, $1.40 to $1.90. I cannot vouch for the complete accuracy of that.

Mr. Singer: About a third in the overall.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, more like 25 per cent.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, let me say this.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 801?

Mr. Singer: No, on this same point.

Mr. Chairman: Statements have now been made by members of the different parties.

Mr. Singer: I agree that statements have been made, but surely we are in the middle of a point and please let me try to establish it, whether the hon. Minister agrees with me or not.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, surely if this is not the place to have an argument or a discussion, if our only function here is to agree with the department, we might as well go home.

Mr. Chairman, I was going to make a very brief reference to my good friend, the hon. member for Humber (Mr. W. B. Lewis). He and I at one stage in our careers, headed suburban Metro municipalities, he in Etobicoke and I in North York. It was always my impression, I think it applied equally in Etobicoke as it did in North York, that when we went out to tender, and I would think it applies equally in the province, we advertised that neither the lowest nor any tender would necessarily be accepted.

When a tender came in, certainly in my experience—and I would call the hon. member for Humber as a witness—when a tender came in substantially lower than the other tenders, in this case one-third or perhaps even more, it would have sent up sort of a warning signal and we would have wondered why one tender, in a mass of tenders, could have been that much lower than the others.

My reaction would have been, and I would imagine the hon. member for Humber would have been exactly the same, we would have called our engineers in and said why can X be that much lower than all the rest? Does X know what he is doing?

Now it would occur to me this evening, as I have heard these facts revealed for the first time, and I knew nothing about this at all, that when the hon. Minister or his officials saw that one tender was so much lower than the others, that he would have called his advisers in and said, how can Omichinski be so much lower than all the others? Does Omichinski know what he is doing and is it reasonable to expect that he can do the job?

I would have hoped that is what the hon. Minister would have done, rather than, as I gather, and I perhaps gathered quite wrongly, the hon. Minister said: "Oh, oh! Omichinski has made a mistake and we are going to fix him and we will give him the contract even though he does not know what he is doing."

Now I would like to hear the hon. Minister's comments on that.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that your explanation now?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No it is not. That is your interpretation of my explanation.

Mr. MacDonald: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is your interpretation of my explanation.

Mr. Singer: I am asking you to explain—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am going to explain.

It was a bonded contract. The contractor came from the immediate area. Even if the bid did look too low, I assure you that the low bid from a contractor in an area that should be knowledgeable about the situation, if he is substantially low and he has got a suitable bond with his contract documents, he is going to get the contract. Because it conforms, as I have said several times now, to the policy of the low tender receiving the contract award. I have no intention of departing from that policy, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MacDonald: Was this his first contract with the department?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No.

Mr. MacDonald: How many years has he had contracts?

Hon. Mr. Cass: He was contracting in my time and that was years ago.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I cannot tell you tonight. I do not know.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister, in his preliminary remarks, made some reference to the fair wage policy, if one can call it that. He stated that a minimum wage of $1.30 an hour is called for on all highways contracts.

I may have misunderstood him or he may have not been dealing with the whole of the fair wage policy. We have had in the past a good many fairly heated sessions here with regard to the fair wage policy. The point I thought we had managed to establish was that on construction contracts not merely a minimum wage but a schedule of wages would be set forth for all categories of labour on a particular contract. That the schedule would be drawn up by The Department of Labour on the basis of prevailing wages in the community and wages considered to be fair and reasonable. I had understood a session or two ago that this policy had been adopted and that highway construction contracts would have schedules of wages in them, not just a minimum wage.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I do not recall, and I think I am correct, ever having stated anything other than we do write into all our contracts. That has nothing to do with these areas that minimum wages are applicable to; it covers the whole length and breadth of the province. We write in a minimum wage of $1.30. I do recall, if I am correct, that I think we suggested that if the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) in due course decided to apply certain policies related to this, then of course in the department we would naturally follow suit. I think probably this is a matter that may be related to the studies that are under way in terms of broadening out this whole matter.

But we do not write in anything but this minimum wage and there are several reasons for that. More and more of the contractors being certified—if that is the word to use—are employing union labour. I would be inclined to say that those who bargain for the employees of a contractor will have considerable to say about the rates of wages that are associated with their agreement. There can be quite some variance in this, I imagine, depending on who is the bargaining agent, where the bargaining is being done, and the area of operation of the contractor. In any case, we have not seen fit to go beyond establishing a minimum wage of $1.30 for these other reasons.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, may I ask how the minimum wage is enforced? What sort of procedure is there for ensuring that all employees engaged in these contracts get this minimum wage? I think it is an extremely low minimum wage and I would hope no contractor would want to pay less. In the event that he does pay less, is there any inspection procedure, any complaints procedure, or does an employee simply have to go to a small claims court to collect?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, there are certain built-in safeguards. Firstly, it is written into the contract specifications that this minimum wage must apply and we make routine audits from time to time. We do not audit them all but we make enough routine spot audits and we do it in such a fashion that we are pretty well convinced that they are complying with this contract obligation.

Mr. Bryden: You do your own enforcement then, if I may call it that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We employ our own audit force, that is right.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I must say that I at any rate—I do not know about others on this side—was somewhat led astray, shall

I say, in failing to distinguish between what the government was actually doing and what it was merely contemplating. It has apparently been contemplating fair wage schedules for a long time. I had thought prior to the last election that it had finally decided it was going to do it. I judge now that it has not. How long it is going to contemplate it, I do not know, but I would suggest to the hon. Minister that this government is at least 40 years behind the federal government.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that is a matter to take up with the hon. Minister of Labour on some appropriate occasion? I have discussed the situation as it applies to The Department of Highways. I do not think I need to get into the whole policy of minimum wages.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I am getting into the question of the wages paid on Department of Highways contracts. I am not getting into the whole question of minimum wages, just the wages paid on Department of Highways contracts. I think this affects the department and I think the department should be interested in seeing that—

Mr. Chairman: Order! This comes under vote 803.

Mr. Bryden: Vote 803; that is fine, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): May I ask the hon. Minister a question? Do I understand, for example, that everybody working for The Department of Highways and on contracts in Bruce county, gets a minimum of $1.30 an hour? Is that true?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I did not say that, Mr. Chairman. I said that we write into our contracts the specification that a contractor undertaking Department of Highways contracts must pay a minimum of $1.30 an hour.

Mr. Whicher: The only thing I wanted to point out to the hon. Minister was that on looking over the work in Bruce county there are no contracts this year. Therefore I do not think this would be applicable to Bruce county. Did the hon. Minister want to say anything about that?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Whicher: I think, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister will agree it is something like the letter—there is no answer to it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will answer that under the appropriate vote, if the hon. member likes, when it comes up.

Mr. G. R. Carton (Armourdale): Are we on vote 803, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: No; vote 801.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, does the item under salaries then, in 801, cover the salaries of all the employees of the department?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, it includes the main office staff.

Mr. Nixon: The main office? I wonder if the hon. Minister then, under this item, could tell me the total number of people employed by the department? That is not just in the main office, but paid by The Department of Highways?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The total number?

Mr. Nixon: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, it fluctuates. I would say, in terms of round figures, it is close to 12,000.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to ask one or two questions about the selection of these employees, because there must be a considerable turnover. I would ask the hon. Minister if he would explain how the personnel branch in his department collaborates with the civil service commission in processing applications for employment with the department?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They all require to be processed by the civil service—all applications, if they are permanent staff. The only area where they are not processed, I would say to the hon. member, is for casual staff.

Mr. Whicher: And how many casual staff would there be out of the 12,000?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: About 3,500, and that fluctuates a little bit with the season of the year, I would say to the hon. member. There are usually more in the winter than there are in the summer.

Mr. Whicher: Also, Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister tell us how the casual staff is picked?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They apply for their jobs by application, the same as all the other job classifications, except that they are not processed by the civil service.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, if I might pursue this a bit, the promotions within the department: where these are of some considerable significance, are these let out publicly, or are they usually made from people already in the department?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: To the greatest extent possible, and I can think of few variations, if any, from within the department.

Mr. Nixon: And these, then, would be made without reference to advice from the civil service commission?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, no. If they move from one job classification to another, which involves a promotion, they have to qualify. They have to write, in certain circumstances, examinations — interdepartmental examinations. The civil service commission takes a hand in this, too.

Mr. Nixon: Then the selection resulting from the qualifying examination would be made by co-operation with the hon. Minister's personnel people and the civil service commission? Reference was made to temporary help, casual help. Is there a classification which is temporary? I know of some instances where men have worked for many years with the department and have been classified with some adjective, the same as casual or temporary; when the time comes and they are beyond the age limit, considerable hardship has resulted, even though they have worked in this capacity.

I would like the hon. Minister to comment on this, particularly as to how something might be done to clear up the difficulty, even in a retroactive way, so that men who are now no longer employable by the department might come in for some sort of assistance.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would simply say to the hon. member that retirement age is generally regarded as 65. Extensions of service can be granted up to the age of 70. In The Department of Highways, in some circumstances, we grant extensions, continuing extensions up to the age of 70. In other circumstances we do not. Circumstances in each case, I think, are carefully examined. Certainly even beyond the age of 70, where it can be substantiated that the employee who is eligible for retirement cannot without difficulty be replaced, he is retained. But this is done in usually six-month or 12-month extensions so they can be reviewed from time to time in the light of all circumstances.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister tell the House how the department justifies keeping casual labour, so-called, working on a continuous basis for a number of years? What is the justification for retaining this classification?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would like to answer that generally by saying that much of the work of the department is seasonal. We require, certainly, more maintenance forces in the winter months than we do in the summer. In those circumstances we take on extra staff, usually around the first of November, I believe, on the understanding that when the extra maintenance work load is over in the spring, they can go back to their former pursuits. I would say that in many circumstances this works very well, because seasonal employment is all these people want. I would hardly like to think the hon. member is suggesting that we would carry on our payroll employees who are needed for peak maintenance periods, throughout seasons when they are not required. I simply say to the hon. member that is why they do not always get a full 12 months of employment.

Mr. Nixon: Can the hon. Minister assure us then that all those who are working on a continuous basis are classified as permanent staff?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No.

Mr. Nixon: Then there is an area there that still has not been explained.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is true. There is this area of casual employees and the bulk of them are on our maintenance staff. The establishment, if you like to call it that, of the department which relates to permanent employees, is increasing. Over a period of years I would be of the opinion that we will reduce our casual forces and increase the establishment of permanent or probationary employees. When I use the word "probationary" I am speaking about somebody who is going to be a permanent employee if he passes his probationary period. In other words, if he becomes what we call a probationary employee, he can, if he performs his duties satisfactorily, look forward to permanent status. So we put those two together, permanent and probationary, because they are essentially one and the same thing. We are of the opinion that this situation will then, in terms of establishment, over a period of time, relate itself to more and more permanent employees and less and less casual.

Mr. Nixon: Do the casual employees have any access to the pension fund, that is, do they make contributions to it while they are employed on a casual basis?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They do not during their employment as a casual. At the point when they are taken on as a permanent employee they then have the option of paying their pension retroactively and qualifying for pension benefits in that way.

Mr. Nixon: Is the hon. Minister familiar with any cases of some hardship relating to the matter that I have been referring to, where men have been retained on a full-time basis, as far as my information is concerned, by the department on a casual qualification or classification, and then have left the service of the department because of their age and have been left completely high and dry after being roadmen for a good many years? Is the hon. Minister familiar with the hardship this has worked?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I would think there is certainly a familiarity with that, and I think I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the hon. member, that that is the reason we are now in the process of increasing our establishment, to try to increase the relationship of permanent employees versus casual employees. We are aware that this causes hardship and we are in the process of doing this very thing right now.

Mr. Whicher: How many casual employees were taken on and made permanent this past year?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We have changed the status from casual to permanent of 2,300 casuals in a period of not more than three years—2,300 from casual staff to permanent staff. This is continuing, going on all the time.

Mr. Whicher: As I understand it, 25 per cent of those working for The Department of Highways are still casual staff. I would like to ask this question. Is there anybody who can be listed under casual employment who has been working for The Department of Highways for the past three years?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, my question is, why? It seems to me that after three years a man should be either permanent or fired.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I cannot agree with that comment of the hon. member. That is not the way the situation is at all and I think I have explained to the hon. member for Brant what is being done about it. I would hope that this casual staff diminishes over the period of years to the point where what the hon. member is concerned about and what we are concerned about, is satisfactorily taken care of.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): The hon. Minister says that on November 1 they go back to their former pursuits. That, I suppose, is drawing unemployment insurance?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I say I did not. I said that they are engaged usually, these winter maintenance forces, on November 1, and after the winter maintenance period is concluded they go back to their former pursuits. I could have expanded it at that time by simply saying that in the rural areas of the province there are a lot of farmers who like this winter employment but when spring comes along they like to go back to the farm. I think the hon. member for Bruce and the hon. member for Brant are very much aware of that.

Mr. Whicher: I am very much aware of it. I would like the hon. Minister to name one in Bruce county who fits into that category, just one. There is not one.

Mr. Sopha: I see that the hon. Minister has very carefully paid the unemployment insurance premiums. Do the other pursuits to which the hon. Minister referred, include going back to drawing unemployment insurance?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This was not what I had in mind when I said it.

Mr. Sopha: May I ask the hon. Minister this question: Has it ever been calculated whether the federal government pays employees of the department of the hon. Minister amounts in excess of the $215,000 which the hon. Minister budgets? In other words, does the federal government pay out more in unemployment insurance benefits to the hon. Minister's department than is paid in premiums?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not know.

Mr. Sopha: I would think the hon. Minister would look into that to determine whether the government in Ottawa is subsidizing the hon. Minister's department.

An hon. member: Still, the—

Mr. Sopha: Just hold on. It is all right, we do not have to hear from the zoo about this.

I have raised this before; it is not the first time, Mr. Chairman, I have raised this question and I have asked the provincial government to bear some responsibility in finding employment. Our Department of Labour is singularly lacking in having media that look for jobs for people. I would think that if the hon. Minister of Highways is going to run a department where he has a great many transient labourers who are uncertain of the continuity of their occupation, instead of laying them off and throwing them on to the benefaction of the federal government, the hon. Minister might do something about securing permanent employment for them.

I observe in going quickly through the estimates here, there are three departments that employ large numbers of casual labour—Public Works, Highways, and Lands and Forests—the only three departments that bother to pay unemployment insurance. May we take it that it is not such a problem in the other departments as it is in these three—

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): That is nonsense. They all pay it.

Mr. Sopha:—of having casual and temporary work in the work force?

Well, as I say to my hon. friend the lion from St. George, they do not budget for it, they do not ask—

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: You take a look at the accounts.

Mr. Sopha: But really, my request is not so unreasonable, if you think about it for a moment. Instead of, on April 1, seeing a large number of these people—and they have been in my office, which is handy, downtown. Oh, yes; I have seen a good many of them. They have been in and said, "I have got my notice from The Department of Highways." Often they are in the 40, 50 or 60 age groups. I have had them tell me, "This is my fifth, sixth, seventh or tenth season with The Department of Highways and I have not yet got a permanent job with them. And, come the ides of March, or April 1, I am going to be laid off. Yes, I am going to be laid off."

So, instead of sitting here and smiling knowingly, like the cat which swallowed the canary, the hon. Minister might consider, instead of relying upon the largesse of the federal government's unemployment insurance programme, doing something about securing permanent employment for these people.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I rather thought I commented on that a few moments ago, because I hesitate to think that the hon. member would want us to engage temporary staff, at the expense of the public, which we do not need.

I do not want to be one who burdens the federal government with the payment of any more unemployment insurance than seems reasonable; but nevertheless, in, I would say, 90 per cent to 99 per cent of all circumstances, these people to whom the hon. member refers, who are engaged in the fall, do it with the full knowledge that their employment is going to run out in the spring.

I do not think there is any doubt in their mind about it; they keep coming back and, in many cases, they do have other jobs to go to. They have farms to operate; they have summer work to do; but if I have to make a choice about involving the federal government in the payment of unemployment insurance claims, or using the taxpayers' money to keep on staff people we do not need in this classification, I think I can safely tell you what my choice will be.

Mr. Sopha: I am not at all sure that, as a sovereign government—I would have to think about that for a fortnight or so.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: The distinction between myself and the "Joe" is the emphasis on that word "think."

I am not at all sure that, as a sovereign government as we are, you are entitled to rely on the benefaction of the federal government in this regard.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am not.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes, you are. Yes, you are. You are paying $215,000—that is the amount that you want voted—to insure your employees against the hazards of the unemployment which you are going to give them. You are going to put them in an unemployed state come April 1. So, as a sovereign government, what in effect you are doing—and I am not sure yet you have the moral right to do it, paying $215,000 to the federal government after you laid them off because you cannot find them employment.

Then you are saying to another level of government, "Here, you look after them."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: We are not talking about International Nickel. We are talking about the sovereign government of Ontario, the sovereign government which is sovereign and supreme within its own sphere. It has a measure of responsibility for these people. I am saying that I am not sure there is something morally wrong here when, on April 1, having paid the $215,000 you say to the other levels of government, "It is now your responsibility."

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I make one more observation on what the hon. member has said, and that is this: casual employees are not, in effect, employees of the department because they are not civil servants. Civil servants are not eligible for the payment of unemployment insurance; casual employees are. I think this just underscores the proposition I put before you already: That is, that we will always need some casuals because we cannot provide them all with full-time employment. This is why they remain; and some of them will always remain in this casual classification because we do not need them the year round. That has nothing to do with sovereignty, as far as I can make out.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I would suggest, after listening for the last 15 minutes to the debate in regard to employees of the department, that the hon. Minister has made a very poor case to justify the number of casual employees working for this department in the various branches.

I think the talk and the reasoning—that many of them are farmers and enjoy having a part-time job, and that there are many who know that when they start at the first of the year they are going to be finished and will not have a job for the next year—is just a lot of nonsense.

I think that, if we have the truth from this department, we will find that there are literally hundreds in the various branches who are working steady, working shifts, and who are classified as casual or temporary. We have another group who have not been mentioned, a temporary group. I shall deal with that group on another vote. I do want to deal with the group, which works for The Department of Highways, called the checker, or maintenance and construction.

This man works steadily. His wife called me to tell me that she was struck with fear about how they were going to get along because she had to give up her employment because of ill-health. Now, because her husband was getting only a $1.30 an hour as a checker for The Department of Highways, she did not know how they were going to get along.

I think that if we condone this kind of payment to employees of the government it is a shame on the hon. members of this House and on the administration.

We have them all over. We have them outside the door of this building at $1.30 an hour, very good employees who perform a service but who have to live on this kind of money. This man's wife informed me that his gross for two weeks was $126; and when the deductions came off—including $4.20 for his hospital insurance services, his PSI, $6, his unemployment insurance, $1.60, income tax, $4.05—his gross was $110 for two weeks.

She also informed me that, after he had worked steadily for seven months, he was given a week and four days off and told not to come back until that time had elapsed. The reason he got that was because he had worked too steadily this year, and he would have to stay home. What they meant by working "too steadily", I assume, was that if he worked the 12 months, he would come under some status or other benefits.

I think we should have a frank explanation of just what is taking place in the department in this regard. I am also informed that the pay dates are going to be changed from every two weeks to bi-monthly; and this is something we fought to get rid of in industry many years ago, because people with low incomes were faced with, many times a year, a three-week period between pays. With this kind of a pay, certainly they would have a weekend where they would be without money for three or four days. I think it is nothing but a shame on the department to be paying people, in this area, $1.30 an hour to live on. Certainly we should take a real look at it.

I know, when I have raised this question before, during the estimates, we have been told that they are trying to reduce the casual employees and trying to get more on the permanent staff; but I do not think we are doing it right. I think there should be a regularized system of service when a man goes from casual to a permanent position where he can enjoy the benefits of accumulating pension rights and any other benefits the department might give. I would suggest that we take a real look at this problem and see if we cannot upgrade the rates and regularize the system of an employee becoming a permanent employee so he will know where he is going.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I have already said a couple of times how we are attempting to obtain this relationship between casual and permanent employees, so I will not go into that any further.

The man you referred to as a checker at $1.30 an hour would be strictly a seasonal employee, engaged for the duration of the contract only.

On this matter of twice monthly payments; that is in effect now. We are not going back to that, that is what we have now. What you mean is that you are requesting us to pay every two weeks.

Mr. Gisborn: I said it was information I received; it was—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The matter is being considered. It has been proposed by the association, but at the moment pays are bi-monthly.

Mr. Gisborn: The complaint I got might have meant that he was only paid twice a month, and it presents a hardship—the same difference.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, before we leave vote 801, I wonder if the hon. Minister would comment on the changing of district boundaries. I notice in looking at the book here the boundaries are not entirely clear, they are rather broad and I know that he was good enough to inform me some months ago of the district changes which would come into effect a year from now, is that right? Why was this postponed? I wonder if you would comment on the difficulties?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Actually the opinion of the department, and I think a very valid one, is simply that it will take about a year to implement all these changes. We have in some circumstances, to put on more patrols, and in others take certain patrols off and assign them to other districts. I think it is strictly an administrative problem, Mr. Chairman, and we feel that we should have a good full year, shall we say, to take care of the internal administrative problems associated with it. We will make it effective a year hence.

Mr. Nixon: What will the effective date be, then?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: April 1, 1965.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, has the department a policy of overtime? Does it discourage overtime among contractors in an effort to increase employment?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Not at all; just the reverse, actually. Once we award a contract to a contractor the matter of how he employs or deploys the staff is entirely his responsibility. I would say with a comparatively short construction season such as is characteristic in our country, that much overtime is the case. These people often work 24 hours, so they would employ shifts and overtime as well.

Mr. Newman: And the permanent staff of the department itself?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The permanent staff of the department itself, at the moment, gets compensating time off for overtime.

Vote 801 agreed to.

On vote 802:

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, on vote 802, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister in regards to the patrol costs. I see here you have in the estimates for this year $12,050,000. I am not saying that the patrols are not good—you stated this afternoon in your remarks what fine work they were doing—but I see the winter maintenance is $15 million, so the patrols are costing very close to what the winter maintenance is costing. Are these patrols confined to highways such as 401 or 400, or do they patrol all King's highways in the province?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There is no real relationship between the vote for patrol costs and the $15 million that you see for maintenance, because, of course, maintenance costs include many things other than patrol costs. They include materials and a great variety of things. But these patrols you refer to cover the entire province, expressways, King's highways, secondary roads—the entire provincial highway system.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, under what vote, what part of vote 802, is the cost of salt?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is the vote.

Mr. Whicher: I mean how much was the cost of salt last year on the provincial highways of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I can tell you in a moment. These are figures projected for the year ending March 31, 1963; we have not got the complete figures for this year yet but these will illustrate it to you.

In the year that I have reference to, the cost of salt was $3,128,205.46.

Mr. Whicher: I am sure the hon. Minister is just as familiar as I am with the criticism that has been given by many writers about the use of salt in the province of Ontario. I remember I brought this up about six years ago and one of the hon. members on the other side, the government side, said that if it saves one life, then it is worth the effort. Of course, those of us on this side of the House have no intention of having any lives lost through the lack of the usage of salt, but, nevertheless, I think the hon. Minister will agree that the cost to the people who own cars and trucks in the province of Ontario is probably several hundred million dollars every year. I would be interested in knowing what The Department of Highways is doing to experiment with other things, other elements or compounds, that might help out the situation as far as ice is concerned on the highways.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would say, Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. member, that this is a matter that has been researched constantly for the past number of years, because, of course, the department recognizes the damaging effects of the use of salt. But in the course of this research we have failed to come up with any suitable alternative at anything near the same cost. There are other snow inhibitors or things that will dissolve it or melt it, or whatever you like, but they are not more effective than salt is. They have not been proved efficient as yet and they are extremely costly. While this research continues to go on, and not only in this jurisdiction but I think probably in similar jurisdictions all over this continent, no economical or efficient equivalent alternative, as yet, has made its appearance.

Mr. Whicher: May I ask the hon. Minister where this research is being carried out?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We have done some of it in our own department; we assign research projects to the various universities and we assist them financially to conduct them. Metro Toronto has been studying this problem for quite some time and we have shared the cost with Metro.

Mr. Whicher: How much did your department spend last year in research as far as the matter of salt is concerned?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I cannot relate it specifically to salt but I can say that we spent $150,000 among the universities of the province for various research assignments, and salt at one time was one which, I think, was assigned to Queen's University. I think they worked on it.

Mr. Sopha: Less than on publicity—you ought to be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. J. R. Knox (Lambton West): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister, through you, under vote 802 what the item for $12,000—I should not say, what it is for; it explains what it is for, it is compensation for loss of taxes to the city of Niagara Falls—but may I ask the hon. Minister what loss in taxes, that is, and how it was set and by whom?

An hon. member: How did the hon. member for Niagara Falls get in on this?

Interjections by several hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would say in reply to the hon. member that this is an annual payment of $12,000. It is authorized under The Rainbow Bridge Act of 1941, which agreement or undertaking goes through until 1980. It simply says that the bridge will for all time be exempt from taxation, including local improvement and school rates levied by any municipality, and the city gets this payment of $12,000 in lieu of certain taxes themselves. It is a statutory thing, and the Act is in effect, as I see it here, until 1980.

Mr. A. V. Walker (Oshawa): I think, Mr. Chairman, that those of us who sit in this House should from time to time bring up the items which concern our ridings. In this case I want to mention two items which are of concern to the municipalities in my riding and which I have already discussed; I believe last fall I had a discussion with the hon. Minister on a couple of these items.

First of all, I want to bring up a situation which refers to the main city in my riding, and that is the inequities which exist in the present system of highway subsidies. It is true, of course, that changes have been made in the subsidies which have benefited this city, such as storm sewers subsidies and increased subsidies on connecting links, which have been a big help. However, there still remains a basic inequity in the subsidy system.

It should be noted that towns, villages, townships, counties and Metropolitan Toronto receive road subsidies of 50 per cent of approved expenditures, and bridge and culvert subsidies up to 80 per cent of approved expenditures; while cities and separated towns receive only a 33.3 per cent subsidy.

For example, I would point out that big cities such as Scarborough, North York, Etobicoke, receive higher subsidies just because they are called a township. I hasten to point out, of course, Mr. Chairman, that I in no way suggest that these subsidies are too high, because I also have townships in my riding. I would point out, however, that road construction in urban areas is more costly per mile than rural road construction. In addition, the needs due to the traffic demands are greater.

The Department of Highways needs study indicated that the greatest needs were in the urban municipalities, where I point out the subsidy is the least. There is a limit to the amount of money that can be raised from municipal taxes for road purposes. Urban municipalities should obtain a greater portion of the road user taxes that the government receives from its various licence fees. A high proportion of the gasoline taxes, I would point out, result from travel within cities. Increased subsidies are required in the urban municipalities if we are to meet the needs outlined in the government needs studies.

Briefly, I would say that officials of the city I am referring to appreciate very much the subsidies that they do receive, but they have gone only part way in meeting this very important need. The problem of road building and maintenance continues to be a very vexing problem to the urban municipalities and its taxation picture.

I would also like to say a word on behalf of the townships in my area and the increasing use which is being made of the township and county roads by the motorists of this province, especially on the weekends. This matter has been referred to by the hon. Minister, but I would like to emphasize that the situation is aggravated in many cases by the establishment of conservation areas and provincial parks; and whereas the road was formerly a quiet country road it now becomes a very busy traffic artery, even though it was not originally built or designed to accommodate heavy traffic.

The situation creates an undue burden to the local municipality and the township taxpayer involved; an undue burden which is out of all proportion to the benefits provided to the local municipality by the establishment of these provincial recreation areas. Some of the townships in my riding would like The Department of Highways to establish a more equitable classification of roads—including roads primarily for local use, collector roads, arterial roads and through highways—with a parallel sliding scale of road grants established according to the use and needs of such roads so that the burden of taxation on real estate for road purposes would be only for that portion of construction and maintenance which is used by the local taxpayers.

This is a problem which is to a degree brought about, of course, by the very rapid development of our province; but I would urge the department to take this matter under consideration when subsidy on construction is under review.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would simply say, Mr. Chairman, briefly, that certainly I think there is some evidence to support the fact that the department concurs with the opinions the hon. member has expressed, because we have started to move into the area of providing more assistance. I would say to the hon. member as well, and I think he would be the first to realize it, Mr. Chairman, that we recognized at least the heavy cost areas in the city associated, as he pointed out, with connecting links, expressways, storm sewers. We have moved into that area rather generously, as the hon. member for Oshawa said.

With respect to provincial parks, we do now and will continue to provide extra assistance to municipalities which are required to maintain township or county roads because of a heavy traffic flow into these parks. We will provide extra assistance to them and that has been made known to them.

I would simply conclude any observations I have to make with respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Oshawa by saying that we have now a great amount of flexibility with respect to the application of direct assistance. We can apply very generous amounts of assistance directly to urban municipalities meeting certain criteria associated with expressways.

And certainly at the level of the counties and townships, you heard me say this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, that we are now in the process of this county needs study to update the information we require to pursue this thing another step at that level.

Mr. Knox: Mr. Chairman, prior to being deeked out of position by my hon. friend and companion from Oshawa, I had not finished with reference to that item for $12,000.

The hon. Minister having answered as he did with reference to it, then I presume that this is an agreement between a bridge authority, the city of Niagara Falls and the provincial government. Is that true?

What I am really getting at is this; if one did happen to have a little old bridge around—maybe you could call it Bluewater—on which there was to be an authority appointed very shortly, and one did have a small municipality within the riding in which the Canadian end of the Bluewater bridge falls, might one instruct that village with respect to compensation for loss of taxes which they have had in the past, so that they should, when the authority is set up, ask the authority to get in touch with the province to make some such agreement, or ask the province to get in touch with the authority to make some such agreement; or in what way should the little municipality of Point Edward proceed in order to get the same consideration that is given to the fine city of Niagara Falls?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would probably, Mr. Chairman, provide a hypothetical answer to a highly hypothetical question and simply say that if the tolls are ever restored to that bridge, then the representatives of the village of Point Edward might suggest to their representative in the Legislature that he come down and discuss this matter with the appropriate officials. I say all that hypothetically.

Mr. Gishorn: Mr. Chairman, through you, I would ask the hon. Minister to inform me as to the disposition of the so-called Hamilton beach strip? Is it still under the jurisdiction of The Department of Highways or has it been turned over to the city of Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: As far as I know, the designation has been revoked and the road is now under the jurisdiction of the city. That is my understanding.

Mr. Gishorn: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take just a minute and deal with a problem with which I am strongly concerned and which will be looked at as a serious one. If we remember, prior to the start of the building of the skyway bridge, public opinion was raised quite highly by the cry of nuisance and dirt and dust and the bottleneck created by the beach strip and the canal at the far end.

Of course when we heard news that we were going to have a skyway bridge which would relieve the bottleneck, sir, and which would in turn relieve the residents of the beach strip from the continual chaos of traffic, the dirt and noise that they put up with for many years, we were quite happy. But we find with the building of the skyway and its subsequently becoming a toll bridge, it has not rectified the problem whatsoever.

Now there was a meeting, just about the time the skyway opened, with the then Minister, now the hon. Attorney General, and some councillors from Hamilton asking the department to put a ban on truck traffic across the beach. I think at that time the department was reluctant to take those steps; but it was said that the department would, I believe the agreement was, take the road and reconstruct it because of a lot of damage done during the construction of the skyway bridge. They have done a very good job except for a few odd spots; I notice they did build it to the specifications that would stand heavy trucks anyway.

But if it is now turned over to the city, the city is going to face this problem; and I think it is going to cause a great political uproar. Someone has to make the decision.

If they decide to ban trucks from the strip there is no alternative but for them to go through the city. Of course there are aldermen and councillors fighting for their own particular wards in the city and it is going to raise quite a political uproar when the people now know that it is back in the hands of the city. They know where to put the pressure on to remove those continual rumbles of heavy trucks across that strip.

I would suggest that it is about time that the department and the government considered removing the tolls from that bridge, if they want to do something for that section of the town. The idea of toll bridges, as far as I am concerned, and it was the decision of our party at the time, was that it was a horse-and-buggy way of raising money for financing highways. If we want to do something on behalf of the city of Hamilton and those people who have put up with the nuisance for many years, we should take the tolls off that bridge so that they can ban the beach strip to the heavy truck traffic and force the trucks to go across the bridge or up through the city and let the city aldermen fight that out.

Certainly, when you look over the accounts, the tolls on the skyway bridge are not going to make us any richer than we will be without them, and I would think that we have a responsibility to that section of the beach. It suffered tremendously from almost unbearable dirt when the construction was going on. The roads were all torn up. I do not know yet whether the city was successful in getting the streets that run off the highway reconstructed. The last time I was talking with the people down there, they were pleased that the highway was going to be reconstructed but they had great fears that the streets running off the road would also be destroyed by the construction of the skyway. I think it is about time that we give consideration to taking the tolls off that bridge and off other bridges in this province and raising the money in the method that we do for the rest of the province's highways—by gasoline tax and other methods.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The member for Algoma-Manitoulin has the floor.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Chairman, just a further word on municipal aid through the grants. I notice that the hon. Minister referred to what has commonly been called statute labour boards, as local roads boards. I am very much interested in this. As the hon. Minister knows, this is a nasty word in our country. "Statute labour boards" has always had a bit of a stigma attached to it and I would like a further explanation on the makeup of the new local roads boards. I heard him mention something to the effect that now the grants were two for one. I would like him to elaborate and enlarge on this a little because this is a very important topic.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I did say in the remarks I made before the estimates today that we will introduce legislation this session, and I would hope shortly, which will simply be a statute authorizing the establishment of local roads boards.

I also said briefly that the basis of cost-sharing would change from 50-50—if I might put it that way—to a contribution by the department of 66⅔ per cent, and a contribution of 33⅓ per cent by the owners in a local roads board area.

Mr. Sopha: Are they going to replace statute labour boards?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, it is not and I am going to explain this, if I may. I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the hon. member, that we will explain this in greater detail when we discuss the bill in the House. It will be presented very shortly. I simply want to comment on it generally today.

Generally and simply then, when local roads boards are formed, and they can be, the statute will provide that a certain number of owners in an area can apply to the Minister for the formation of a board under the authority of this statute. When formed, there will be provision for a method of assessing the land owners. I think where the provincial land tax factor is available, this will be the basis of assessment.

Mr. Sopha: That will be only in unincorporated townships.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, in unincorporated townships. This, of course, is largely where we have statute labour boards now. We will establish a basis of assessment against which the land owners will be assessed. Boards will be appointed or elected and re-elected annually. They will appoint a secretary-treasurer. The funds will be handled altogether differently from what they are now. I am speaking very generally now, Mr. Chairman. I do not have the draft bill before me, but we can get into the detail of this. There will be another opportunity later on, I would say to the hon. member. We think it is a big step forward.

Mr. Farquhar: Thank you, sir. As you say, we will hear more about it later. I do not want to beat it now. But I would like to ask one more question. The formation of these boards, as the hon. Minister knows, is always a pretty ticklish thing, at least it has been under statute legislation. Under the formation of statute labour boards and these things, these new boards or continuations of the old boards will be formed with the help of the department. This is the big thing in these areas. One further thing is in connection with organized municipalities. I am wondering if the hon. Minister can tell me if there is a real yardstick at present that establishes the percentage of grants in various municipalities. I have run into 65-35; I have run into 70-30, and I cannot relate them to any particular rule-of-thumb or yardstick, and I wonder if the minutes can provide some explanation.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I simply say that these rates of subsidy are not arbitrarily set. They are set on the basis of a formula, and as simply as I can state it, and as briefly, the formula is predicated on the premise that an adequate amount of money for the proper maintenance of roads in townships is $600 per mile. If a municipality on the basis of its assessment associated with its road mileage, cannot raise $600 a mile on the basis of the basic subsidy at 50 per cent, then the department to the nearest five per cent makes up the difference. I do not know whether I am expressing this is clearly as I would like to or not. Therefore, it can then become 60 per cent, 65 per cent, or 70 per cent, up to a maximum of 80 per cent.

But the subsidy is formulated by these factors that I have mentioned, $600 a mile being considered adequate for road maintenance purposes in these areas, for the road mileage to be maintained and the assessment in that municipality.

If that combination of factors does not produce $600 a mile—let us say it produces $400 a mile—then the equivalent of the extra $200 is made up by an increase in the subsidy. Is that explanation satisfactory?

Mr. Sopha: What I want to say on this very point before it passes, delighted as I am to hear the elaboration of this new system in unorganized territory, is that if the hon. Minister will consult the files of the department which I am sure are kept with the most thorough efficiency, he will find in there a letter several years old, addressed to the lawyer from Chesterville, who is now the hon. Attorney General. In it I said at great length that the system of statute labour does not work and never will work.

But he is a hard man to get through to, the man who is now the hon. Attorney General, because he makes up his mind often about things on a snap decision. I recall him writing back to me and referring the letter back to me and saying his department felt that this statute labour as it existed in the unorganized territory of northern Ontario was adequate. He pointed out the large amounts of government money that go into the statute labour and he actually rejected my submission. And now—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: My victory is tonight when the present hon. Minister comes and says, "Your suggestion in effect is accepted and we are going to reorganize the whole system." This is a perfect day for me.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I cannot let the occasion pass without, of course, commending the hon. member for his earlier proposal; but I must, in all honesty, say that during my brief tenure of office the suggestion came from the member for Cochrane South, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, who was kind enough to associate with the Minister of Highways in the various details associated with the new bill. In any case, I am sure the hon. member for Sudbury will be gratified.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): I am very sorry, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Lambton West stepped out.

He would like to know, sir, how you go about getting taxes for bridges which you might eventually build. This agreement that The Department of Highways has with the city of Niagara Falls and the bridge commission, which gives them a grant in lieu of taxes of some $12,000 a year—when did it come into effect? Does the hon. Minister say it will expire in 1983?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: In 1941.

Mr. Bukator: In 1941? Was that during the term of office of my very good friend? They were a lenient lot at that time because the bridge was just built, I guess. But just a year ago, for the benefit of my friend from Lambton West, there was a private bill passed pertaining to the Peace Bridge whereby, Mr. Chairman, there was an agreement between the federal government, the town of Fort Erie, and the bridge commission—and I sent for the Bill—Pr2.

The Peace Bridge will be paying, to Fort Erie on a graduated scale, in the neighbourhood of $70,000 a year, as compared to $12,000 for the Rainbow Bridge. The Peace Bridge does not have any stores where they collect rent, but the Rainbow Bridge has 18 stores which are rented. I was wondering, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister would want to admit to me the amount of rent they pay. Is that in order, or am I asking for something that a member should not have or could have—or do I have to put it on the order paper? I would like to know the rents collected by the hon. Minister's department as a comparison with when the $12,000 is paid.

I have said to the hon. members of this House that the bridge commission, or The Department of Highways, does not pay taxes. When I said that, the paltry sum of $12,000 is not enough when you consider the bridge is assessed at, I think, close to $800,000, with its stores and the stand; and it is quite revenue-producing. The Department of Highways have their offices there, at least in the Bell Tower; the commission meets there; the bridge commission has elaborate offices—and I want to make clear, Mr. Chairman, that while we do get a grant of some $12,000, by way of comparison if you would just go down one more notch—and I think maybe the hon. Minister is a member of the commission too, is he not?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. Bukator: The north end bridge—the Whirlpool Bridge, I think it is called—pays a grant, in lieu of taxes, in the neighbourhood, I think, of $36,000. I stand to be corrected, but I think that is the figure. At this stage of the game, Mr. Chairman, I am trying to make the point that while there is an agreement, and it expires in 1983, the bridge commission is using up the valuable land which, once upon a time, housed the Clifton Hotel, the Queen's Hotel, the Lafayette Hotel, and many other establishments which paid many dollars in taxes to the city. Mind you, there were three grants paid at one time.

The Department of Municipal Affairs, about two years ago, paid them in the neighbourhood of $9,200; they cut that off. The Department of the Attorney General gives grants in lieu of taxes. We will come to those estimates, and I will try to explain them at that time. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that $12,000 is sufficient, considering the valuable land they have taken up. This is just a token amount, and I am sorry that we have to wait until 1983 for a renewal of that contract.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister—

Mr. Chairman: Order! The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. Newman: Did the hon. Minister plan on answering the question of the hon. member for Niagara Falls?

Mr. Bukator: About the rentals; could I get the figures on that some time?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, with respect to certain of the matters of information the hon. member has requested, I was going to propose, if I may, that we send the hon. member this information by letter. I do not have it available.

Mr. Bukator: That will be fine.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I was very pleased this evening when the hon. member for Oshawa brought up the discrepancies concerning subsidies paid to cities as opposed to metropolitan municipalities, towns, and villages, and so forth.

Mr. Whicher: Which cities?

Mr. Newman: The reason for my keen interest in this is that just recently, in fact it is only two months ago, my own local municipality passed a resolution which, I assume, the hon. Minister received. If he has received it I will not read it all. If he has, I will simply read the last paragraph. It is only two or three lines and it suggests that the provincial government be requested to equalize the scale of subsidies between urban and rural municipalities.

It costs more, today, to build a road in an urban area than it does in a rural area. The traffic generally, on an urban road, is substantially higher, and I think that the resolution, as adopted by the council in the city of Windsor on January 20, 1964, has merit.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I recall this resolution. I would simply point out to the hon. member that it was a recognition of some of the problems to which he refers which prompted me to say, in the remarks I made before the estimates, that the statute now permits, for one of those cities with whom we are negotiating now as well as certain of the surrounding municipalities, some of the direct forms of assistance. I think this is one way we can assist these situations very materially. I am sure the hon. member would be knowledgeable about this.

Windsor is one of those cities to whom we have indicated that we believe the associated criteria for eligibility is met in Windsor. Consequently, we expect to be negotiating an agreement with them very shortly for an urban expressway, or ring road as they are sometimes called. It will be a rather costly one, for which they will get a subsidy of 75 per cent across the board for construction, land acquisition and subsequent maintenance. In fact we are doing, in terms of direct assistance in these areas of need, something which I think might be much more difficult to provide for in the general sense of the word. Windsor will be the benefactor of some of this direct assistance, once we formalize an agreement with them.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, that is all well and good. We appreciate the hon. Minister's concern, but remember that we in the local community form the gateway to the central mid-west portion of the United States. There are 90 million people only 12 hours' drive from our municipality, and approximately five million people come into Ontario through our gateway every year. The wear and tear on the roads in our community, from the bridge and from the tunnel leading to Highway 401 and Highways 2 and 3, is probably much more substantial than in almost any other community.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister in regard to the property—

Mr. Chairman: Order! The member for Wentworth East has the floor.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, it has been brought to my attention that there has been a great deal of unrest, and very poor employee-employer relations, on the Burlington Skyway Bridge. I understand approximately 17 employees man the tolls, excluding supervision. Would the hon. Minister—one, comment on this; two, inform the House as to the turnover of employees on this particular bridge; and why the necessity of temporary, casual and permanent employees on a job of this nature?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would say to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, that it comes as news to me, and surprising news at that, that we have disgruntled employees. This is the first suggestion I have had of it, coming from the hon. member tonight on that score. I hope you will permit me to investigate this a little further and see what we can turn up for your information.

Now with respect to the turnover of employees, I am at a loss to understand that as well. Certainly there are enough applications for these jobs on file to staff 50 similar bridges, so the jobs cannot be too bad. I would simply suggest to you that for every employee that decides to drop out, for one reason or another, we can replace him ten times overnight.

The matter of certain temporary employees is associated with the fact that we are attempting to determine—by having manual staff at one bridge and an automatic operation at the other, we feel this has provided us with an excellent way of determining—whether the manual operation or the automatic, or machine, operation, is the best. Until we have reached that conclusion we will probably have a few temporary employees to round out shifts on the one bridge where the operation is a manual one.

With respect to the other matters, as I said I shall have to look into those and see if I cannot fill the hon. member in, because it is news to me, I just do not know.

Mr. Gisborn: I would give the hon. Minister some lead and he can investigate it and I will approach him later. I have the information upstairs, but I do not like to present it unless I know there is some validity in it.

If the hon. Minister will check he will find there was a meeting with his department officials in, I think it would be, approximately September, over two employees who had resigned. One had, I believe, six years service and another three. They were called in to explain their resignations and they were quite incensed about the treatment they got. I believe they had a chance to present their case, but they did not get satisfaction and they came to me to see what could be done.

I would like the hon. Minister to look into it and I will contact him later to get the answer.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister in regard to all the properties purchased by The Department of Highways for building 401, have you had a final settlement on all properties that you purchased for right-of-way of 401? If not, how many properties have not been settled with yet?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would say, Mr. Chairman, this appropriately comes up under the next vote. If I had the information, I would give it to the hon. member now, but probably between now and the time we reach vote 803, I can have some information for him.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the hon. Minister, how much maintenance do you have to have on a certain part of the King's highway before you might consider it for the next vote, namely, 803, capital disbursements. Because of course I could not let the opportunity pass tonight without mentioning the fact that on looking over the booklet you presented this afternoon, the capital construction programme, in the very large county of Bruce, which stretches from Tobermory away down south of Walkerton and has many miles of provincial highway, the only part that I can see that has anything to do with construction in the next vote, is a binder course only, from Southamton easterly, of 5.7 miles.

Now the reason I mention this, Mr. Chairman, is this, that the hon. Minister is well acquainted with the roads in Bruce county. As a matter of fact, as he very well knows, he attended a convention in Bruce county immediately previous to the last election and in the course of his remarks, and I think he was quite justified in saying so, he said, according to the papers, the road he went over, is one hell of a road; and now, he said, that we have a provincial Conservative candidate nominated, perhaps we can do something about it.

Well, now, Mr. Chairman, I point out to the hon. Minister that you had a provincial Conservative candidate nominated and today in this book, this large binder, I see that we have 5.7 miles of a binder coarse only from Southampton easterly, as far as the next vote is concerned.

The reason that I bring it up under this vote, Mr. Chairman, is as follows. Not only is the road the hon. Minister travelled on attending that big convention in—I have forgotten where it was, Southampton or some place—not only is that a terrible road, but we have other terrible roads in Bruce county and some of them, Mr. Chairman, are provincial highways that come under the direct jurisdiction of the hon. Minister of Highways who is giving his estimates to us tonight.

Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that if the hon. Minister can say that the road going from Paisley to Southampton is one hell of a road, then I can tell you that the road, the provincial highway, the King's highway, from eight miles south of Wiarton is one hell of a road, too.

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin): Watch your language.

Mr. Whicher: I am quoting the hon. Minister!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I only said it once.

Mr. Whicher: But I have to say it several times in order to get a little action.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I was listening to the hon. Minister and he said that he was very flexible, that he and his associates in his department would be quite willing to review certain situations and I hope he will review the situation as far as No. 6 Highway from Wiarton south is concerned.

Under this vote 802, maintenance of King's highways and other roads, I look at this, at all the headings there. For example, patrol costs; we certainly have them, Mr. Chairman. Gravel crushing; I would say we certainly need some gravel on that, because about half the pavement is left, so there has got to be some gravel. Dust laying; we will need something to look after the dust on that particular road. Surface treatment; most assuredly you are going to need it because, Mr. Chairman, I tell you that the road that the hon. Minister of Highways travelled on in order to go to that certain Conservative convention really was, and is, no worse than the road I am talking about right now.

Surface treatment; of course we will have to have surface treatment. Hot mixed patching. I do not know whether this will be hot mixed patching or cold mixed patching, but one thing is sure, if you do not want to have a few accidents there, there is going to have to be some patching. Mulching, of course there is going to have to be mulching by your patrol units in that area.

Operation of ferries; well now, Mr. Chairman, I am not sure about operation of ferries, but let me tell you this: one year ago right now there was a foot and a half of water over that King's highway of which you are the hon. Minister. I hope that there will not be that much there this year. We have not had as much snow, but of course we may have to have ferries. Painting, bridge painting and repairs; well now there is the odd small bridge that the water keeps going up over; a bridge will have to be built too.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Better get the vote passed so the work can go on.

Mr. Whicher: Provision for flood and storm damage—I do not know about that, but I think, Mr. Chairman, that practically under every item of vote 802, maintenance of the King's highways and other roads, that this particular number of miles of road from Wiarton to Hepworth comes under that category.

My question, Mr. Chairman, is this. At what stage of the game do you leave the maintenance field and get to the capital field where you say as in vote 803, construction and other capital projects; when will this road be constructed properly?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is just about as good an answer as I can think of, Mr. Chairman. Surely the priority for that section of road will come up.

Mr. Whicher: Well, when?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is a good question. I would have to examine our list of priorities, Mr. Chairman, and I will do it as sure as I am sitting here but I cannot tell you off the cuff when that priority number will come up.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I have been here too long to accept that sort of answer. As a matter of fact, the hon. Minister told the Tory convention in Bruce county—oh, everything was smooth that particular night; they had a big crowd there, half of them were Grits as a matter of fact, but they were there to listen to what the hon. Minister had to say and were disappointed—but nevertheless he said on that particular night, "Now we will be able to do something about it." Well, does that mean that just because I am here he is not going to do anything about it?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, a vote will come up here shortly under development roads. Maybe if the hon. member—

Mr. Whicher: What about this one? This is the King's highway.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I have told the hon. member about the King's highway.

Mr. Whicher: What did the hon. Minister say?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is on vote 803. I told the hon. member that the priority would come up.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, then I must—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Do you want me to finish—

Mr. Whicher: No, I am not finished.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Neither am I. I am not finished. I simply make the suggestion that you might ask a question relating to development roads, which is the road I was really talking about when I was at Port Elgin. I was talking about—well, I will say it once—the hell of a road I was talking about, of course, was that road up to Paisley and on to Southampton, you see.

Mr. Whicher: You should have gone on your own road.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I did not have to go far that night. I just make the suggestion that if the hon. member wants to ask about the development roads later on, please feel free to do so.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, at this time, in order to protect myself, and I am sure that the hon. members would want me to do so, I must read an editorial dated Monday, September 30, this is four or five days after the provincial election, from the Owen Sound Sun Times, which is the largest newspaper in our particular area. It is headlined: "Queen's Park Neglect of Bruce Peninsula." I am going to read the first paragraph only:

For some time now it has appeared that the provincial government has neglected the Bruce peninsula largely because its sitting member has been a member of the Opposition. Perhaps the fact that Ross Whicher at times has been an outspoken critic of the Progressive-Conservative government has made those who control such matters reluctant to give more than token aid to what is one of the province's finest summer resort areas. It has been said that at least one of those who must pass—

I would hope, Mr. Chairman, that it would not be the hon. Minister of Highways who would be suggested here. I continue:

It has been said that at least one of those who must pass on such matters has established himself as a watchdog lest Mr. Whicher should receive credit for provincial expenditures in that area.

This is what was said in the largest newspaper in our area. It is not even in my riding, I might tell you, but the fact is—let me tell you this.

The road I am talking about, from Wiarton south, is worse than the road the hon. Minister described as being very poor. If we are getting results in other areas, which we are, and if we must take for granted—because all we have to do is look at the map—that Bruce county is one of the largest ridings in the province of Ontario, and if you think you are doing a job by giving us 5.7 miles of a binder coarse only in that particular area, when you yourself have said that "This is one hell of a road," then I say that you are being negligent in your duty.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, on vote 802, I think this would be the vote under which the suburban roads commission would come. The hon. Minister, earlier this evening, mentioned the fact that they were studying the idea of the suburban roads commission, with something in mind as to changing the formula, and so forth. This would probably satisfy the objections we have in our own community, where there has been recent readjustment or reassessment. The point now, that I want to talk about, rather than suburban roads, is the idea of putting roadside water spots along our highways. When we travel throughout the state of Ohio we find places where an individual can turn off, and simply rest and get a drink of water, not one of these—

Mr. Sopha: You have given them a new idea so it causes tremendous consternation.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I do not refer to a plaza type of stop, because this is a commercial affair. A family driving along 401 does not always feel inclined to drive into a plaza because they are obligated to spend money when they do get in there. They would like some place along the highway where they can pull off, rest, get a drink of water, could find washroom facilities; this is very common in the United States. If you take Interstate 94 going from Detroit to Chicago you will find them at probably every 50 to 75 miles; it is a very handy thing. You find exactly the same thing in the state of Ohio—just a place where a person can pull off the highway and get a drink of water, not necessarily coffee or tea.

For the sake of those who would like water, Mr. Chairman, will the hon. Minister consider this?

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I want to make a comment under vote 802. It has been rumoured that The Department of Highways has thought about, or is going to move in the direction of, asking all farm people to remove gateway signs. I would ask the hon. Minister if this is so? I want him to comment on this.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would answer the hon. member by simply saying that any sign on the farmer's property will remain there undisturbed. Signs which are located on the right of way of The Department of Highways, on a King's highway or a secondary road, may, under certain circumstances, be required to move. But, certainly, a sign on a farmer's gateway, which is usually located on his own property, can stay there as far as the department is concerned.

Vote 802 agreed to.

On vote 803:

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, on this vote I find that—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General) moves that the committee of supply rise, report progress, and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. members on the opposite side of the House would agree, I would like to revert to order 29 in order that I may have, for the legal and municipal bills committee, sufficient work for a committee meeting.

THE CREDIT UNIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves second reading of Bill No. 72, An Act to amend The Credit Unions Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I might say that we will continue tomorrow with the estimates of The Department of Highways and perhaps move to those of Economics and Development and also turn to the order paper.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): No, Energy Resources.

Hon. Mr. Cass: All right. Mr. Speaker, I was taking the advice of a senior member who conveyed it to me and he must have made an error—Energy and Resources Development, and perhaps the order paper, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Cass moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.20 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 17, 1964

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome to the Legislature today, in the east gallery, students from Central Technical School, Hamilton; and in the west gallery, students from St. Patrick's Separate School and Our Lady of Sorrows Separate School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. Harris, from the standing committee on government commissions, presented the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill No. 47, The Ontario Energy Board Act, 1964.

Bill No. 48, The Energy Act, 1964.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE PHARMACY ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Pharmacy Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, these amendments are to permit graduates in pharmacy, pending registration, to practise in a limited way by dispensing in some pharmacies under supervision; to permit hospital pharmacists to elect a special member to the council of the College of Pharmacy to represent hospital pharmacists; and to authorize regulations to be made prescribing standards of maintenance and operation of pharmacies and require that pharmacies be operated in accordance with these standards.

THE ONTARIO NORTHLAND TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION ACT

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Northland Transportation Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, this bill gives the northland commission authority to acquire a seal to affix on their legal documents.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I believe it is necessary to correct certain errors in a report which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail of this morning.

In this report, I am quoted as "promising nurses that the government would not oppose compulsory arbitration if the nurses really wanted it". I must deny this statement most emphatically.

When the two nurses told me the chairman of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission was reported to have said the "commission would oppose compulsory arbitration", I said I believed Dr. Neilson had been misreported; that matters such as compulsory arbitration would be policy, and only government would determine policy. Then any decision would be for the commission to implement.

The two nurses spoke to me about "collective negotiation", and I did state that if nurses really wanted this, government would not oppose it.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the Minister would answer the question asked by the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) yesterday, before the orders of the day?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I thought perhaps the hon. member would be posing the question again.

The question, Mr. Speaker, as you will recall, was: Has the government any further statement to make on the hospital bed shortage, in view of the emergency meeting of Metro doctors with a representative of the OHSC on Friday evening? Further, what answer has the government given to the convalescent homes of the Metro area in their offer, more than a week ago, to make 1,000 beds available?

There was no emergency meeting of Metro doctors with a representative of the OHSC on Friday evening last. This was a meeting of the executive of district No. 11 of the Ontario Medical Association. Some time ago, I met two members of the executive and discussed with them bed shortages, as well as other matters. They asked, at that time, if someone from the commission would meet with their executive for more full discussion of hospital matters. I undertook to arrange for this, and this was the meeting held last Friday evening.

In answer to the second half of the question, I would say that all the facts, statistics, and all other matters pertinent to the entire problem of Metro hospitals, are now being gathered together in orderly fashion. Certain important discussions and negotiations are at present in progress. I am therefore not in a position to give a more specific answer to this part of the question until these discussions and negotiations are completed. I can say, however, that all the resources of The Department of Health, including the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, are at the disposal of Metropolitan hospital boards and other interested authorities to assist them in dealing with their problems. I am quite confident that sound and workable solutions will be found; and, as I stated, when our negotiations are concluded, a full statement will be presented to this House.

It had been my intention, and shortly after the opening of this session I had arranged that all these matters, and any other points of interest or concern about hospitals, would be fully presented as in former sessions before the committee on health. However, in view of what has more recently transpired, I will put these things before the House at the earliest possible time.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, it is three years since an Irish affair has been before this House. I actually missed that one so it is four years since I had the honour of drawing, to the attention of the House, the fact that this is the seventeenth of Ireland, and I do so with great pleasure today.

Of course I have, on many previous occasions, had occasion to do this. I think it is pretty well recognized by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) and many others, perhaps by all, except a few of the new hon. members, that I am the only living political representative of St. Patrick in the world.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There have been a few would-be successors, but so far they have been frustrated. I would like to convey, sir, my thanks to three groups: first, to my Progressive-Conservative Association in St. Patrick riding which has sent me this very fine pot of shamrocks with its good wishes; secondly, to this rather unique utensil of shamrocks sent to me by my office staff; and thirdly, to the presence here today of a number of students from St. Patrick Separate School, a school in the riding of St. Patrick.

The Irish, sir, are a curious people. The Parliament of Ireland never meets on the seventeenth of March. On the other hand, we have the premier of Northern Ireland here celebrating in Toronto today. The art of conversation is respected in Ireland. A Dubliner once said if one could get the English to talk and the Irish to listen, society in London would be quite civilized. As for the Irish women, God bless them. Irish eloquence once said about an Irish woman: "a woman who would coax the birds from the branch with her talk." While the Ontario Attorney General (Mr. Cass) may think he is being plagued at the moment with petitions by women to be compelled to sit on juries, over in Ireland a woman has to petition even to get her name on a panel for jury service.

I visited the Irish Parliament in 1962 and I looked at the order papers and I saw 100 questions on the order paper of the day. I met Mr. De Valera, who in his old age is still a fine, strong figure of a man, but his eyesight has failed very much. He did say to me, however, that he hoped Irish literature could get a little better circulation over here in Canada. On that occasion I also met a number of Canadian engineers and mining people who were engaged in assisting in trying to develop some of the mineral resources that have lain idle for so many years in western Ireland.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great day for the Irish. I have two or three other weapons from Ireland here, but this particular gavel is the most historic. Four years ago, sir, when I last spoke on this subject in the House, this gavel was presented to the Speaker of the day for use on that particular occasion. You, sir, were chairman of the committee of the whole House and during the afternoon you so wore out your arm as chairman, that you had to call upon the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. W. E. Johnston) to assist you. Between the two of you, you and the people in the House at the time, you almost destroyed the gavel.

You have, sir, very graciously agreed to accept the gavel again today for one day's use.

I am still hopeful that it will come back to me reasonably intact but I hope that the business of the House will not be subdued on that account. I have pleasure, sir, through the page boy, in handing you this gavel for recognition in that way.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I shall endeavour to use it more lightly today. Thank you.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak also on St. Patrick's Day and I have also been blessed with the beautiful scented shamrock. I would say, sir, that I do not feel this is an appropriate time to take issue with the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests.

After all, it is St. Patrick's Day. If he, sir, wishes to claim for himself the distinction of being the secular representative—and I want to emphasize, the secular representative—of St. Patrick I am sure no one will object.

I would say, sir, that I remember the occasion on which he spoke before, perhaps that is why I do not want to take issue, I unfortunately was not present in the House. I understand that he was overcome with such emotion at my absence that he suggested that perhaps I had been celebrating a little too much the night before—or it might have been at a wake, my wake, that was being attended. Someone did tell me that genuine tears rolled down his face at the thought of this and because of that I feel particularly warm to him. But I have no issue to take with him, sir, because I would say this: never have I heard him speak truer words than he spoke just now and I say that with deep conviction.

I thought I would take issue with someone, sir, and therefore I thought I would take it with Thomas Jefferson. Thomas Jefferson, as you know, is alleged to have said, "We hold the truth to be self-evident that all men are created equal." I would say that today there is not a man or a woman in this House who does not yearn to have been born in Ireland, or in some way, to have a loose association with someone who was born there.

Let me quickly hurry on to my mother. My mother was born in Dublin, and my father was born in Belfast, and I am alleged to have been born near the border and I think that is politically a happy position.

I understand, sir, why there is this yearning on the part of people to want to be Irish. I thought of going to some authority to find out what qualities the Irish have that all humanity wants to aspire to be like them. I was disappointed that I went to Bernard Shaw, who suggested that the Irish had potatoes in their heads and did not have much else to say about them, so I disclaim him as an authority.

But I went to a more authoritative source, sir. It is Hansard, page 2249 on March 17, 1961. Just by coincidence the authority is myself. I say this in a discerning but certainly a modest way. I pointed out that the virtues of the Irish are all the larger virtues. I suggested that it was a country of warriors and saints and poets and playwrights, a land where conversation sings in the streets. Perhaps, sir, we all welcome Ireland and St. Patrick's Day because in a way it is an imaginary land that we aspire toward. Perhaps we welcome it because, including the Irish, we do not take narrow nationalism too seriously. I think today in the world that this is the kind of virtue that should be welcomed.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Speaker, I know I should yield the floor to my hon. friend from Eglinton (Mr. Reilly) but I do have the distinction of coming from the township of Erin. Erin is my home. It has been the home of my ancestors since 1825; in my riding I have the two municipalities, Erin township and Erin village—both good Irish names. I know the Irish members in this House are feeling rather sentimental today and when I think of Erin I feel a bit sentimental, although it just happens that the first settler in Erin township was not an Irishman, but a Pennsylvania Dutchman or German. In fact, one finds in studying the history of Ontario that Pennsylvania Dutch or Germans were pioneers in many areas.

But Erin—as it developed and the forest was cleared away—developed into a rich farming country with beautiful scenery and rolling hills. I would suggest to people who are of Irish descent that they really have never lived until they go about 50 or 60 miles northwest of Toronto into the rolling hills of Erin and there stand on a high hill and look out over the countryside, see the evergreens in swamps, and the cattle on the hillsides. A few years ago they would have seen many fields of Irish cobbler potatoes. The people are friendly. They, like St. Patrick, had a strong religious background and in the early history of the township they dotted the countryside with churches and schools that are still there.

I am going to suggest to hon. members that some day they take a trip up to Erin. If they want to approach the village, they come in on Highway 24, and as you approach the village you see a large shamrock sign, "Where Irish Eyes Are Smiling." Now if you want to hit the highlight of Erin, I would suggest that on Thanksgiving Day you come up to the Erin Fall Fair—a preview of the Royal. That day there will be literally thousands, perhaps 20,000 or 25,000 people, will come back to Erin to see the fair and renew old acquaintance and to reminisce on the incidents that took place in the development of the township and the village. Mr. Speaker, I wish you the very best on this St. Patrick's Day.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) has just told me that he thought it was a sorry day for the Irish when the Reillys had to give way to the Roots. Perhaps I belong to this number of which the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) just spoke, this loose association, because the name Reilly ordinarily would associate me with an Irishman, but I was not born in Ireland.

However, my mother was very fond of children. You see, there were 13, 14—15 altogether, plus one that was adopted, making a family of 16; and I was number 13. I am not superstitious and I never considered it unlucky with the number 13.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that I am in the same category as the chap who said, "Are you related to Bill?" And I said, "Yes, I am remotely related. He was number one in our family and I was number 13."

The three youngest members of the Reilly family were born in Toronto. On my way in this afternoon, one of our parking attendants, Mr. Bob Glen, asked me if I would like to have this shillelagh for the balance of the day. Now if you require an extra one, Mr. Speaker, I am sure this is available to you.

He tells me that over in Ireland the idea was to slip the cord over the wrist, and use the side of the shillelagh to hit an opponent. If the side was not effective, then of course the butt end could be used.

Bob Glen tells me the front and the back of this shillelagh had been designed with the word Ireland inscribed on it by a chap who worked in the CNR—a fellow by name of Bill Drennan. I would like at this time, Mr. Speaker, to join with the only living representative of St. Patrick, with the hon. member for Dovercourt and the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton), to say to all the people who are Irish and to everybody who loves the Irish, it is a great day for Ireland.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): I will be only a moment, Mr. Speaker.

Of all those who have spoken in connection with St. Patrick's Day, there are two who were born in Ireland and those are the hon. member for Dovercourt and myself. I was born in Dublin. Now I am very fortunate, Mr. Speaker, in that I can celebrate St. Patrick's Day because I was born in Dublin, and I can celebrate St. Andrew's Day because my father was Scottish and is buried in Scotland, and my mother was English so I can celebrate St. George's Day. So that it is a pleasure to be here.

I have not had the opportunity to say anything and in just these few words I thought I would remind the hon. members that I was born in Ireland like the hon. Minister from St. Patrick. I have met De Valera, I have met his son, Major De Valera, Mr. Costello and a number of the influential Irish people when I was in Ireland and in Dublin in 1950.

In conclusion, I might just say, if Mr. Speaker were not of Irish descent, begorrah, he would not have allowed so many Irish speakers before the orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE MILK INDUSTRY ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves second reading of Bill No. 82, An Act to amend The Milk Industry Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves second reading of Bill No. 83, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to call this because there is a meeting of the agricultural committee. I doubt if this bill will be in your book—perhaps it just came up today—but if I can call it now, it can get to the committee this week.

THE FARM PRODUCTS GRADES AND SALES ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves second reading of Bill No. 91, An Act to amend The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE VACCINATION ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health), moves second reading of Bill No. 67, An Act to repeal The Vaccination Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves second reading of Bill No. 68, An Act to amend The Public Health Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MARRIAGE ACT

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary) moves second reading of Bill No. 77, An Act to amend The Marriage Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE VITAL STATISTICS ACT

Hon. Mr. Yaremko moves second reading of Bill No. 78, An Act to amend The Vital Statistics Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Yaremko moves second reading of Bill No. 79, An Act to amend The Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The 49th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

On vote 803:

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, when the House adjourned last evening, I had just proceeded to make some comments on a subject relative to the estimates covered in 803, capital disbursements, construction and other capital projects.

I am sure the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) is well aware of the traffic problem that the city of Hamilton is facing today because of the continual increase in population, industrial expansion and subsequently the great increase in traffic flow in and around the city of Hamilton. The hon. Minister is also aware of the extensive traffic survey that was taken, I believe at a cost of some $400,000, and subsequently the results brought about a projected programme over a period of years of some $200 million.

I understand that some time in December, I think it was about December 3, a delegation met with the hon. Minister and presented a request for increased subsidies in regard to this project. I believe that as reasons for an increase in subsidies above the then known 33.3 per cent, as it was for the city of Toronto on projects of a similar nature, they referred to the city of Kitchener and also to the Lakehead which have similar projects. They felt they did receive a good hearing by the hon. Minister. I would just quote from the Hamilton Spectator of December 3, the day of the meeting, what took place, and ask the hon. Minister to comment in this regard:

A new cost-sharing formula which could see Queen's Park pay 75 per cent of the cost of Hamilton's proposed freeway system is being considered by the province. The hon. Charles MacNaughton, Minister of Highways, today told a Hamilton delegation, seeking extra help in implementing the city's $200 million traffic programme, that he was very cognizant of Hamilton's traffic problem and would have a decision on a new rate structure very soon.

I would ask the hon. Minister if he would inform the House as to whether or not there is a new formula, and whether or not there is a chance of Hamilton being treated in a fashion similar to the city of Toronto?

It seems to me that we are getting into the position that when we talk, in general terms about the province of Ontario, we are talking about Metro Toronto. And vice versa, when we talk about Metro Toronto we seem to be talking about the province of Ontario. I think it is about time that these major problems which arise in other cities should be given the same kind of attention as Metro Toronto. I would hope that the other hon. members from the Hamilton area will make some comment in regard to this subject, so that we can jointly bring to the attention of the hon. Minister the needs of the city of Hamilton in regard to this real problem, the problem of traffic flow.

I noticed that the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Walker) made some comments last night. He, too, feels that there should be a new formula for the development of much needed highways in the different sections of the province.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is, of course, quite correct when he states that a traffic study has just been completed costing the sum of $400,000. I feel it is only fair to point out to the House that the cost of this was subsidized by The Department of Highways, to the extent of 75 per cent. But it is quite true, also, that we have had a series of meetings with the mayor and representatives of the council of the city of Hamilton, with respect to matters emanating from this traffic study.

It was a comprehensive traffic study. It dealt very adequately, we feel, with the transportation problems in the city of Hamilton projected over a period of 20 years. As I understand it, and as I recall it, it is divided into several stages. We discussed with the mayor and representatives, the last time they were here, matters associated with stage one. This stage contemplates an urban expressway, or a crosstown expressway, through the core area of the city, as the hon. member and all others from the city of Hamilton will be well aware. We indicated, at that time, to the mayor and his associates, that we felt that a section of that urban expressway, the section proposed in stage one, was eligible for the type of assistance we discussed last night.

I might point out to the hon. member that, if nothing official has been said beyond that to the city of Hamilton, it was delayed until the appropriate legislation was introduced in this assembly. That has now been done, which enables me to negotiate an agreement with the city. I can assure the hon. member, and those from the Hamilton area who are interested, that we are quite prepared now to undertake negotiations to this extent.

Mr. G. R. Carton (Armourdale): Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the hon. Minister on his well-prepared and equally well-delivered report given yesterday. There is no doubt we have a network of highways second to none on the continent.

Being cognizant of the excellency of our highway system, and having heard the fine report of the hon. Minister, I would that I could, as a Progressive-Conservative member, settle back and relax, secure in my belief that all was well—and leave criticisms, general and specific, to the Opposition members.

However, I made a promise to my constituents and, what is equally important, I made a promise to myself, that I would do everything within my power to attempt to alleviate the hardships encountered and suffered by those homeowners adjacent to Highway 401 as widened. Such being the case, I have no alternative but to use every proper means to champion their cause and endeavour to advance their interests on every occasion possible.

Much scorn and derision has been directed at the promises of politicians, but I would like to go on record in this House—and may I say that, from my observation of the hon. members in this House, I am no exception—as one who fully intends to honour his promises, notwithstanding any personal embarrassment or opposition I may suffer in so doing. To do otherwise would render me unfit to hold this high office, and to do otherwise would indeed render me unworthy to be a Progressive-Conservative member. To do otherwise than our conscience dictates, to sit back for personal reasons and not try to right a wrong, an admitted wrong, is not in my opinion a desirable trait in anyone, least of all in a man or woman holding elected office.

I do not subscribe to the theory of one of the great British leaders that, on being elected, one ceases to think constituency-wise and, in effect, abandons the local outlook in favour of the broader issues concerning the province as a whole.

I sincerely believe that our duty lies in both directions, that we must concern ourselves with local problems as they arise, while at the same time having regard to those all-embracing issues relating to the entire province. Indeed, one finds that there is overlapping. When one analyzes and diagnoses local problems they are, in many instances, attributable to matters inherent in province-wide government policies and administrative practices.

Therefore, lest the hon. members of this House recline and rationalize that this is purely a local, narrow, parochial problem, I hasten to assure them that such is not the case. On the contrary, this is a problem brought about by the administrative policies and practices of The Department of Highways which affect, in varying degrees, the riding of every hon. member in this House.

I did not enjoy making my maiden speech in this House, because I found it necessary to attack a department of this government. And, being a newly elected member and a very unimportant one, one could imagine that I did so with the greatest reluctance. I enjoy making this address even less; for, if anything, I am even more determined to try to focus the attention of this honourable House on what I consider to be a most flagrant violation of the rights of those citizens bordering Highway 401 in Armourdale and neighbouring ridings.

I am reminded, sir, of the story of a farmer going away on a trip of two weeks' duration, who entrusted the care of his mule to his best friend, with the earnest plea that it should be treated with the utmost kindness. His friend assured him that such would be the case and assumed this duty, solemnly pledged to devote the kindest care to this special charge. However, he found that no matter how hard he tried he could not even get the poor animal to eat. He pleaded, cajoled and exhorted the critter to partake of its sustenance to no avail, and day by day the mule lost weight and grew weaker, much to the great concern of the farmer.

Happy he was, therefore, when his friend returned after two weeks. The farmer explained his inability, no matter how kind he had been, to get the mule to eat. The owner of the mule reached over, picked up a sledge hammer and clouted the animal three times as hard as he could right on the head. The farmer was shocked and asked his friend how he could treat the mule so cruelly, when he had asked the farmer to treat it with the greatest kindness. The friend replied, that before treating the animal with kindness, it was essential first of all to get his attention.

That is exactly what I have been trying to do, sir, to get the attention of the hon. Minister and his department.

Incidentally, sir, lest the Opposition members take any other meaning from my story, I do not want any inferences drawn or innuendoes made that the hon. Minister or anyone in his department are mules, or any other popular connotation. On the contrary, the hon. Minister is the height of graciousness, the epitome of understanding in every respect, a dedicated man, very capable of carrying out his heavy burden in a manner that brings high honour to his office.

I have suspected on the odd occasion that he recognizes that I am right, but for some reason or another his hands are tied, or he believes them to be tied. He has my kindest wishes and personal respect. I am aware that he carries onerous burdens, and is in fact a victim of circumstances in that he occupies his high post at a very trying and difficult time.

I thank the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) for the honour he did me in an address reported on page 551 of Hansard, in remarking that he took for granted that because I had now entered the Highway 401 problem it was some indication from the government benches that something would be done. Quite the contrary, sir. Personally, I had entered the fight long before the homeowners themselves had organized, and in fact had urged them to band together in their common interest. Secondly, if I had or have the ear of the government, most assuredly it is a deaf one, or it at least appears to be so to date.

It is rather appropriate that my problem concerns highways because I seem to be off on an excursion of my own. I had requested an interview with the hon. Minister in September, prior to the election, resulting in a meeting with him in January. I think a fair statement of this meeting would be to say that I did not come out or emerge with any optimistic outlook. I predicate this feeling on a statement made at the outset that any thoughts as to financial relief should be dispelled but any other suggestions to alleviate the problem, such as landscaping, noise barriers, and so on, would be discussed.

If no solution can be found to adequately remunerate by expropriation or any other means, then I submit any other red herrings are a feeble attempt to solve the conscience of the highways department, in fact they are an insult to the intelligence of the people, and as I said in my maiden speech, are comparable to throwing a doughnut to a drowning man as a lifesaver.

Two weeks subsequent to my meeting with the hon. Minister in January, a brief was presented to the hon. Minister and his department by a group called The 401 Ratepayers Association. This is an association of dedicated people, living adjacent to the highway as widened, who refuse to bow to the dictates of the highways department, and who as yet have not become reconciled to accepting the oppressive hand of this department without putting up a fight. They are fighting, sir, only to save their lifetime savings, which are invested in their homes.

Almost without exception, the decrease in value, the devaluation of the property, succeeds in wiping out the entire equity of the homeowner, once again leaving the mortgage companies with no loss at all and the homeowner without a cent. I brought this matter to the attention of the hon. Minister in my maiden speech some six weeks ago and to date have absolutely no assurance whatsoever that even one homeowner more will have his property expropriated or receive any compensation whatsoever.

I am, quite frankly, very disappointed, not because of the apparent lack of action, but because slowly, inescapably and surely, the message is filtering through. My intuition tells me, and perhaps I am wrong and I hope and pray I am, that nothing further is going to be done, that a firm decision was made long before I entered the picture, probably long before the hon. Minister himself became an incumbent of this post, and that this decision will be strictly adhered to, this policy will be carried out adamantly, this practice will be railroaded through, regardless of personal loss to a small group of citizens.

I said, sir, and I reiterate, that I hope and pray that I am wrong, because if The Department of Highways can ride roughshod as it has over a segment of our decent law-abiding citizenry, I suggest there is no limitation on the powers of government, that through our administrative policies, not through our legislation, we make a mockery of all that is good and decent and fair and equitable. This being the case, sir, it behooves each and every one of us sitting in this House to examine and re-examine not our legislation, which we so ardently debate, but the manner in which our legislation is implemented. Whatever is done by a department of this government is a reflection on each and every one of us in this House. Therefore, it is imperative that our citizens, our decent, law-abiding citizens, be treated in a fair and equitable manner. To do otherwise is to negate the entire democratic processes.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to spell out to the hon. members one thing and one thing only, for this is the trap I found, a clever trap, mind you. That is, that we do not need any new legislation. We are not creating precedents. We are not jeopardizing our highway construction programme. There is nothing, absolutely nothing standing in the way of helping these unfortunate people, except The Department of Highways.

My first approach is to the department, where I met with apparent sympathy and understanding and seeming concern that nothing could be done. This was due, it was blandly pointed out to me, to inadequate legislation, respecting injurious damage. I fell hook, line and sinker for this plausible explanation and wasted hundreds of hours writing to every jurisdiction on the continent and studying highway expropriation statutes till I was blue in the face. Oh, yes, I was led nicely down the garden path strewn with legislative flowers.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): How do you like them apples?

Mr. Carton: Fortunately, I came to the realization that this was not a legislative problem at all, but rather the whole problem centred around The Department of Highways and its willingness to expropriate property necessary for the highway construction.

When Highway 401 was originally built, we were told that this was going to be a thing of beauty, with appropriate landscaping and safety features. Accordingly, The Department of Highways expropriated sufficient property to render this possible. Not one person queried the width of the land acquired. It was used for highway purposes and this ended it. We had, in fact, a safety and a green belt area, and I emphasize the word safety. I am certain that there are designated criteria pertaining to adequate roadways. For example, a municipal road is 66 feet wide, a county road is 88 feet, an urban four-lane road is 200 feet and a rural four-lane road is 300 feet. Surely for safety reasons, if for no other, this 12-, 14-, 16-, 17-lane speedway should be commensurate in width.

Several years later, I submit, The Department of Highways finds that it must create additional highway facilities expeditiously and economically and seizes upon the idea of widening Highway 401 to become a super-colossal speedway. However, this time it utilized the land it formerly held to be necessary for a safety and a green belt area and expropriated only those houses sitting right on the highway. It put this hideous, and I mean hideous, and gargantuan, monster immediately adjacent to front and back yards as the case may be, and in some cases, within 20, 30 or 40 feet of the house itself.

For the benefit of the rural members, I suggest that if this came within 20, 30 or 40 feet of a barnyard in their riding, the farmer would probably want and succeed in getting his whole farm expropriated.

Mr. Chairman, I happen to have some photographs of the areas concerned. I had two copies made, one for each side of the House. I would appreciate hon. members having a look at these and may I state from the outset that these are not the worst cases. These are just typical cases of what is happening in the area.

I would like to read, if I may, from the—just very briefly, because I do not believe in reading excerpts from various things—but I would like to read one or two items from the brief presented by the Highway 401 rate-payers. I will read one short paragraph:

Members of the association who have placed their homes on the market have been frankly told by their respective real estate brokers—

I will prove this later by genuine letters:

—that the sale of their properties at what should be a fair and equitable price is hopeless, simply because of what is now, or will be in the near future, the proximity of the property in question to the expanded 401 highway.

In this particular brief, there is appended a letter. I will read one paragraph, and if any hon. member wishes to see these he is perfectly at liberty to do so. One paragraph:

At least eight different real estate people have suggested that we just walk off and leave the house for the mortgages owing.

Now may I state this: These people have $5,000 equity in their house and, at least eight different real estate people have suggested that they just walk off and leave the mortgages.

That is one example. This is another example, addressed to a home owner at 65 Belgrave Avenue:

Replying to your inquiry of today's date I wish to say that I visited your home at 65 Belgrave Avenue, for sale in 1962, and for a period of about five months followed the usual procedures in an effort to dispose of the property. Although we had many calls from our advertisements and some from the sign on the property, and although we introduced the home to many others looking for this kind of home, we were unable to secure even the lowest possible offer.

Proximity to 401 highway, and the fact that this traffic artery was being widened to twelve lanes, reduced prospective buyer interest to zero.

It is our opinion that the prospects for a sale have not, and will not, improve for years.

This is a letter, Mr. Chairman, addressed to the claims adjuster of The Department of Highways from another homeowner on Belgrave Avenue:

We are informed by our real estate agent that our property is totally unsaleable. There is concrete evidence of damage done to the structure, this being checking and cracking of plaster in every room in the house. The concrete floor in the garage is cracking and the brickwork at the rear of the house was repaired last fall.

Another letter from a real estate agent addressed to the people at 69 Belgrave Avenue:

I appreciate your calling me to list your house for sale, and I also fully realize the effect this location is having on the health of—

I will not name the lady.

However, the price of $26,900, being what you paid, is completely unrealistic. The highway has depreciated your value by several thousand dollars, between $6,000 and $7,000 in my opinion.

I also noted considerable damage caused by the highway—

And it goes on to explain how he feels that they should go about getting compensation.

I have some pitiful letters, sir. Here is a letter from a widow:

I lost my husband in the fall of 1961, and have a daughter who has been very ill for over three years, and unable to work but for a few months of this period and who has, to this date, by no means recuperated. I have only one salary, that of my oldest daughter, coming in steadily and a very small widow's allowance.

We were in such a position, financially, that in June 1963 we were forced to take a second mortgage on our home so that we would not lose it. The equity that I had in the home has now depreciated to nothing.

That is from a widow, sir.

Mr. Chairman, ad infinitum, I could go on. There are many, many letters. I do not propose to bore this honourable House at length with various excerpts. I would prefer to get on with the point I am trying to make. I have not dwelt purposely on these specific cases because the evidence is there to see.

Any hon. member who is interested can drive, I suggest, along Wilson Avenue from Avenue Road to Bathurst Street where there is a three-block-long bridge of ascending height, a not-so-miniature Burlington Skyway, constructed of drab, grey concrete, wending its way across front and back yards, almost into the very bedrooms of some homes. The hon. Minister himself, and his department officials, have stated on various occasions that they are in sympathy with the people affected. Therefore, sir, it is really unnecessary to establish the fact that these people have suffered, are suffering, and perhaps will suffer the rest of their lives through heavy financial loss.

This is the first basic. Grievous damage has been done. The second basic is pinpointing responsibility and, sir, this is no problem. It lies entirely and completely with The Department of Highways, an arm of this government; therefore, in the final analysis with the hon. members of this House. No matter how some of us may shift uneasily in our seat sometimes, we all know that under a democratic system, regardless of what may be done by or through any department, we are the ones who are responsible—you and I.

The estimates show almost $82 million for maintenance, $213 million for capital expenditures, and I am talking in infinitesimal proportions of these amounts. I repeat what I said in my maiden speech: That properly done, and I reiterate properly done, the cost would be almost negligible.

I am suggesting that a reasonable safety and green belt, uniform in width, be established in the residential area. I know I have a great deal of support from many hon. members, moral support from hon. members on all sides of this House. For this I thank them, because I repeat what I stated at the outset: I regret, sincerely regret, being so strong in my convictions, but this is my last opportunity to right an admitted wrong.

Many of my friends and personal supporters—and indeed, many of the homeowners affected by this problem—called me as late as last night, trying to dissuade me from making this second address, advising me that I had done all that I could for them and that I was only inviting personal political suicide within my own party.

My reply was twofold. If one is going to commit personal political suicide—and, incidentally, this I doubt—but if one is going to do this, it is better to do it honourably and openly and knowledgeably in the House for a good and worthwhile cause on behalf of one's constituents. This, perhaps, is my political naïveté, but I believe it to be my duty. Secondly, sir, as only one member of this great Conservative Party, I am expendable. The dynamic Conservative Party in this province, led by the finest leader in Canada today at any political level, is not. Therefore, if I sincerely and earnestly believe that wrong is being done, that the rights of our citizens are being violated, and if all other attempts have failed, it is my duty to bring it to the attention of this House and to the attention of my hon. fellow members.

No government can afford to ignore the rightful pleas of its citizens, to wantonly, shamelessly, recklessly, knowingly deprive and, yes, rob its citizens of their life savings. Power misused can become a cancer, a self-destructive cancer, continually gnawing and eating away until, in time, the very core and the very heart of the victim is destroyed.

I conclude, sir, by stating the assault on—yes, the rape of Armourdale—is now completed, and other victims lie in the path. I ask only that a re-examination of the damage be made and that justice be done. I urge the hon. Minister and his department to approach the problem anew, to use a positive approach not a negative one, to show a sense of fairness and justice. Anything less is unworthy of our government; anything less should not be tolerated.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Yorkview has the floor, unless he wants to yield it.

Mr. Singer: Probably on the same subject.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, the speech which we have just heard is a very refreshing one. If it is recalled, in my participation in the Speech from the Throne, I mentioned that there was enough dynamite in this younger crew to blow many members right off the Treasury benches. Now the fuse is sputtering and the explosions are starting. I also, at that time, advised the hon. members to keep their idealism; and if the hon. members across the floor do not update their thinking, then they should bump them clear of those Treasury benches.

Mr. Sopha: I prefer to hear from the hon. Minister.

Mr. Young: I think that we will give the hon. Minister an opportunity in a moment, because I want to raise another problem here just to add to this. The fact remains that this is the kind of idealism which I think this House appreciates and the kind of courage which is refreshing. I am not going to take too much time, because the case has already been presented, and presented in a very forceful and a very good way.

But I do want to bring to the attention of the hon. members of this House the situation on Lorne Bruce Drive in my riding, where the people have bought homes with picture windows facing Highway 401. At the present time there is open space with a gentle slope up to the old 401 in front of the homes. In the estimates for this year, on page 43, the Toronto by-pass estimates, provision is made for reconstruction from Keele Street to Jane Street and reconstruction involves an 18-foot wall which will come right to the edge of the street in front of these picture windows and these people then will look out upon a towering mass of concrete. Already they have dubbed this wall "The Berlin Wall", and this is what they will call it when it comes.

In the estimates we were told that a basket weave structure is to go on top of that wall; an interchange so that traffic can flow from a main thoroughfare out to the collector roads at the sides. So that what these people are now going to see through their picture windows is the Berlin Wall topped with a basket weave structure, and they are not happy about it.

Right along the whole section of this highway, Mr. Chairman, people are going to suffer very serious depreciation of their homes, as we have heard. This kind of depreciation should not have to be borne by the few people on the side of that highway. This is a highway being built for the good of the whole province and so the depreciation should be a charge upon all the people of the province.

On Lorne Bruce Drive—as well as in other places—The Department of Highways can certainly work out some financial arrangement, perhaps by taking an option on these houses and offering them then at public tender. It may be some of the present owners will tender themselves at lower prices, I do not know. But first of all, the price should be established as of the time previous to the reconstruction of the highway and then the public tenders will determine what the value is after the construction has gone forward.

So I urge, Mr. Chairman, upon the hon. Minister of Highways, that this matter be taken under serious advisement and that these people who are suffering this great loss of equity in their homes should have very serious consideration in these estimates.

Mr. Singer: Along with the hon. members for Armourdale and Yorkview and at least two other hon. members in this House—

Mr. Sopha: Who are the silent ones?

Mr. Singer: To be quite fair, most of the hon. members are affected—and there are six of us who have spoken in some form or other in connection with this matter. The hon. member for Armourdale described it as the rape of his riding. I would suggest it is really the rape of the whole of north Metro, because this problem is common to at least six provincial ridings; the ridings of York Mills, Armourdale, Downsview, Yorkview, Etobicoke and perhaps some others. I do not hesitate at all, Mr. Chairman, to pay to the hon. member for Armourdale the highest compliment. Had a speech such as he has given come from the benches of the official Opposition, I am certain that we would have been faced with all sorts of barracking and all sorts of suggestions about how foolish we were to put forward these ideas, the ideas nevertheless would have come forward. But it was an act of intense courage on the part of the hon. member to express himself, and express himself so forcefully.

I know how hard he has worked in studying this problem, how many meetings he has attended, and I have seen some of his files and have some idea as to how much effort he has put into trying to find a solution. But with him, I come to the end of the road in this problem. The answer lies on the government benches. The answer lies in the decision to be made by the hon. Minister of Highways.

And the question is a very simple one to which the hon. Minister, I hope later this afternoon, is going to provide an answer.

The question is: are a small group of citizens of Ontario, perhaps 300 in number, going to be forced to sacrifice themselves and their property, their assets that they worked so hard to amass, for the benefit of all of the people of Ontario, with the feeble excuse, with the ridiculous excuse, with the careless excuse, that we can do nothing?

This government can, if it wants, do something. When you see the pictures that the hon. member sent around the House; when you go out onto the ground and examine the chaos that has been created to these homes; when you talk to real estate agents; when you look at office buildings which previously were substantial assets to the people who bought them that are now completely unrentable; when you realize the havoc that has been caused by the action of The Department of Highways to these few people who are being called upon to pay for all of the people of Ontario—then if we must accept, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing that can be done, we must accept the fact that this is a heartless government.

This is the only answer, Mr. Chairman. If this government is not prepared to put a few more dollars into the $12 million expenditure it talks about in its book, to compensate these people who are going to be so grievously hurt and who are so grievously hurt, then this is a heartless government.

I do not think anything more than I can add is going to present the case better than that presented by the hon. member for Armourdale, the hon. member for Yorkview and the other people who have spoken, or the remarks made previously by several hon. members of this House.

As my hon. friend from Yorkview said, it is not just a question of giving it careful consideration. There have been months of time in which anybody in this House and particularly the hon. Minister, has had time to consider it. All the hon. Minister has to do is talk to any one of his departmental officials who have come into the various meetings that have been held to listen to the rate-payers. One after another—and the department for reasons best known to itself always sent a different team—one after another, various officials got up and said, "We extend you our deepest sympathy".

Surely the government of Ontario can do something more than express sympathy when it itself has done a wrong.

Mr. D. Bales (York Mills): Mr. Chairman, when Highway 401 was first begun, a green, or landscaping strip, was provided on either side of Highway 401 pavement. I do not believe it was put there merely as a precaution for future widening, but rather, I believe, it was put there for a purpose, a safety factor—a precaution for those adjoining the highway. It seems to me that if the hon. Minister and the department will accept that principle, which was apparently previously adopted by the department and adhere to it, particularly in these built-up areas, that they will solve much of this problem.

In my particular area—and I will not speak only for them—there is the fear of the unknown, because the widening of the highway has not reached this area as yet but it shall within the next year or two. Already it is having an adverse effect in that they do not know how close the actual pavement, the driving areas, will come to their own properties. If throughout this section, and other Metropolitan areas in this province where 401 must cut through existing areas, if we can have such a policy established—I am sure that the hon. Minister is giving consideration to this, for he has told me, and I believe he has told the hon. member for Armourdale and others, that he is giving consideration to this—but if we can have a policy so there will be a space between the actual driving portion of this highway and adjoining properties, a clear and definable and irrevocable set-back, then we will help these people and help them immeasurably.

For indeed they do need to be helped and they deserve this consideration. I am sure that the hon. Minister is considering this and I am waiting to hear his decision.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Chairman, I would like first of all to add my words of tribute to the courageous speech that was made by the hon. member for Armourdale. He has said, on more than one occasion, all that has to be said with reference to this problem. I am not going to go into any details as far as the riding of Etobicoke is concerned, except that the problem, as we have it, is a very minor one compared to Yorkview, Armourdale and Downsview.

I know that all hon. members of the House will join with me when I ask the hon. Minister if he will not tell us when some concrete action will be taken. If no action is going to be taken, I think it behooves the hon. Minister to stand up and say he is not going to take any action. I do not think it is fair for the people concerned to be kept on a string worrying as to what is going to happen.

Mr. T. L. Wells (Scarborough North): Mr. Chairman, also representing a riding through which Highway 401 runs and where it is anticipated it will be widened, I would like to reiterate some of the sentiments made by the hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Armourdale and the hon. member for York Mills. I think, Mr. Chairman, the biggest problem in the riding of Scarborough North is the fear of the unknown. We do not know just how it is going to affect the area, although I am thankful, as the hon. member for Etobicoke is, Mr. Chairman, that because our riding is still largely undeveloped along 401 except for commercial development, the problem will not be nearly as great as it has been in some of the other areas. But I do think that there are areas that will be affected and that the principle of a green strip, as has been certainly established in the past, is one worthy of consideration. I hope that the hon. Minister will consider this, that where the highway pavement comes right to the edge of someone's property, it will be considered that a green strip, at least equal to what was in effect before the highway was widened, will be considered and instituted.

I think another problem that is faced, particularly in my riding and in those where the actual work has not yet begun, is this fear of what is going to happen. I hope the department will consider a public relations programme and institute meetings with residents who are in close proximity to the highway and explain to them exactly what is going to happen. I hope that when these meetings are held The Department of Highways will be able, in a concrete way, to tell them that they are going to establish some form of green strip and that this widening will not be a problem that will seriously affect them or their properties.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I think at the outset that I should say to the hon. member for Armourdale and, of course, the hon. members who spoke, that no one needs to apologize for his convictions along these lines.

Addressing my remarks principally to the hon. member for Armourdale, because I think he made the case generally and those who spoke after him simply attempted to amplify what had already been said, I shall say to the hon. member that his concern and the concern of those for whom he speaks, is quite understandable.

Mr. Sopha: Then why did the hon. Minister not give him an appointment between September and January and why did he have to wait? Tell us the answer to that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to you, sir, that if this hon. member will be patient for a few moments, I shall do my best to discuss what is a matter of serious concern to a lot of people without these frivolities.

Mr. Sopha: Frivolities. On a point of order, I take exception to that. I take great exception to that. It is not a frivolity at all, it is a very good question. Why, he had to wait from September to January.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I regard it as frivolous under the circumstances. The hon. member can have any opinion he likes about that.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister is losing his temper.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I am not, I am quite serious about this, and I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, and I want to say to the hon. member for Armourdale, and I want to say to every hon. member of this House that I am not insensitive to these problems that have been discussed here today.

I would refer the hon. member to a meeting in January, held, I believe, on January 30, at which time I was pleased to receive himself and representatives of the Highway 401 Ratepayers Association. I would also suggest to the hon. member that I had a meeting previous to that with him in my office and certain other people who are interested in this problem.

At the meeting on January 30, those whom the hon. member represents in the persons of the Highway 401 Ratepayers Association did present to me a brief. I felt, and I feel now, that every proposal that was submitted in that brief was worthy of very careful and very understanding consideration, and if I am not mistaken I believe the hon. member will attest to the fact that I directed on that occasion that every proposal that was made be thoroughly investigated. I further indicated to those who were in attendance that I did not see how we could possibly have anything to report to them for a period of less than two months. I believe that the hon. member will substantiate that.

While I have said in unequivocal terms that I am not insensitive to these problems, I also suggest to you, sir, and I suggest to the House, that when the reference is made to positive action, does this mean pursuing a situation in a unilateral manner, or should the Minister with any sense of responsibility, certainly, carefully and exhaustively investigate all sides of a difficult situation? Assuredly, Mr. Chairman, there are two sides to this situation. Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I am not in any sense of the word suggesting that a preconceived idea or a preconceived decision exists. I do not think it ever has on the part of my staff, it certainly never has on my part. However, I would like to suggest that I have no intention at this moment of minimizing the problem that confronts these people, because it is a very serious problem, as each and every one of us knows and only has to ask himself whether if he were confronted with the same problem, would he feel identically the same as they do.

On the other hand, I say this, and I want to repeat as positively as I can, that while we are going to examine the other side of the problem, it does not mean to infer that this preconceived decision has been reached. The other side of the problem is simply this—and nobody knows it better than the hon. member for Downsview, Mr. Chairman, because he at one time, headed a municipal government —that the effects of the decision, whatever it may be when it is made, can have a similar effect on every similar jurisdiction in the province, with like problems.

I assure you, Mr. Chairman, I assure the hon. members, that in line with what I regard as my responsibility, I propose to investigate that side of the problem as well.

I submit then, sir, that until both sides of this problem have been thoroughly investigated, and all pertinent matters relating to the problems have been thoroughly investigated, I will not, I cannot, in line with my responsibilities, make any decision. It will be made when these thorough investigations—and I assure you, sir, they will be thorough; every related matter will be weighed and carefully considered—have been completed. There are no preconceived decisions or ideas in existence at the moment.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I listened with very great interest to the remarks of the hon. Minister. I found out just one little bit of information that I was not aware of until he spoke, that was that when the brief was presented by the Highway 401 Ratepayers Association, the hon. member for Armourdale was there.

I am delighted that at least one hon. member who had spoken in this House upon this matter, before the meeting took place, was allowed to attend. I would have thought it would have only been courtesy to have invited all hon. members who were concerned with this problem, no matter whether they were Liberal members, NDP members or Conservative members. But that was not done.

However, I again congratulate the hon. member for Armourdale for the fight he has been carrying on; and perhaps he has got an easier entrée into the hon. Minister's office than some of the rest of us.

But let me draw to the hon. Minister's attention these facts: He became aware of this problem long before January 30. Or, if he did not, then a whole series of his departmental staff are not doing their job, because this matter came to the forefront early in September of 1963, and many reported speeches were carried in the newspapers. There were many public meetings and, as I said before, Mr. Chairman, to each of those meetings the hon. Minister's office was requested to send officials, and they did send officials. I met, during the course of four or five meetings I attended, I would think, at least 15 different departmental officials. This went on through the fall.

Unless those people did not go back to the department and report to the hon. Minister, which I find very hard to believe, then the hon. Minister knew of this long before January 30. The hon. Minister must have known about it, good politician that he is. He must have known about it, being the Minister of Highways, the first time it hit the newspapers, and that was early in September. So we have September, October, November, December, January and February, to March 17. The hon. Minister says there are two sides. I agree with the hon. Minister. There are always two sides to any problem.

What is being suggested here, by all the hon. members who have spoken, is that the government add X dollars—and no one can identify that figure at the moment—to the cost of the highway.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is one further point. These X dollars which are asked, to be devoted to the care and attention of the people who have been done this grievous wrong, are asked to be given only to do equity to a tiny group of people who are being penalized in the name of all of the people of Ontario. And, after September, October, November, December, January, February, March, one would have thought that, when his estimates came forward on March 17, we would have had the answer for better or for worse, so that the answer could have been debated on the floor of this House, Mr. Chairman, not just a promise of further investigation.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Chairman, might I swing the minds and thoughts and voices of some of these jaundiced members in the Toronto area up to the great fresh breezes of northwestern Ontario.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): We dealt with your area yesterday and you were not here.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I have listened to you, and a little while later I will be talking to the hon. leader of the NDP (Mr. MacDonald) about some things he said yesterday, but I will not right now. This will be in a Budget speech, if I have a chance to give one.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the highways department in this province has done more to open up the great northwestern part of this province than any other department of government and the north was never opened up until a Conservative government came in in 1943. Before that time, one great road opening I attended in the town of Geraldton was to do honour to a piece of road the great Liberal government had built, running six miles from Geraldton to Creelman Creek. That was the type of highway building done in those days, under the Liberal administration. My friend, the hon. leader of the Liberal group (Mr. Oliver), who is a great friend of mine, will remember those days well.

The only road we had each year, in Port Arthur and Fort William, was from the cities down to the Pigeon River bridge. That was a yearly contract for about six or seven miles, and was paved with a pavement probably half an inch thick. It was a yearly contract, and that road, for years, was so bad that it took two days to go to Duluth—our only outlet.

Then my mind goes back to the trans-Canada highway, when it was started by the Bennett government around the shore of Lake Superior. The Liberal government came in in the federal House, then all those contracts were stopped; every camp was closed down; every contractor went into bankruptcy; but we, in the north, still had our railways, thank God. That was the Liberal record on roads in northern Ontario, which is on record for you to read.

Let us see what has happened since that time, under Conservative governments. Any of you, who have the privilege to come up to my area, will see the great trans-Canada highway. I will give credit to the Liberal government in Ottawa for putting up part of the money, for a scenic road of benefit to transport companies and the public, there is no more beautiful highway in the world. One mile of that road—the hon. Minister knows the mile of which I am speaking—cost almost $2 million, through rock-cuts 70 or 85 feet high along the Lake Superior shore. It is something which is not only of benefit to industry, but of great benefit for its scenic value—a marvellous piece of road construction.

Then we have Highway 11. Let me tell you of some of these roads; they are a part of our northwestern Ontario development.

Final contracts were awarded last year for the completion of the Atikokan-Fort Frances section of Highway 11, with expectations that this major road artery will be ready for traffic late in 1964, or early 1965, including the Rainy Lake causeway. You know something about that, Mr. Chairman, because we are going to try to have it called after you. It is a great piece of construction, exceeding $17 million in cost, to bring in a tourist area which will bring thousands and thousands of American tourists. And those from the eastern part of Ontario, from Metro Toronto—who will be grieving so much about the land appropriated for roads and that they have not been paid enough for the land. Eastern Ontario citizens will want to come up to the north and see something beautiful in the great northwest—including our great highways.

Opened in the past three years was the Spruce River resources road, to the heart of the Thunder Bay pulp forests. Then the Manitouwadge-Caramat industrial highway—a new resource road which this government built with the help of Marathon Paper Co. This was the first road built under the policy of the roads to resources, to see that our great mineral and forest wealth was opened up for the benefit of the people of this great province.

The Ignace-Savant Lake link of the roadway to Pickle Lake, beyond the Albany River to the great Pickle Crow gold mine, to open up that area there. That is the road this government has built, in spite of the discrimination and the objection of the Opposition in this very Legislature where I am speaking today.

The new international bridge at Pigeon River, and new sections of Highway 61, eliminating the former highway route of steep grades and sharp curves. Reconstruction of the trans-Canada highway between the Lakehead and Manitoba continued, and paving of the Red Lake highway also made progress.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Do they pay the hon. Minister for overtime?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: For some of the things the hon. member has said recently, he is not going to be paid overtime; but when the next election comes along the people of every area will probably take their toll—which he will regret.

Mr. Sopha: Do not rub it in.

An hon. member: That goes for you, too, Elmer.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Of significance, Mr. Chairman, to the northwest, was the opening of the international bridge at Sault Ste. Marie, as my friend, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Wishart) will remember.

Mr. Sopha: Get up and take a bow.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: A great $24 million project, eliminating a bottleneck ferry service and enabling easier access to the Lake Superior section of the great trans-Canada highway for our American friends. Acutely needed rebuilt and paved highway links for Sioux Lookout and Manitowadge to the trans-Canada—that great mineral producer which would not have been able to get its product to the markets of the world had it not been for this government putting in that branch from Highway 17.

Mr. Sopha: Is that why the hon. Minister goes in by helicopter?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: No, it is just because my time is taken up sitting here in this House listening to the hon. member, when I could be out doing better things.

Mr. Sopha: Very useful employee.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): What are we doing now?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: These important northwestern communities, for far too long under a Liberal government, had been served by obsolete and dangerous roads. Urgent also is road access to the nickel mining and smelting community at Werner Lake in the Kenora area and improvement of the Fort Frances-Kenora highway cannot be delayed. With that we agree; the hon. Minister agrees. These matters will be attended to.

Mr. Whicher: How does the hon. Minister know?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: The only reason we do not do more of this is because the hon. members object to the money we are spending now for these necessities.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the hon. Minister reading from?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: This is the last report of the Ontario Development Association, and I am reading to be polite to the hon. member. If I gave my own thoughts they would be more ambitious than this, because I have seen every foot of every one of these roads I am speaking about.

Mr. Sopha: You are destroying my faith.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: To eliminate hazards at rail crossings, overpasses were completed or are under way on the trans-Canada highway near the Lakehead and near English River—tremendous big overpasses are being built that really do cost something to build and will last for years. Another is at Dryden, and an improved subway is projected at Sioux Lookout. Secondary road extensions were authorized, planned and built to Northern Light Lake near the eastern border of Quetico Park. In the Red Lake and Sioux Lookout areas initial work was planned on a new road from Pickle Lake to the Manitoba border. Another resource road is the great road going from Pickle Crow Mines over to West Lingman Lake, which has already unearthed many mineral treasures up in that far northern area.

Mr. Sopha: Where?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Mr. Chairman, I want to say this, our Lakehead by-pass is now past the planning stage and will be commenced, I imagine, some time this year. It is a great by-pass, or ring road, to go on the outside of both those cities at a cost of millions of dollars and we are undertaking other projects too numerous to mention. I am telling you that The Department of Highways has done a great job for the north as it has right here in Metropolitan Toronto. When we criticize and talk about the things that have not been done, money is the only thing that has prevented this great department from doing a better job than it has already done.

Mr. Sopha: Two government members and two Opposition members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: All right, if you in the Opposition benches would stop once in a while carping and criticizing, we would be privileged to get on much faster with this great work. I have no hesitation in saying that there is not one of you men over there who can tell me that any time you have gone to see our Department of Highways that you were not treated with courtesy and consideration. I would like anybody to get up and deny that in this House. I know it is not a fact.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): I will get up and deny that right now.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Pardon?

Mr. Sargent: I cannot even get an appointment.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I cannot accept that remark. Only if the money was not available would the highways department refuse a good request. That is the only reason the hon. member would be refused.

Mr. Sargent: I cannot even get an—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: And then the hon. member would come in the House and vote against the money to do it with, and then kick when it was not done although the hon. member well knew the reason why.

Before I close, Mr. Chairman, I would like to pay a tribute to the hon. Minister and the men in The Department of Highways. I believe that our hon. Minister—

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): What about the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts)?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Well, the hon. Prime Minister—we do not have to praise him in this House. Every person in the province of Ontario is doing that every day outside, so it does not matter whether we do it here or not. I just want to say that this hon. Minister, in my opinion, sir, is one of the hardest-working Ministers that this province has ever had. I have been in this House many years. I do not know whether there is one man over there who has been in this House longer than I have.

Mr. Thompson: Why do you have to praise him?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: All right, say so if you have. Ah, the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver), and he is one of the men who criticizes the least. He has seen what this department has done. All of the hon. members over there know the way they are treated by the present Minister of Highways, with courtesy and kindness and consideration. There is never anything he turns down that is asked for, provided he has the funds to do it with and thinks it is necessary.

Mr. Sopha: He will not answer his mail; is that courtesy?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: He does not answer until he gets the answer himself to give you. Some of the hon. members, if they get a letter, just say, "Oh, yes, I will do it so and so—" and then forget all about it. But he does not do that.

Mr. Sopha: George, you are destroying my faith in Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I am very sorry if I have done that. I think so highly of the hon. member and the great riding up at Sudbury that I certainly would not like to say anything derogatory about the hon. member.

I also want to say a word, Mr. Chairman, about the staff of The Department of Highways. Right from the top down—and I have known many of them—when they were far below the positions they occupy today—and all through those years my association with them has been kindly—they have been considerate and they have done everything they possibly could do to assist me and the great area which I represent.

Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say these things because I believe them in my heart. I wanted to say them publicly so that these men would realize that the opinions of other members of this Legislature—and they are often critical—certainly do not apply to all of us here. I say, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Minister and his staff, to carry on in the way they are doing and this province will be noted throughout the world for the beautiful highways and the multiplicity of highways that we have. It will grow in the years to come and this will be one of the places where tourists can get to the farthest part of our province through good roads. There will be facilities on these highways to look after the public, because these facilities cannot be built until the roads are built. I think The Department of Highways staff in this province has done a good job and I want to compliment it sincerely for it.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I was pleased last night to hear the news of the hon. Minister when he announced that tenders would be called for the completion of the two south lanes of Highway 401 between Tempo and Tilbury in southwestern Ontario. Also a few weeks ago I was pleased to hear the hon. Minister announce that the interchanges, underpasses and overpasses in that area will be built this year or contracts will be called, also that contracts will be called for four service centres in that area and maybe completed this year.

But I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister that these two north lanes have been a hazard to the travelling public in southwestern Ontario since they were officially opened last October. There have been too many accidents, too many deaths on that two-lane strip between Tilbury and Tempo. I know the hon. Minister came through that area last year and said, "Why the delay?" and "There is not sufficient money to complete Highway 401, the south two lanes."

However, this afternoon, I tried to find out, or since last week I have tried to find out, how many accidents there were between October and the present time on that two-lane highway strip. Of course, we have been given the runaround from one department to another, Mr. Chairman, and it finally winds up that this information is not available to the hon. members of this House or to the official Opposition.

They referred us to regulation number 143, section 5, which information is only available to the courts. This seems to be unusual and it is a great surprise to me that this information is not available to the members of the Opposition in this House.

Another matter I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister, too, before he answers these remarks of mine, is that we see in different papers where new cloverleaf designs require more land. In two county roads in southwestern Ontario, the interchanges were surveyed and fenced, and outside this interchange a businessman applied for a permit to build a place of business. This past summer he built a place of business and this winter along came the officials of The Department of Highways and informed him that the land will be needed for a new-design cloverleaf.

It states in this paper that this may take place at every cloverleaf across the province of Ontario, which means a change in 102 cloverleafs from one end of Highway 401 at Windsor to the other at Quebec, which means a staggering amount of money. I might say that it is estimated that two of these interchanges—with the new buildings which will have to be paid for and the Department of Highways needs land—it is estimated that it will run into $100,000 at these two county roads.

Now with the increase in the gasoline tax it is staggering that these reports come out in the paper. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear the hon. Minister's comments on these things.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, with respect to this matter of accidents on the north lane section of 401, I would say that if we do not provide you with this information as accurately as we can within the next few days, the hon. member should feel free to rise in the House and ask it over again because this information is available. We do sometimes have to assemble it, Mr. Chairman, from The Department of the Attorney General, the Ontario Provincial Police and The Department of Transport, but it can be obtained and hon. members can have a record of these accidents and where they took place.

In certain situations I think you will understand that we are not able to comment on the causes and the nature of and the responsibility of those who may have been associated in these accidents, because they may be under investigation by the courts. But we will certainly give the hon. member a record of where they took place to the extent I mentioned.

With respect to this property matter associated with the interchanges on the section of Highway 401 between Tempo and Tilbury, I am prepared to say to you that in the circumstances you describe, there were some problems. But I am also prepared to say, and I know you will be relieved to know, that they have been all resolved. We have been down to see these people; we have redesigned some of the quadrants of the interchanges to the point where their property is not going to be affected or required.

In each and every circumstance, I can say to you, Mr. Chairman, the problems to which the hon. member makes reference have been satisfactorily resolved and we have taken steps to ensure that those problems cannot recur.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the hon. Minister that we are concerned, too, that when the tourist season comes along, the traffic will increase greatly in that portion of 401 and in that area. I ask the hon. Minister to accelerate this work as much as possible. I think if he does it will help prevent accidents and maybe save lives.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I will not speak on Highway 401, I will speak on 200½, because that is all we happen to have in southwestern Ontario, the north two lanes. When we get the other two lanes then we will call it 401.

The hon. Minister mentioned yesterday that he was going to proceed with the requesting of tenders for the paving of the other two lanes. I would like the hon. Minister to assure us that 401 will be completed in 1964 as, I understand, he said yesterday; because in reading from the Windsor Daily Star of yesterday, we understand that 401 will not be completed until 1965. Mr. Chairman, if it is 1965, it is the old story over again.

We come in one year and we are told it will be completed in the following year. One year the weather interferes; the next year there is something else that will interfere. We would like assurance from the hon. Minister that 401 will be completed in 1964, because he has already assured the municipality of Windsor by letter at one time that they were going to accelerate the paving of the other two lanes of 401. Surely if they were going to accelerate it, it would not be difficult to pave—I think it is 68 more miles, approximately 68 miles, of ready graded road, all except for the concrete ribbon.

He knows the importance of this to the community at the extreme southwest of the province. We would not request this be done were we not in the position that we have been in ever since the Ford Motor Company decided to concentrate their manufacturing in the Toronto area. We have approximately 7,000 still unemployed and it is of vital importance to us to get the complete concrete four-lane ribbon from the Windsor area right through to Toronto.

We need it now for the sake of tourism, for the sake of industry and agriculture. The longer this government procrastinates and holds off, the more difficult it is going to be for the people in the Windsor area to attempt to overcome the deficiencies that they are confronted with as a result of being an extremity in this province.

Can the hon. Minister at this time assure us that 401 will be completed in 1964?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member was in his seat yesterday. He must have heard me say that all contracts would be called in a matter of weeks for the completion of the south lane of 401. He would also have heard me say that if we got a few breaks from the weather and the other associated breaks that we need in terms of construction problems, and we have them, then he would also have, I think, sensed, or heard the acknowledgement made by his seat-mate, the hon. member for Kent West (Mr. McKeough), when reference was made to a weather situation a few years ago when road building equipment was idle for a period of 30 days and quite visibly so; then he would know that I made no promise that it would be completed in 1964 because as yet, Mr. Chairman, I have found no way to control the weather.

However, I repeat, and I hope it is for the last time, that this section of Highway 401 will be completed if we get the breaks we need, weather and otherwise.

Now last year I recall the hon. member played to me, or sang to me, the first version of the Newman refrain and—

Mr. Sopha: Pretty nasty today, are you not?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, I am not. I am just being a little positive for a change.

Mr. Sopha: Do not get nasty with me.

Mr. Bryden: A good thing he sang the refrain.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Very well, but if he will recall the remarks that were made a year ago, it was simply suggested that we would have the north lanes paved and finished. When we were questioned about that I think I recall myself saying that I will promise nothing else but that we would proceed upon the completion of the north lanes with contracts to complete the south lanes. I make the same statement here today, but, of course, Mr. Chairman, for me to promise something that may well be impossible would be nonsense. I simply tell you that we are going to award these contracts and if we get the breaks we need the road will be finished. If we do not, it is because it is humanly impossible to do it.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I strongly object to the hon. Minister's remarks stating if I were here! May I inform the House that I was in my seat in this House yesterday as long, if not longer, than was the hon. Minister, and I make it a point to be here practically all of the time.

Mr. Chairman, with two hon. members from Windsor not feeling too well, I see to it that I am here all the time.

An hon. member: Three!

Mr. Newman: Well, possibly three. The hon. Minister mentioned the Newman refrain. He will hear the Newman refrain as long as the people from Windsor send me to this House. Were we not to have problems in the Windsor area, I would be here patting the hon. Minister on the back. But because we have problems and because the good people in Windsor recognize ability, they send me here.

And I like me too! Mr. Chairman, they threw in the best opponent they could have in the last election and my majority went up substantially.

Mr. Chairman, in last year's Hansard the hon. Minister says:

However, let me assure you that paving operations will continue without interruption until four lanes are completed over the entire length of Highway 401.

We heard this story last year. So you will hear that Newman refrain up until the time you have 401 completed, four lanes. Up until that time it will be only 200½ and not 401 to us.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think it is noteworthy that under the estimates of every single department the hon. Minister of Mines stands up and heaps fulsome praise on the hon. Ministers and departments concerned. And yet when the estimates of The Department of Mines were before this House, not one hon. Minister opposite got up to say even one nice thing about the hon. Minister of Mines. It was so obvious at the time, Mr. Chairman, that I felt impelled to step into the breach myself; but, unfortunately, try as I could, I could not think of a single thing to say and I judge that the hon. Minister's colleagues suffered from the same disability.

Mr. Chairman, last night when we were dealing with vote 801, I tried to raise the matter of the fair wage policy of The Department of Highways. At the time you called to my attention that that question could more properly be discussed under vote 803, and I would like to deal with it briefly at this time. Before you ruled me out of order last night, I had called to the attention of the hon. Minister the fact that this government, in relation to fair wage policies, is at least 40 years behind the federal government.

We continue, in this province, to do no more on construction contracts than to insert a minimum wage in the contract. The minimum wage is now $1.30 an hour. I would suggest to the hon. Minister that it is most unlikely that any contractor could get anybody to work on construction work for less than $1.30 an hour, so that the minimum he has inserted there is really quite meaningless. It is a gesture in the direction of a fair wage policy without any of the substance of such a policy.

I also expressed surprise last night that we had made no further progress than that in the direction of fair wage policies, because it had certainly been my impression that the government had announced last year that it intended to implement a genuine fair wage policy. This, I suppose, was one of many pieces of window-dressing prior to the election which have now gone down the drain. But I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister that this is an important issue. It is one on which he should, no doubt, seek the assistance and advice of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree); but fundamentally, I think, since it relates to contracts let by his department, it is his responsibility.

The federal programme, which has been in effect for at least 40 years, is that whenever a construction contract is let, one of the schedules attached to it is a schedule of minimum wages, specifying that wages below the figure set forth may not be paid for the different categories of labour specified. Those wages are drawn up by the federal Department of Labour on the basis of going wages in the localities concerned, and the federal Department of Labour is responsible to make sure that the wages are actually paid.

It seems to me that this government, with the kind of contracts they are entering into, should also adopt such a policy. They would undoubtedly need the assistance of The Department of Labour, but the implementation of such a policy, in my opinion, would not impose an undue burden on the staff of The Department of Labour. It would be necessary to draw up schedules for different localities and to revise them from time to time. But the federal government is doing that all the time, and I am quite certain that the federal Department of Labour would be quite prepared to let the provincial government have access to its work in that field.

They collect a lot of their information now through the national employment offices and it is public information, anybody can have it. I am sure a co-operative arrangement could be worked out with the federal government, whereby wage schedules could be drawn up for the different categories of labour involved on highway construction, with very little additional work on the part of the civil service of this province.

Once again, I regret to say, it is necessary to make this plea; but I am once again making a plea to the hon. Minister that this is the kind of policy that should be adopted—it is the only adequate policy. The hon. Minister mentioned last night that an increasing number of the people working for contractors on construction work are becoming organized and are now working under union contracts. That is a welcome development, and will no doubt ensure that a large percentage of the employees on these contracts get fair and reasonable wages. But I think the fact that many of the employees are now organized makes it all the more necessary to have fair wage schedules in the contracts. It now becomes, or may become, possible for a contractor whose work force is not organized, and who may be paying very much lower wages to get an unfair advantage over those paying good wages, in bidding on contracts offered by the department.

I think the fact that some of the employees are organized makes it desirable that standards of wages should be set for all those who wish to bid on government contracts, so that there will be no possibility that a contractor will gain a competitive advantage on the basis of low wages. I would think anyone in this House would agree that that is an undesirable form of competition. The whole purpose, or one of the main purposes, of a fair wage policy is to prevent that sort of competition.

Another purpose, of course, and I think a most important purpose, is that governments should set an example in the treatment of labour. They should not let contracts to anyone unless they are quite certain that the people who earn their living by working for the contractors to fulfil the contract will be decently paid, and will have decent conditions of labour. It is too bad that we have to bring this up year after year but, as far as I am concerned, I am going to bring it up every year until the government is prepared to state that it has adopted an adequate fair wage policy.

I must say I missed the opportunity to raise this matter under the estimates of The Department of Public Works. As I say, I have been under the impression that a more adequate policy had been adopted. I do not know if it has been in Public Works, but apparently from what the hon. Minister told us yesterday it has not been adopted in The Department of Highways. As for his minimum wage of $1.30 an hour, I would suggest to him that in, what the gentlemen opposite always like to refer to as the banner province of Ontario—and I believe it is the banner province of Ontario—a minimum wage of $1.30 an hour on government contracts is an absolute disgrace.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, could I ask one question of the hon. Minister? I notice on page—

Mr. Chairman: The leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to get some information from the hon. Minister. I will be sorry for the hon. Minister of Mines if it does not turn into a criticism, because far be it from me to walk away from anything that might be construed as criticism of the government. As the hon. member for York South said yesterday, it is our responsibility to criticize when the opportunity presents itself. It is most difficult, of course, for the Opposition to find things into which we can really get our teeth into and get information which will help us correct the way we have trod in the past.

I want to ask the hon. Minister some questions relating to Highway 401, principally through the city of Toronto. This will be, I presume, an auxiliary contract to the main contracts which are being let. It is contract No. 63318, and it has to do with tree planting. It says from Avenue Road to Hogg's Hollow—that will be the area in which the trees are to be planted.

I have in my hand a list of the verified bids for this tree-planting project. A further examination reveals that this call was for 400 trees, and they are to be white spruce, which is quite an ordinary tree for Ontario, and Austrian pine. As I will relate in a moment or so, I am presuming, on the evidence that I have, that Austrian pine and white spruce are similar in value, because the latter part of the contract reads that the contractor may provide 200 white spruce or Austrian pine. So presumably, from a cost level, they are on precisely the same basis.

These 400 trees were to be planted. I have not any idea whether they are planted at the moment or not, but certainly the contract is let. Two hundred of these were to be brought in from Kipling—no, Liverpool sideroad—and if you ask how far that is they will tell you it is 24 miles, or in the vicinity of 20 to 24 miles. Apparently 200 of these trees were growing on highway property at the Liverpool sideroad, and it was considered to be wise on the part of The Department of Highways to bring 200 of these trees in and replant them in the area that I have noted—the Avenue Road-Hogg's Hollow area. The other 200 trees were to be provided by the contractor, secured, I imagine, from a nursery.

The contract was let for $55,600 for 400 trees. That works out, if my arithmetic is any good at all, to about $140 a tree. I hope they look good when they get them planted in Hogg's Hollow and in that area, because $140 a tree is a lot of money. It would seem to me to be an indication that The Department of Highways is not husbanding its resources very properly, when it pays $140 a tree to have 400 trees planted.

If it wanted 200 white spruce trees, surely it could have secured these from The Department of Lands and Forests. Surely there is enough co-operation between departments that they have not got to go out and buy these trees at these prices and have them planted to the extent that the total contract comes to $55,600. I would like to ask the hon. Minister, is this a fair cost to attach to the planting of trees on the highways of this province? Is that about your average cost, about $140 per tree? Is it?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It would appear to work out to about that, Mr. Chairman. Of course, I think I should say it involves more than the cost of the actual tree. I may require to get more information on this for the hon. leader of the Opposition but I think he would go along with me when I say that there is more than the cost of the tree involved. There is the transportation, there is the cost of keeping them alive, I guess, and there is the cost of planting them. I must confess I do not know what this should properly cost, but I will be more than happy to find out and get this information, possibly this afternoon by phone. If that will—

Mr. Oliver: I just cannot for the life of me see the justification for digging up 200 trees out at Liverpool sideroad, or wherever it is, transporting them over 20 miles into Hogg's Hollow and planting them there at the terrific cost entailed in this contract. I think it is a waste of public money.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, at the moment, until I have more information, I am obliged to say that it looks like a lot of money to me. We will see if I can offer some more information to the hon. leader of the Opposition very shortly.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. Minister is looking into it, I wonder if he could ascertain too—not just a little p.s. to my hon. leader's remarks—what happened to the trees that were there before the department started widening, because there were a number of trees that were growing there and they just seem to have vanished.

Mr. Bryden: The bulldozer got them.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would say to the hon. member, if those trees are not there now I think he can safely assume that they had to be removed.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I am sure they did but why could they not be replanted instead of the hundred-and-forty-dollar trees?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There again, I am informed that everything that was salvageable and could be replanted from those trees was handled in that manner. I am not a tree expert, I must tell you. We will have to get some more information.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough North has the floor.

Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to say that even though we may have some problems, I am sure that all hon. members of this House would agree that we have one of the finest Ministers of Highways that we have ever had. Certainly, while we may have a few problems, we all feel this way toward him.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wells: I would like to again just say a few words about Highway 401, but on another aspect of this highway and one I think which will find favour with most hon. members of this House.

I am sure that we are all heartened with the hon. Minister's words when he says that the highway is nearing completion, and we know that it will be completed very shortly. In this regard, Mr. Chairman, I feel that the naming of this highway is wrong. Four-o-one may have been all right when this was just little strips of unconnected highway across the province, but now when we have highways designated 402, 403, 406, and so forth, I feel that some consideration should be given to renaming Highway 401.

When we look around North America, particularly down in the United States, we find that there is the New York State Thruway, the Pennsylvania Turnpike, the Garden State Parkway, the John F. Kennedy Expressway, and even here the Frederick G. Gardiner Expressway.

Here in Ontario we have a beautiful functional highway, a black ribbon of progress that spreads right across this great province of opportunity from the Quebec border to the city of Windsor. I think that it is the road that we could say is Main Street, Ontario, and I think it should have a name fitting of the position of distinction which it holds. I would like to suggest two alternatives to the hon. Minister for his consideration.

As we approach the centennial year in 1967, perhaps it might be an idea to institute a contest in all the schools in the counties through which this road runs, and have the students submit names which they think would be applicable to this great highway. Or, Mr. Chairman, if this is not thought feasible, I would suggest for the consideration of the hon. Minister that the highway be named the Leslie M. Frost Thruway.

Mr. Whicher: How about the Lester Pearson Highway?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I am going to make some observations now to the hon. member who has just spoken, and I do this at the risk of incurring the displeasure of certain senior members of my staff.

I concur with the hon. member, I think there is nothing less romantic about a highway than a number. I personally believe that the point is well taken. I would also associate certain problems with that. I am sure the hon. members will bear me out, that from the administrative point of view, there are problems associated with names versus numbers. Nevertheless, I simply say to the hon. member that he finds the Minister very sympathetic to his proposal. It is going to be considered and I would find myself quite happy if somehow we could accomplish just what has been suggested here today.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Yorkview has the floor.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Minister regarding an item which is outlined on page 54, referring to the highway east of Gananoque. I notice that 401 at that point does not use Highway No. 2. I can understand that. It would have to be rebuilt in toto, but it also seems to be ignoring the partial highway which was built some years ago, with the dual bridges and which was just reconstructed in part some years ago. The route outlined on the map seems to be midway between the two present routes. It may be because of the type of granite along there, or the fact that the bridges may be too narrow, I do not know what the reason is. But there must be some good reason and I would direct the question to the hon. Minister as to what the reason is, why the old route is abandoned along the lake and the new route is being placed midway between these two roads.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would say to the hon. member that we feel that a new alignment for the controlled-access facility is required. The section of highway he refers to, firstly almost prohibits appropriate control of access. It is not built to adequate standards associated with the standards we use for the construction of these controlled-access freeways. Second, we think we would be well advised to retain this road that you refer to in its present state, because it is one of the best scenic drives in the province.

This is, Mr. Chairman, what has prompted us to move the alignment for the four-lane controlled-access section of 401. There are a number of other associated problems, but frankly, we have all too few of these scenic drives throughout the province and we think it is folly to destroy them all. So these essentially are the reasons why it is being done.

Mr. Young: Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Wentworth East has the floor.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, yesterday morning when I picked up my book that had been presented to us by the hon. Minister regarding the capital construction programme, there was also attached a letter asking the hon. members to regard the contents as confidential until we had begun at least to deal with his estimates.

Before I got the book and had even opened it, I opened the Globe and Mail and I saw an article which was an announcement by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) that the Ontario government was going to spend $500,000 for an 18-mile stretch of highway between highway 576 and Timmins.

I wonder if the hon. Minister had disregarded the confidence. It is a picayune thing. So I looked through the book and I cannot see any reference to this project as contemplated in this programme between now and 1965. I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell us whether this is going to come about, or why it is not in the programme if the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs can take the opportunity on a Sunday to make this announcement?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: What was the designation again?

Mr. Gisborn: The 18-mile stretch between Highway 576 to Kamiskotia Lake.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I might point out, Mr. Chairman, that is a mining and access road and as such it will not appear in your programme, it is done under another programme. It is not our own highway department's capital construction programme. It is the mining and access roads programme.

In that light, I would simply say the hon. Minister was not disclosing any information, because the tender call had already been advertised. So he was simply commenting on a tender that had been called.

Mr. Gisborn: Thank you.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I noticed in the programme, we are told No. 8 Highway is going to be regraded and the drainage problem looked after. I am very pleased about this, because it really needs it. It is a highway that has become in bad repair and I am glad we are going to get this looked after.

I also am pleased that we have now, in the past year, had Highway 20 completed. There was a very good job done on that portion. But there is a portion of highway in my riding, the Queen Elizabeth from Hamilton to the Lincoln county line, about which I am highly concerned. This concerns the development of that stretch into a controlled access highway.

I am under the impression that property has been expropriated in preparation for service roads. I have watched the programme as indicated in the past, and the further programme laid out for the next year on the development of controlled access roads and structures from the Lincoln county line to the Homer bridge—now the Garden City skyway bridge. I wonder if the hon. Minister would explain the delay of developing the Queen Elizabeth in this area to a controlled-access road.

There are three or four stop lights there and crossroads. We have had our share of serious accidents and fatalities in that area. We have now developed the Garden City skyway bridge, the Burlington skyway bridge, to take care of the traffic flow. In between the two, we have developed a bottleneck with stop lights and open access roads. I would hope that we could get on with the job of really putting in the controlled-access roads in this section of the highway.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would presume you are speaking about the Queen Elizabeth Way between Hamilton and well, Niagara Falls, if you like? Is that what you are talking about? St. Catharines?

Mr. Gisborn: Between Hamilton and the Lincoln county line. You are doing quite a job in developing controlled access from there on. Why not the portion that is in Saltfleet township?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would, I think, simply say to that, that we cannot do everything at once, Mr. Chairman. We do our best to develop a programme within the keeping of our ability to do so and the funds that are made available for that purpose. At least we are starting to control the access on the Queen Elizabeth Way and it will be controlled in its entirety when this programme is finished. But we cannot do it all at once, it is as simple as that.

Mr. Gisborn: I think the hon. Minister—through you, Mr. Chairman—I think the hon. Minister's argument, when he stated that money is a problem, that it might have to wait, bears some merit—it seems to me that we are putting the cart before the horse in this whole development in that area.

We have developed the skyway to ease the bottleneck of traffic flow from the east and we went ahead with the skyway over the Welland Canal to do the same thing. But we are leaving a piece in the middle that really will cause a bottleneck.

The flow of traffic just gets terrific there and it causes a terrific hazard. I am sure the department is aware of the amount of accidents in that stretch, because of stop lights in between two areas of fast flowing traffic. We have stop lights and crossroads on a main double lane highway. I would plead that a real look be taken at this and some priority given in the development of controlled access in the Saltfleet area.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would say that the hon. member is quite right. We are now building in terms of priority. The contracts have been called and are underway for the slip-offs, or service roads if you like, that will eventually connect with an interchange at the Vineland sideroad.

Now some locations are more accident prone than others. The area that I refer to I would say, Mr. Chairman, is well known to the hon. member, but the contract is underway now at that point. It will be followed by a contract for an interchange and we are of the opinion then that the number one accident-prone location will be taken care of. This will proceed until the entire length of the Queen Elizabeth Way is taken care of, as the hon. member suggests.

But only so much can be done at a time and we are trying to deal with the worst situations first.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I have three questions to ask the hon. Minister on this particular vote. The first one deals with the reconstruction of highways. I would like to know at what stage highway maintenance becomes too expensive and reconstruction of that particular highway takes place.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to belabour this point at all, because I went into it last night, but of course I am referring to the reconstruction of eight miles of highway immediately due south of Warton.

The hon. Minister has said, during his remarks yesterday and it has been mentioned by several hon. members today, that we have a fine set of highways in the province of Ontario. As a matter of fact I think the hon. Minister said it was the finest in North America, and maybe even in the whole world. Just supposing that he might be right, might I say then, that certainly this particular eight miles of road that I am discussing at the moment is the worst in the province of Ontario.

It has been surveyed dozens and dozens of times. The residents of the area get sick and tired of seeing provincial highway surveyors going down the road every summer—every single summer, I might say—and then nothing else takes place. Obviously this is a most expensive piece of highway to maintain and, some time in the future, it is going to have to be reconstructed.

I think the hon. Minister suggested that I ask him the question under these estimates, capital projects: When will this particular piece of highway be reconstructed? If he can give me that answer I will appreciate it. Before I sit down, I will ask another couple of questions; but I would like to point out that he emphasized yesterday that the highways in the province of Ontario did much to decentralize industry. He said that Highway 401, for example, going through these various cities and towns throughout the province, did much to bring industry from the larger centres into the smaller ones. With this I would most certainly agree. As a matter of fact, I have said it on numerous occasions in this House in years gone by, but we must not forget that there are other roads in the province besides Highway 401.

There are the highways which go into the various little towns and villages in this large province of ours; we would like a little bit of decentralization of industry up in areas such as Huron county, Grey county or Bruce county. I have no fear of the roads not going into Huron county, I assure you, but at this particular minute I am really interested in this eight miles of road immediately south of Wiarton.

I have an expert witness, Mr. Chairman, because the hon. Prime Minister himself travelled on that road in the contest of last September. I do not know how fast he was going but if he was going at all fast he would appreciate the fact that it is not in the best of condition. I would hope that the hon. Minister will be able to give me an immediate date when this road may be reconstructed.

I was impressed with what he said yesterday, that his department is most flexible. I asked him for a small amount of highway, only eight miles—that they become flexible and commence reconstruction this year. When the hon. Minister is talking about the millions and millions of dollars spent on highways such as 401—which, of course, is most necessary—then those of us in rural Ontario have a tendency to be a bit jealous.

We in Bruce and Grey counties are most jealous about this fantastic amount of money being spent, which we agree is necessary in the larger centres, and we want our share too. We want only a little bit this year, Mr. Chairman, and we would appreciate it if the hon. Minister would have a meeting with his senior advisers and become flexible on this one particular point.

The second thing I want to bring up, Mr. Chairman, deals with development roads, which come under this vote. In Bruce county, of course, we have to give credit where credit is due; and this year we are going to get a considerable part of the total amount of money which is being spent in the province in the county of Bruce. The reason it is going there? There are two reasons. The first one is that the roads there are so terrible that something has to be done. The second one is that the hon. Minister happened—and thank heavens that he did—to attend the political convention of the government's supporters in my area. He travelled over this particular road, and it was so poor that he had to promise them that his department would fix it; for this I am most grateful, I assure him.

However, I am a little bit worried about when the road is going to be reconstructed. I believe that the impression has been given by the department that it will be done immediately, almost immediately. I think the hon. Minister said, at that particular nomination, that now we could do something about it. I do not want to belabour that point, but certainly the Conservative people in Bruce county are giving everybody the impression that this road is about to be reconstructed immediately.

However, from a little town that is vitally concerned with this road—Paisley, Ontario—I want to read an editorial dated January 16, 1964, from the Paisley Advocate. I quote as follows:

A few weeks ago, reporting a brief conversation with the hon. C. S. MacNaughton, Minister of Highways, we said that the Minister had sidestepped making any forecast as to the date for a start on reconstruction of the Elora road north, but that he had pointed out that when pre-engineering is completed, construction will follow as a foregone conclusion.

If any of our readers assume that this meant they might be gliding over a new roadway next year, they are due for disillusionment. It is probable the road will not be finished until 1966 and conceivable that it will not be completed until the following year.

This conclusion is based on information provided by an official of The Ontario Department of Highways in the following letter, which I will read too. It is addressed to the editor of the Paisley Advocate, Paisley, Ontario, with reference to the development road, Paisley, county of Bruce:

The Minister asked me to write to you about the status of the above development road. The county of Bruce has retained a permanent consulting engineer to design the project and prepare estimates and contract documents. The design is expected to be completed about May of 1964.

A large stretch over the Saugeen River is involved. Our development road programme provides for a contract to be called for its replacement during the coming construction season. The grading, granular base, and hard surfacing will be the subject of two or three contracts called in subsequent years.

Our programme is contingent upon the county of Bruce acquiring such property as is necessary.

If you should be interested in following the progress of this project I recommend that you maintain close contact with Mr. E. B. Eyundt, the county engineer, who will be able to furnish you with the information you seek.

Yours very truly,

J. P. Howard,
Municipal Engineer per
P. D. Patterson,
Director of Expenditures Engineer

This is what the Paisley Advocate finishes up with:

Figure it out for yourself. Replacement of Shantz Bridge in 1964; grading, 1965; granular base, 1966; and hard surfacing, 1967—which, by coincidence, is just about in time for the next provincial election.

Mr. Chairman, I would be most unhappy if the hon. Minister does not go ahead and reconstruct this road as soon as possible.

I would hope that he would make some comments on it this afternoon, because it has been a political football for years and years and I am getting tired of kicking the same old ball around. Incidentally, my good Conservative friends in Bruce county are tired of the game, too. We would like to have the road reconstructed to start on a new ball game.

The next thing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask, because it comes under this vote, is: How much money is being given as a grant by the department for the construction of the Toronto subway this year? I would like the hon. Minister to comment on these questions, please.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, with respect to Highway 6, I will assure the hon. member that I will discuss this matter with senior advisers in line with his request. This was the request made, that I discuss this with senior people in the department; and this I will do.

With respect to this development road, the hon. member is aware, I believe, that I accompanied the hon. member for Muskoka

(Mr. Boyer), who is the vice-chairman of Ontario Hydro, to Douglas Point a few weeks ago, among a fair-sized entourage of weekly newspaper editors, and we had a very pleasant day. While I was there, the editor of the Paisley Advocate—is it?—approached me about this development road. He seemed to be in considerable doubt about whether we were going to build a road at all. I did, as the hon. member points out, assure him that it was designated as a development road for pre-engineering purposes and, upon completion of the pre-engineering which involves acquisition of land and associated engineering matters, it would in fact become a development road; and, of course, that is true.

He still felt rather doubtful that it really meant anything, so I suggested at that time, and the hon. member has referred to it, probably a letter from the department setting forth the plans of the department would be of interest to him and so requested the development road people to write to the editor of the paper. Of course, the hon. member has read what he decided to print about it.

I would first of all suggest that the Bruce county Paisley-to-Southampton road will cost an estimated $1.2 million, 100 per cent of which will be paid for, of course, by The Department of Highways. It would appear that the pre-engineering is largely finished and we contemplate an expenditure on the order of $150,000 this year. The pre-engineering should be finished shortly, so we have set up that much in the way of funds for the current year. It will allow us to get started with the work associated with the bridge to which the hon. member made reference.

Our estimates of the completion year is worked out in association with the county officials, because while the department pays 100 per cent of the cost in terms of direct assistance, this is the way, of course, that we provide direct assistance to counties. The work from that point, including the engineering and eventual design and construction, all becomes the responsibility of the county. I am not trying to shirk responsibility here, or to duck it, but these construction schedules are worked out jointly with the county authorities so that we can allocate the funds required over a forward period, and they have been allocated, of course, upon consultation with the county people.

I would suggest to the hon. member that if the county can accelerate its side of the programme, I am quite confident we may be able to find the—I do not believe the hon. member is interested in what I am saying.

Mr. MacDonald: He has lost it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: But it will be on the record anyway and the hon. member can read it. So I submit, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member would like to consult with the county engineer, I think he would welcome that. As I have already stated, and I will repeat it for the benefit of the hon. member, if the county authorities feel they can accelerate this programme then I am quite prepared to say we will review the financial aspect of it. I think, with some degree of assurance, I can say we will make the funds available for an accelerated programme. But this is the way it stands today, and it is entirely within the jurisdiction of the county at this moment, other than that we will provide the funds.

I might say, while I am on the subject of development roads in Bruce county, that the road from Hanover to Chesley, a matter involving an estimated total cost of $618,000, will be completed in this construction year. We have expended to date $277,000 and we contemplate the expenditure of another $331,000 in the current construction year, which will bring that road to completion.

The other question was the matter of the amount of subsidy that would be paid to Metropolitan Toronto as our share of the cost of the subway. The amount involved there is $6 million.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are two points that I want to raise, one with reference to item two in vote 803, property purchases. I understand that out in the tobacco communities, in the process of acquiring land for construction or reconstruction of a highway, the department has bought, in order to get what it requires, whole farms. Some of the farms it has bought are farms on which there are tobacco quotas, and the department itself is engaged in selling the tobacco quotas to other growers. In view of the fact that this is a very controversial issue, which, in the mind of a considerable number of people, is contributing to the surplus tobacco production, I am wondering if this is the case. Would the hon. Minister comment on it?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, that information should be available in just a few moments if you will allow me to come back to it. If the hon. leader of the Opposition were in the House I would try to comment on the matter of trees, as he referred to. However, will you allow me to come back to that question because we are getting the information for you now?

Mr. MacDonald: Trees and tobacco quotas will be an appropriate—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: All right, we will come back to this.

Mr. MacDonald: The second point then that I wanted to raise—and this is coming back to the topic I raised yesterday, or the underlying principles of it—is that the more I reflected on the reply of the hon. Minister to my queries as to procedures and policy underlying what might be described as the Omichinski quarry, the more I was puzzled. For example, how general is the practice of the government having its own quarries and in effect designating in the call for tenders and in all the tender documents that the material must be obtained from that quarry? I ask that question because in this particular case—and I am curious to know how general it is—as the hon. Minister related, what the department did in designating this quarry. I think it must be said, without any argument, it was done with very little investigation.

The reply of the hon. Minister was that the other bidders were aware of what the situation was in this quarry. Presumably they may have been local people. Whether they went in and did further boring themselves I do not know, but the comment of the hon. Minister was that Omichinski had not done this. What puzzles me is, if the department designates a quarry, in the call for tenders, and in the tender document, and insists that this is where the contractor must get his material, does the department play this sort of cat-and-mouse game of not assuring itself that the rock is available in sufficient quantities, and available without the kind of painful succession of problems that the contractor had, so that the cost will be less—the cost to the taxpayer in the final result?

The comment of the hon. Minister was that this bid of Omichinski was lower, so much lower that the department came to the conclusion that he was not aware of the difficulty he was going to run into. The hon. Minister almost suggested—and perhaps I am being unfair—that he anticipated the difficulties were going to arise, at least that Omichinski had seriously underbid. The hon. Minister knew it was going to cost more. If the other contracts had been taken it was going to cost more anyway.

Indeed, I come back to a point which I think the hon. member for Downsview asked yesterday. I think it would be rather interesting to know the difference between the Omichinski bid and the others, because the procedures are the ones that interest me at the moment and he certainly lost $173,000 by audited account of his own books—I presume audited by the department.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, frankly I am not in a position to go too much further than I did last night. I must say I feel that I made all the appropriate comments that needed to be made, although I did promise to get some more detailed information to the hon. member.

With respect to the contractor Omichinski that the hon. member has named, it is now well established that he underbid the job. There is not much mystery about that, because of course if he had not, he would not have been in trouble. But this matter of quarries: As far as the department is concerned, he could have gone into any part of that area. We simply told this contractor, as well as all the other bidders, that there was suitable material in the area. This we had proved by the methods that are employed by the department. The material then was suitable for the purpose for which it was required.

It is difficult for me to accept that the fact that he chose to try to get it out by a method that was not efficient or with less equipment than was required, is part of the department's responsibility. We do not quarrel with him as to how he took it out as long as he took it out and prepared it in a fashion that was acceptable to us for the paving contract for which it was required. So that the relationship to his bid and other bids, while there was quite a disparity, seems to me to have no bearing on the case.

Mr. MacDonald: Considering the difficulties they had to face and he did not, it does have some bearing.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would put it, then, in terms of providing the hon. member with more of the detailed information he has requested, that in round figures the next low bidder was $70,000 higher than the successful bidder; Omichinski in this case. I would point out, without naming this contractor—this can be done, it is public information, if the hon. member insists on it—is a contractor with a broad knowledge in this field from one end of Canada to the other, so that he bid realistically.

Mr. MacDonald: Why then did the department offer only $16,000?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Why did we offer only $16,000?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, to settle the contract.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I explained that to the hon. member last night.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, with respect, the hon. Minister is arguing that this was a realistic bid, $70,000 more. Then surely his offer to pay $16,000 is an unrealistic offer to settle the contract. I mean, you cannot have it both ways. I am only trying to reconcile what appear to be irreconcilable things in this.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I hear a comment that I must say is absolutely correct; the contractor cannot have it both ways, Mr. Chairman. If this contractor elected to bid as low as he did, with full knowledge, or the ability to acquaint himself with full knowledge, of what he was about to engage himself in, then I frankly fail to see where the interest of the province would be well served by now making up to him the difference between himself and the next low bidder.

Frankly, I regard this as a preposterous situation and suggestion. I can do nothing else.

As I explained to the hon. member last night, the amount of $16,000 proposed by the claims committee after reviewing the facts was simply a matter of awarding a sum to remunerate the contractor for those matters involved in the contract over which he had no control. That is as far as we can ever hope to go with the matter of claim settlement.

I do believe, Mr. Chairman, and I think most hon. members would concur with me, that if we went any further and if we pursued the course that he suggests here, then the Minister would rightfully be subjected to much more criticism than has been the case up to this point.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Etobicoke has the floor.

Mr. Sopha: Just one moment. I want to rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I beg your indulgence to make these representations to you, these submissions. I have not discussed these with my hon. colleagues, but when the submissions are made, perhaps I may make them with the assurance that they are also the views of my hon. colleagues.

My respectful and courteous submission to you, Mr. Chairman, is that the system that you have adopted whereby you write down, apparently, the names of the hon. members in the order that they shall speak, does in my respectful submission, not permit of the orderly development of the debate and the argument. If I may cite an example to you of recent occurrence, that is yesterday.

Yesterday the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Knox) rose and he made some remarks about a certain bridge in the riding of my hon. friend, the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator). After he had made his observations and before the hon. Minister of Highways could reply and before my hon. colleague from Niagara Falls could reply, the hon. member for Oshawa arose and he addressed certain remarks on an entirely different subject. Then, subsequent to that, another hon. member rose and introduced a third subject. I think it was fully five or six speakers until the hon. member for Niagara Falls had an opportunity to return to the subject of the bridge.

Therefore, it is my respectful submission, sir, that rather than have a list of the members in the order that they shall speak, if you would permit the exhaustion of a subject before going on to another one. In this case, Mr. Chairman, it may be that the hon. member for Grey North is rising to speak on the very subject that has been discussed and my friend, the hon. member for Etobicoke, may have another subject. So rather than being straitjacketed into a list, Mr. Chairman, I respectfully request you to permit the debate to flow along in terms of the subject matter.

Mr. Chairman: Order! I have already done that today in connection with Highway 401.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, indeed, I observed that today. Every hon. member that wanted to say something about 401 had the floor.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a question through you to the hon. Minister. This is in relation to the cloverleaves, the exits from the highways in the general Metropolitan area.

It has always seemed rather strange to me that when you come off any one of the highways onto the cloverleaves going 50 or 60 miles an hour suddenly you see a sign that says 25 miles an hour or 15 miles an hour. I speak in particular about the exit from the Gardiner Expressway north onto Bay and York Streets.

The curves and the angles that one has to turn to come off these highways have always seemed to me to be very dangerous. I am wondering whether this is something that has been brought to the attention of the planners in the department? It is a most dangerous situation as far as I am concerned.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would say that—I am not going to quarrel with the hon. member about the dangerous aspects of this—it is a matter that is completely outside the jurisdiction of The Department of Highways, I would say, Mr. Chairman. It is a Metropolitan Toronto responsibility entirely.

Mr. Braithwaite: I refer also to the exits off Highway 401 leading into Metropolitan Toronto in the northern part of Metro. They are in the area of your department's jurisdiction, are they not?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: If they are associated with 401, yes. Well, our interchanges provide for 1,500 feet of transition—if you understand what I mean—from the time you leave one rate of speed until you have to assume the ramp speed, or whatever we like to call it, the deceleration speed. We are reasonably sure that 1,500 feet is sufficient to provide for adequate safety requirements. I do not know what the Metropolitan jurisdiction uses, whether their transition distance is less than that or not, I cannot say.

Mr. Braithwaite: I would like to carry this a step further. I am thinking in particular of the exit off 401 for Islington Avenue and the other for Weston Road. In both cases, particularly if it is raining, it seems to me that the degree of curve is much too great. I have heard more than one person complain about the fact that there is too much change too quickly in the direction that one has to make on the ramp.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Sargent: —I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question on 803. Being completely fair, I realize this is the largest spending department in our business, but there is an item of $1,557,000 there for travelling expenses and in 801 an item of $266,000 for travelling expenses. Realizing that these figures are based on actual experience, possibly in 1963, I am asking as to the matter of policy. I have done some research on this estimate for the 1964-65 fiscal year and in the overall Budget it is shocking to realize that you ask us to budget for the coming year amounts totalling $6,850,000 for travelling expenses. Now being from a small town, this is a shocking thing to me that we are spending $6 million for travelling expenses.

Further, I am wondering what control there is in this regard. Secondly, I would like to ask the hon. Minister, about the item of $1,540,000 for consultant fees, if the government has thought of hiring its own consultants on a permanent basis? That is the first thing I would like to hear from the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, while the information with respect to travelling expenses is being obtained, I would say through you to the hon. member that the consultants' fees are largely the result of an attempt to accelerate certain of our programmes, and I would point out to you, sir, largely associated with 401.

About a year ago, when we were examining the matter of the rate at which we could undertake the fastest possible completion of certain sections of 401, we realized at that time it was going to place a rather substantial burden beyond the ability of existing staff to perform and get the engineering and required design matters completed. At that time—I would suggest that this goes back, approximately, a year—it was decided that if we were going to accelerate this programme we would have to get some outside help. To that extent then we did engage a number of consultants, and we have employed them. That is, I think, with reasonable accuracy, the reason why this vote is higher than it would normally have been.

Mr. Sargent: I ask the hon. Minister: What is the rate paid to consultants? What percentage of the contract?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is based on a sliding scale, I believe, related to the value of the contract. I can get that detail for the hon. member. It starts off with a percentage for the first, shall we say, several hundred thousand dollars; for the next $100,000 it is a little bit less, but I do believe it is graduated.

I am given to understand that, if it is just for design, it would be one rate but if the contract, the undertaking with the consultant, involves design and supervision of the work itself, it would require more. The percentage would increase if they had to supervise the work.

Mr. Sargent: What would it be for a $1 million contract; what would be the fee?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: You want the figure related to design, design and supervision, or supervision? You want both?

Mr. Sargent: Of both, for overall construction.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Design and supervision—we will have the information in a minute.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, I have a question regarding tenders. I have a tender here for the bridge-painting of the Burlington Bay skyway bridge. I have a letter here from the president of a large paint company, who feels that it is not in a position to bid on this tender because of the tender call. I would like to ask the hon. Minister: On one section of the contract it calls for the necessary rating of $75,000 and a substantial deposit; then another rating of $30,000, with a substantial deposit. This paint company cannot bid on the contract because it feels that, in effect, there is no opening for the small painter to handle the deal because of the financing needed to bid on the contract. I am wondering if there is any thought in the mind of the hon. Minister to make these contract costs a bit smaller so that contractors can bid on them.

The penalty here is terrific for a small businessman. It would seem that only the larger firms—and, as outlined in the contract, the painting shall be supervised by the contractor and applied only by experienced tradesmen.

I imagine the hon. Minister is correct there, in the public interest, to get qualified people; but the specifications, I think, are loaded, as my hon. colleague says, in the interest of the bigger contractor. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if there is any hope that they could look toward the smaller man in this regard in these contracts?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, the point the hon. member referred to is, of course, related to the extent of the pre-qualifications the department sets up for painting contractors.

He will be interested, I am sure, to learn that we are now about to embark on a trial basis, and are removing the prequalification requirements. We are going to call for tenders for painting without the necessity of prequalifications, and see how it works.

Mr. Sargent: May I ask the hon. Minister: Is the financial rating still necessary in those large amounts?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No. The financial rating is associated with what I have referred to as prequalification.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you. I would like to ask the hon. Minister about the intelligence, or lack of it, in policy in so far as boundary roads are concerned. When we have two municipalities, and one is forced into building a bridge on a boundary road, one municipality receives an 80 per cent subsidy and the other municipality receives a one-third subsidy. I think, in the interests of equity, that this policy should be realigned and assessed on a fair basis. Does the hon. Minister see any hope? In Owen Sound we have had to close down a major hill because we cannot afford to spend $100,000 to fix the hill. We closed down this major artery, but were forced into a boundary road agreement where we have to spend $50,000 to build a bridge that is not being used. The township gets an 80 per cent subsidy, and we only get one-third subsidy. This does not seem fair, when we were forced into the deal. What hope is there for equity in this regard for the municipality?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would think that this is probably a matter which requires to be looked at by me. I am not familiar enough with the circumstances. I recall the situation where a bridge spanned a boundary river in a town, but the basis of subsidy there, again, is at variance with the basic rate of subsidy in a city. I will have to ask the hon. member to let me get some information; we will provide it for him.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you very much, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, apropos of what I said earlier, I want to take the opportunity, not being one who uses the time of the estimates to any great extent, to ask questions. I have a private brief that if I want to ask questions of the hon. Minister, I can call him in the morning, or the deputy, and solicit the information.

But I want to go away back, in the hope that those who read Hansard in the province will tenaciously, and with fortitude and dedication, thumb through the pages from the remarks made by the hon. member for Scarborough North until this point, some score of pages later, where I make my own observations about naming a highway after a living Conservative. Indeed, I should go beyond the remarks of the hon. member for Scarborough North and, this time, emit my accolade to the man from Armourdale. I felt proud to be a lawyer this afternoon when he made his remarks—that is a practising lawyer, as he is, not like the six in the front bench over there who are a long way from the practise of law, who have lost contact.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): They are doing a good job.

Mr. Sopha: Knowing the jury the hon. member spoke to, as I know them, I am afraid the hon. member pressed the case a little bit too strongly to get results; but still, I admire the tenacity and the fortitude with which he pressed it. I noticed how the hon. Minister got a bit sensitive to the criticism too. He got an opportunity to calm down when we had the diversion of the hon. Minister of Mines, the master of diversion in the House.

Dealing with the advocacy of the hon. member for Scarborough North that we name Highway 401 after Leslie M. Frost, the Frost Freeway or Thruway or whatever it is, I want to say that I have always had, as a result of my research into Canadian history, the well-founded impression that one of the things that differs a Liberal from a Conservative is that a Conservative is a person who likes those artificial trappings of title and honour that come from doing something with or to his name. That belief was founded in the roots of Canadian history.

I want to deplore any tendency on the part of this government to name that highway after Leslie Frost. To go back to the roots of Canadian history, we see that in the last century, when this nation was founded, when the Queen was instructed by her advisers, be they British or Canadian, to give baronetcies, on the one hand it was the Conservative politicians who accepted them; Cartier, MacDonald, Howe, Tupper, Galt and the rest; and it was the Liberals who refused them: Brown, Blake, McKenzie. They only caught Laurier because he went to the coronation in 1897, the 60th anniversary, and the Queen announced that he was Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

So it is today. You go about this province, and I have gone about and I have seen buildings inscribed with names of living people. Without exception, I asked somebody to give me an example, otherwise the name ascribed to an edifice or structure or building; is that of a Tory.

An hon. member: They are the builders.

Mr. Sopha: He is a Tory, he is not a Liberal at all. Because Liberals put aside that artificiality, Liberals have not got the arrogance that attends it.

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): What about the bridge in Ottawa?

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Sopha: What is your point of order?

Mr. Cowling: I will give the Chairman my point of order, if the hon. member does not mind, and when I get real good and ready to give it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my point of order is this: I do not think any discussion on politicians of the past on either side of the House is really relevant to the estimates of The Department of Highways. Another thing, Mr. Chairman, I would point this out on my point of order, the hon. member who is in the midst of speaking now is constantly taking liberties along these lines on the estimates. I have sat and listened and participated to a degree in the work of the House as it has gone on these last several weeks; but I must say, Mr. Chairman, to my point of order, that the hon. member now speaking has overstepped the mark on many occasions. I think that on this particular one, when he is talking about some of the great forefathers of the past, that you, sir, should rule that he stay with the item with which we are dealing on the highways estimate. That is my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 803; the member for Kent East.

Mr. Sopha: I did not finish. I take it you are not going to rule me out of order because the hon. member for High Park obviously was not in his seat when the hon. member for Scarborough North spoke.

Mr. Chairman: Reverting to vote 803—

Mr. Cowling: I heard it, I was sitting in my seat.

Mr. Sargent: In support of my hon. colleague, on naming highways after prominent Conservatives, as it were. It is maddening to pick up copies of civic administration magazines, municipal magazines we all read—

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, on my point of order, sir.

Mr. Sargent: I am speaking to vote 803, I am speaking to $150,000 in this budget for road publicity.

Mr. Sopha: But I have not finished.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The member for Kent East asked for the floor and I have it down here, and you intervened.

Mr. Sopha: I just want to make the final statement that I also deplore, it was not a fortnight ago, that a school board in this province rejected the name of Sir John A. Macdonald as the name of a school.

Mr. Cowling: It was in the riding of Scarborough North.

Mr. Sopha: After history has put its judgment on the epitaph of a man, then let his name be inscribed. But wait until history and judgment, not while he is alive, is my point.

Mr. Chairman, now I want to take the opportunity to refer to the remarks made by my hon. colleague from Bruce, and if I may—and he always grants me his indulgence—in a kindly attitude say to him, that I sympathize with his problem in asking for some roads in Bruce, but I thought I would take this time to give him a little advice. I am in the happy position that my hon. friend from Bruce is not. It is as if we were two Caesars swimming the Rubicon and I ahead of him have gone across the current and have reached the safety of the shore while he is still struggling manfully with the current. Because 11 speeches ago, Mr. Chairman, I say to my hon. friend from Bruce, I began to ask for the Sudbury-Timmins road; and after 11 speeches over five years in this House it is a reality. Now I am in a happy and fortunate position as it were, having crossed the Rubicon, that I have nothing more to ask for.

An hon. member: So why ask for it?

Mr. Sopha: So as I look in the book and see how they are coming with the Sudbury-Timmins road and I see they are always going to work in 43 miles of this total 115 or something this year—

Mr. Whicher: Not over that Rubicon yet?

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes, I am in the position that all I need do is to urge upon my hon. colleague from Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers), through whose riding it goes into the riding of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs—and I shall in the privacy of the corridors, the cloak room, the Black Knight, or somewhere else—

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Invite us.

Mr. Sopha: —urge them to approach the hon. Minister of Highways in order to get it built as fast as possible. I am not even going to ask him for fear of the disappointment that might attend the citizens of Sud-bury, at 43 miles this year, how long it is going to take him. I am content that if it is finished in Confederation year that will be time enough in the transitoriness of human things with which we have to contend.

So I say to the hon. member for Bruce, in friendship and in companionship and comradeship, keep up the fight. If you have to make 11 speeches to get through to the hon. Minister of Highways, then make them. Grains of wisdom eventually permeate the deafest and dumbest of ears, until they will give you some assistance and some of the roads to which the great county of Bruce is entitled.

Now one final subject, and I bear in mind that the hon. Minister is especially sensitive this afternoon, or at least he was. I hope he is not now.

It is now some time ago—and I feel obliged to say this—that my colleague, the hon. member for Nickel Belt and I drew to the hon. Minister's attention a most distressing situation that exists on Highway 17 to the west of Sudbury. That is the presence of fog that occurs there in a very phenomenal and very unusual way. This fog phenomenon will arise and disappear within a period of about 15 minutes oftentimes. Now that situation and that atmospheric condition has caused several very serious, yes, and I am sorry to report, even fatal accidents. Not many fatal accidents but several accidents that have indeed been serious, and at times as many as 13 cars have been involved. Some time ago, I think it was in January, or perhaps before the first of the year, I have not my file with me, my hon. colleague from Nickel Belt and I jointly addressed the hon. Minister and the officials of his department about this situation. He undertook, as he has done on several occasions this afternoon, to make an investigation and to do everything that is reasonable in his power to alleviate this situation.

Regrettably, one of the experts that he does not appear to be able to afford within the $299 million that he wants, needs and uses, is a meteorologist, who I suggested to him and his officials was the only person now alive with the scientific and technological know-how to determine just what would be the underlying causes of this fog situation. I have not heard from the hon. Minister that he has employed a meteorologist in order to make the special investigation that that person could make. However—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: On a point of order, I think if the hon. member will recall the statement before the orders of the day,

I assured him of just what he is requesting now, that we had engaged meteorological people and I think I put on the record remarks related to their findings. I think probably if he will read back in Hansard, he will recall that that statement was made.

Mr. Sopha: I recall the statement being made about one being hired. I do not recall having received any report. I might just mention at this point that in the negotiations between my hon. friend from Nickel Belt and myself and the hon. Minister, the communication up to now has been direct between us and not through the pages of Hansard. I hope that has not broken down.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This was in response to the hon. member's question before the orders of the day.

Mr. Sopha: In response to the question from the hon. member for Nickel Belt.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, correct.

Mr. Sopha: Well, he is in his seat and he can speak for himself.

However, there is one other thing that I am not quite sure about. I have the feeling that one of the officials of his own department, that is, the hon. Minister's own department, advocated that a precautionary and preventive measure that could be introduced and erected in relation to the happening of these accidents would be separation of the four lanes of the highway by a structural median. I do not know that my words are terms of art. This would prevent the happening of a type of accident that has happened in this fog situation. That is: Not only have cars going in the same direction run into each other—as many as 16 of them have piled up—but during the foggy situation vehicles coming in opposite directions have unwisely, imprudently and even dangerously crossed over the line that separates the north half from the south half of the road. There have been collisions with oncoming traffic, so to speak.

The erection of that median—and this was quite widely publicized in Sudbury and met no objection from any person or groups as far as I know—would prevent the happening, at least, of that type of accident. It would be interesting if the department would look into the total number of accidents. One of the difficulties there is, of course, that quite a number of police forces are involved, in order to ascertain whether accidents involving traffic coming from opposite directions are more frequent than those involving traffic all going in one direction.

However, in an endeavour to make known to the citizens and constituents of Sudbury and the surrounding area, I address my remarks at this time in the hope that I might stimulate the hon. Minister to bring us up to date to some extent on what the activities of the department are in regard to the terrible situation.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would simply say to the hon. member that this situation—and it is an unfortunate one and a matter of concern to the department—is under continuous investigation. As I stated in a statement before the orders of the day, we have engaged the federal Department of Transport, which department operates the meteorological branch. We are continuing to work with it and I am informed that the federal meteorological people are still actively working on the situation.

The proposal the hon. member suggests with respect to a structural median is certainly worthy of investigation and I would not be too sure that this is not under consideration. We are considering everything that can conceivably be done to relieve what is certainly a dangerous and very undesirable situation.

I think I am in a position to answer some of the other questions that have been posed here this afternoon. I would say to the hon. member for Grey North that at the moment the matter of the rates of subsidy, cities versus counties, is a matter of legislation. In other words, they are statutory. At the moment the Minister has no authority to change these rates of subsidy, township or county versus cities. They are statutory situations. I am quite confident that is not the explanation the hon. member would wish to hear, but nevertheless it is the situation with which the Minister of the day is confronted, so I simply say that I am powerless to change these rates of subsidy because it is a statutory requirement.

I have some more information here for the hon. member relating to the matter of consultants' fees. I would point out that these are rates that are set by the Association of Professional Engineers; they are not rates that are assessed or imposed by the department. The Association of Professional Engineers set them. The percentage rate for design is in the range of $500,000 to $1 million. The hon. member suggested $1 million. The rate for $500,000 up to $1 million, and the percentage for design is 3.5 per cent. For $1 million to $2 million, it drops down to 3.43 per cent. Similarly, where design and supervision of construction are involved—a $500,000 contract or a $1 million contract—the comparable rate would be five per cent plus 150 per cent of the salary of staff directly associated with the supervision of the contract.

In other words, the firm of engineers makes 50 per cent on the salaries it pays to the people who are in its employ. This is its profit on its work against the overhead and everything associated with it. So then, within those limits it gets five per cent plus 150 per cent of the salaries of the men—the engineers it assigns to the supervisory aspect of the job.

When we reach $1 million, and in the next range, $1 million to $2 million, the percentage rate declines from five per cent to 4.9 per cent with still the same percentage of the cost of salaries of those staff people associated with supervisory work.

Mr. Sargent: May I ask the hon. Minister as a matter of policy what thoughts has he about this matter? For $1.5 million it would seem to me you could get a lot of engineering done. Why would you not retain your own consultants?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I just pointed out these are consultants retained by the department.

Mr. Sargent: Why would the hon. Minister not have them on staff?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Sir, I have already explained to you that within the limits of our existing staff a year ago, to accelerate some of these programmes that we are being pressed for by some of your colleagues, as a matter of fact, and associated with our own desire to get these jobs done, we felt it was as expedient for this temporary situation involving extra work, to employ consultants. When we get that situation behind us we will revert back to the point where our normal complement of engineers is adequate to do the work.

Mr. Sargent: May I ask the hon. Minister: This has been a constant picture the last ten or 15 years and it will not grow less—does it figure that you would continue to retain consultants on this basis for the next ten years, or would you not be farther ahead to get a permanent staff of consultants?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would hope maybe that this would dispose of the matter. It is the opinion of the department that it is as efficient, and probably as economical, to employ outside consultants in this matter as it is to try to carry a staff of engineers at the department level to take care of peak requirements.

In other words, if we attempt to keep the numbers of staff required to take care of peak loads, specific situations, we think we are going to be involved in a greater expense than assigning this work to consultants—for specific situations and sometimes for brief periods.

I could only assume, Mr. Chairman, that this has been pretty carefully analyzed by the people who advise the Minister, and that it is not only as efficient, it is probably as economical or more so than the course the hon. member proposes.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, one more point, if the hon. Minister will bear with me.

In road publicity, there is an item of $150,000. I realize this has been passed in 801.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, it is. This—

Mr. Sargent: But I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister that—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, it is another vote, I would point out.

Mr. Sargent: I would ask the hon. Minister to answer me a question on this.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, I would say you would have to ask the Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: We are on vote 803.

Mr. Sargent: I realize that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: If the Minister wishes to answer you, it is all right with me.

Mr. Sargent: The point is: When you pick up trade publications in the municipal field you see advertisements placed by The Department of Highways telling the people of Ontario what good fellows the hon. Minister of Highways and the hon. Prime Minister are to give us all these roads. We do not mind you telling them that, but I hate paying for it. I think, as a policy, it is an insult to the people to spend our money to tell the people of Ontario about your progressive road programme and what great fellows the hon. Minister and the hon. Prime Minister are. I take exception. I have been in the advertising business. This is nothing but a mild form of corruption. I think it is wrong.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order! The member for Lambton West.

Mr. J. R. Knox (Lambton West): Mr. Chairman, in rising to make a few remarks on this vote, I will preface my remarks by saying that the reference that the hon. member for Sudbury made, about having to make 11 speeches in order to gain his point, rather appalls me; but he did at the same time speak with great relish about this, as though it were some very great feat. Perhaps this may be, because the hon. member appears to me to be so enamoured of the sound of his own voice that often the point he rose to make is never made. But I suppose the music is sweet in his own ears.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I usually say nice things about you, but now I will stop.

Mr. Knox: At other times he is so wrapped up in some silly verbiage, like that we heard just recently, that everyone else misses the point entirely, even if he did not.

Mr. Sopha: This means war, of course.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): That is enough from the hon. member for Sudbury on March 17.

Mr. Sopha: You are the one who said: "Thank God for my leader".

Mr. Knox: Thank you, for repeating that for me. I am still of the same opinion as I was before.

I wanted to say, with reference to the highways in my area—and this is where I want to get into something about the highways—that it appears to me that in 11 speeches, something has gone wrong there. The road we are presently working on in our area is the by-pass road for the city of Sarnia, for which we say "thanks", and we of the city of Sarnia did a lot of the early planning—took six years altogether.

I was on the council at the time and promoted this road. We had a little bit of it done by suburban roads to make it a little more interesting to The Department of Highways; and when we were all ready to present this to The Department of Highways, we felt that we had this at a point where it would be so obvious that this road was necessary, that only one speech would be required.

Well, we came to The Department of Highways and one speech was made with respect to this particular by-pass—I made it, and that is all the speech that it took. So if you do your planning and your homework properly, and you make your presentation properly, it really will only take one speech—one effective speech.

I think we should, after all we have heard this afternoon, say something good about this department, and about the present hon. Minister.

We have some other plans in our area, of which I just want to remind the hon. Minister. We were speaking about a scenic route this afternoon—in our area we have a section, from Sarnia to Wallaceburg, which gets into the riding of my friend, the hon. member for Kent West. We have plans for making this the most scenic route in the province of Ontario. I have heard another area designated as having that already today.

But this will require, first, a north-south highway—a more direct route. We expect, in time, to get this. In the meantime, through our suburban roads efforts, we have about half of this road ready now. And with a little more effort on our part, I think we probably, when the proper time comes, will be able to make a presentation to the hon. Minister of Highways just once; and it will be so obvious that we require this road that it will be accepted.

We are not ready yet. There is only so much money available, I may say, for the placing of highways. We, in our riding, are willing to acknowledge this and to wait, with all the patience we can, till it is ready.

Somebody says we get more than our share of it now; and yet somebody else mentioned this afternoon that they were very tired of listening to talk about Highway 401. I have not been too tired of listening to Highway 401, but I will agree that perhaps it is time, for a change, to let us talk about Highway 402.

Highway 402 is one with which a great many may not be familiar. At the present time, it leads from Perch Creek Bridge—which is the junction of Highway 7, Highway 22 and Highway 40A—to the Bluewater Bridge. I think it is about three or three-and-a-half miles long. Over this little highway, feeding out into the other parts of the province, come these tourists who make the other ridings so rich. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that a great many of them go to the riding of my friend, the hon. member for Bruce, who has made such a sad tale for his riding during these last few hours. As nearly as I can make out from what he said, it must be a delightfully rustic area which impresses me as though it may be relatively unchanged from its natural state.

But I will say that this is what appeals to tourists, and perhaps a lot of them go there and Bruce gets rich because of that. All this starts back at Highway 402, which is leading from the Bluewater Bridge, and it is up to that that I want to lead.

You will be aware, Mr. Chairman, and I know you are aware, that a great new highway in the United States has been built, or is being presently finished, leading from Seattle to Detroit and Port Huron. Port Huron is our sister city across the river, in which the eastern end of the Bluewater Bridge resides. This highway is going to have a tremendous effect on the traffic pattern in our riding. It is said that this Highway 402 will have to accommodate, in the next few years, close to four million people. Now Highway 402, in its short length, is a four-lane divided highway; but, as I said, it then leads to the junction of Highways 7, 22 and 40A. There it becomes a three-lane highway and as it passes along about another 14 miles it gets into the riding of my hon. friend and colleague, the hon. member for Lambton East (Mr. Henderson). After passing through there for a short distance, it becomes a two-lane highway.

The point I want to make is that planning will have to be accelerated in order to take care of the tremendous amount of traffic that is going to pour over the Bluewater Bridge with the completion of this huge, non-stop highway all the way from Seattle through to Port Huron. There is not a stop on it, so you can be sure that tourists are going to take this highway.

We in our riding are concerned with the ability of the highways that we have to handle this traffic. In the planning for new highways, which the hon. Minister is doing—and I may confess at this point he knows about this, he is planning for this—he is going to have to spend money in the near future, more money in our riding. I want to acquaint the House with this so that when the time comes and we make that one speech, not 11, the rest of you will be sympathetic with what he is going to have to do and will support his endeavour.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might rise at this point to provide the information on some of the questions that were asked earlier, if the hon. member will permit me to do that.

In answer to the question put by the hon. member for York South regarding The Department of Highways being in the tobacco business, I would simply say that when land is purchased in the tobacco area the tobacco rights are purchased with the land at the appraised value. When the department has surplus land from severance, the surplus land and the rights are sold by public auction. We take our land requirements out—and in some circumstances it is more equitable to buy the entire property—we take our requirements out and sell back the surplus. This is the way it is handled. We are not in the tobacco business.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, then, they switched the quota.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Whatever it is, we are not in the tobacco business.

Mr. Chairman, it would appear that the hon. leader of the Opposition is not coming back, or is undertaking to listen on his public address system or whatever it may be, but nevertheless he asked me some questions related to a contract associated with trees some time ago—

Mr. Sopha: Perhaps the hon. Minister might defer it to this evening. He had a medical appointment that he had to keep and perhaps the hon. Minister might defer it to this evening if you have to go that far to make those answers. He will be here this evening.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Would you prefer that we do it that way, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: If it meets with your approval.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Very well, I simply thought we might put it on the record so he could read it if he was not coming back. I will keep that information.

I might say, while it is out of order, Mr. Chairman, that in view of the fact that the hon. member for Grey North was allowed to ask a question on vote 801 with respect to roads publicity, I think maybe I should reply.

The situation to which he refers concerns advertisements in certain trade publications or municipal magazines. Now, the best information that is available to me is simply that in the year that is just concluding this month the amount of advertising spent in this field was nil. The Department of Highways spent not one copper on advertisements in the periodicals referred to by the hon. member. I would point out to him that the amount allocated for roads publicity covers such items as these and I doubt if any hon. member will dispute the—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, point of order. The February issue of Civic Administration carried a full-page advertisement over the signature of The Department of Highways. I do not know who is paying for it. They do not run them for free, I do not think. I will produce the advertisement tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would still state that no matter what appears on the advertisement it was not paid out of vote 801 for roads publicity.

Mr. Sargent: My apologies, but I imagine—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I respect your statement, but my statement still stands. This is a fact.

However, I would like to state for the record that the sum of $150,000 for roads publicity is made this way: Displays in county fairs, $15,000; a display at the Canadian National Exhibition, $10,000; a display at the Ottawa Fall Fair, $2,000; and at the Western Fair in London, $2,000.

We also expend under this vote, for our photography section, money for motion pictures, still pictures, supplies for the photographic section and miscellaneous items, a total of $20,000.

We do have a photography section. We take pictures of all contracts in progress. We take pictures of the opening of roads and bridges; we think this is a reasonable thing to do. These pictures are made available to the press in the area and any other media that requires them.

We have set aside the sum of $2,000 to bear the expenses of providing assistance for road openings. We do this for municipalities. Our district offices are equipped with public address systems and things like that and we make these available for that purpose, $2,000.

We spend $1,000 a year on subscriptions and memberships of various kinds which are associated with the work of the department.

The Department of Highways publication, or DHO News as it is called, is a departmental organ that is circulated among the staff and this costs $24,000. We publish road bulletins for the information of the general public, this costs $5,000.

The northern Ontario road map introduced last year cost $38,000; roads to recreation map was $20,000.

This makes up the total of $150,000 for roads publicity. We think it is pretty good publicity, we do not think we are being too unreasonable with the taxpayers' money for the purposes I have described.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, were the hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr.

Belanger) here he would have asked the hon. Minister concerning the status of the Turkey Creek bridge. I think the hon. Minister mentioned something earlier in the year.

Mr. Yakabuski: Quit whining!

Mr. Newman: What is the matter, if you are tired, go ahead and go out and have supper but let us discuss the estimates here.

The matter of the Turkey Creek bridge, which is an extension of Highway 18 in La Salle.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, now, I am going to be quite frank and state that a year ago when the hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich, your hon. colleague, raised this matter, I described to him at that time the reasons why it was deleted from the programme. I did give him my assurance that, if at all possible, we would have it on this construction programme. I simply have to say to you now that certain matters associated with property acquisition, certain matters associated with design, I could obtain more detail, have simply meant that we are not ready to do this construction job yet.

So I think, and I am not trying to be facetious, Mr. Chairman, that you might inform the hon. member and your hon. colleague, that maybe somebody's up Turkey Creek at the moment. I do not know whether it is he, or whether it is me, or both of us; but this is where we stand.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, there are three other questions I would like to ask of the hon. Minister and we are all through with Turkey Creek now.

Mr. Yakabuski: Thank goodness, we will not have to worry about Turkey Creek.

Mr. Whicher: Yakabuski is yakking.

Mr. Yakabuski: Yes, he has a reputation for yakking, but he has a point.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, just because we bring up problems that we have in our own municipality, that is not whining. We simply would like to see consideration given to problems that we think are just and need attention. Apparently all the hon. members on that side of the House have all the roads they need in their area, so let us build them in the Opposition members' ridings and then you will not be asked these questions later on. The easier way to satisfy us is to come along and do what we suggest here.

Mr. Yakabuski: Do not put it in a whining tone.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister the status of Highway No. 3. One year ago I asked about the straightening out of the road so that the tourists coming in from Detroit, and likewise the residents of my own area, would have easy access to both the provincial park and also to the Pelee National Park. Highway No. 3 is a winding road and it certainly could stand a considerable amount of straightening out. Last year the hon. Minister mentioned that some work had been undertaken and that he planned on doing some extensive work this year, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could make a comment. There has been a lot of talk here this afternoon—

Mr. Newman: I would like an answer to my question, sir, and I have two others.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Will you allow me a moment?

Mr. Newman: Yes, on Highway No. 3, sir.

Mr. Root: Some hon. members have said that this government does not do any work in Opposition members' ridings. I am looking at the map of the Stratford division and I see a plan for work in Wellington county. It is a continuation in Wellington South of what was carried on in my own riding. And Wellington South is an Opposition member's (Mr. Worton's) riding.

Mr. Whicher: You will have to get a new set of glasses.

Mr. Root: I look over into the Owen Sound division and I see work going on in the riding of the hon. leader of the Opposition. I would suggest that perhaps some of the hon. members in the Opposition could take a lesson from the hon. member for Wellington South and the hon. leader of the Opposition and once in a while say "thank you" and be constructive and they might find it will bear fruit.

Mr. Chairman, a year ago I commended the hon. Minister of Highways for acceding to a request that had been made to work on roads in the area that I have the honour to represent, and I would be remiss in my duty if I did not say that the people of the entire area appreciated what was done. I hope that my friend, the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) might comment because I think the road from Shelbourne to Harrison gave an outlet to the north to the people in his riding, and they, in their own way, showed their appreciation. It may be because he is a very fine type of person that they did not go quite far enough. I think the people of that riding did indicate that they appreciated the effect that these roads had on this whole area. It is the boundary between my riding and that of the hon. leader of the Opposition. Another piece of highway attended to is from Acton up to Highway 24 at Ospringle and I know the people of Halton, the north end of Halton, appreciated it. The people in my own riding appreciated what was done and I think that I would be remiss if I did not say that the people of Ontario do appreciate what The Department of Highways is doing. I know they showed appreciation right across the board in the area I have mentioned. The department is not narrow in building roads. In the riding of the hon. member for Wellington South, they are building roads, and in the riding of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

I think the hon. members opposite should take a lesson from these two members who have been here for some time.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, when I talk about a highway I ask for nothing for myself. There is no highway through my riding at all so I am only asking for the hon. member for Kent West when I speak of Highway 401.

Mr. Yakabuski: Let him speak for himself.

Mr. Newman: He has not taken the opportunity to speak in the House, that is why we—

An hon. member: Why do you not let somebody speak for you?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would still like from the hon. Minister, the comments concerning Highway No. 3, before we are given that wonderful piece of advice from the hon. member who preceded me.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I will have to ask the indulgence of the hon. member. You are correct, there is nothing on the current programme but I will try to find out the status of programming on the remaining sections of Highway No. 3. I cannot give it to you now; we will get the information for you.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 803 agreed to?

Mr. Newman: No, Mr. Chairman; I still have two other questions, and one is concerning the 401 overpass at the Maidstone township line. Is that for completion this year? I noticed a listing on page 7, under the Chatham district: "Proposed new work, structures and approaches 130-64 Maidstone township line interchange." That is on for this year?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: If it is shown in the programme as proposed new work, it simply means a tender call will be advertised in this current construction season.

Mr. Newman: I am very pleased to hear of that from the hon. Minister, because on January 17 he had mentioned the fact in a press interview that it was going to be scheduled for February 16, 1965, so he has pushed it up one year. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is right.

Mr. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

One other problem or question: The hon. member for Lambton West mentioned the Bluewater highway. Is there any planning in the department for the extension of that highway south following the Lake St. Clair shore going up into Bell River and then into the city of Windsor itself, so that you would have a Bluewater route starting at the Windsor gateway, going up into Sarnia and then from Sarnia extending up into Lake Huron? There is no planning for that yet, is there?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would have to say to the hon. member that there is nothing of that nature contemplated at the moment.

I am now in a position, I believe, to answer the hon. member with respect to the information he wanted associated with Highway No. 3 in the Windsor area. Our present programme calls for Essex West to Maidstone 3.3 miles in the 1966 construction season; westerly again from Maidstone 5.1 miles in a succeeding construction season—I cannot project it that far ahead—and the last section will take it to Windsor. Beyond 1966, frankly, I am not in a position to say with any accuracy just when the work will be done but it is programmed and scheduled.

Mr. Newman: The hon. Minister is scheduling things so that within possibly four or five years it will be all straightened out.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is right.

Mr. Knox: Mr. Chairman, might I mention to the hon. Minister that I did not mention the Bluewater highway in my remarks?

Mr. Newman: I stand corrected in this.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word, too, to the hon. Minister. A few days ago, my good friend, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon), was giving credit to the government for building a provincial highway to the reservation that is in his riding. I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister that I have in my riding a fine Indian reservation, the Moravian reservation, and there is not one foot of pavement on that reservation. These people are first Canadians, they pay gasoline tax and they pay licences, so I would hope the hon. Minister would jot this down in his minute book or in his book, and not forget pavement for this Indian reservation that is in the riding of Kent East.

Another matter that I would like to ask the hon. Minister is with regard to these service centres. I understand that so much ground rental is received from these companies who build these service centres, and also I understand there is a percentage of the gross of business. If I remember correctly, there are about eight of these service centres in operation this past year; could the hon. Minister inform us how much revenue was derived from these service centres? Also, has the hon. Minister any control over the prices charged at these service centres across the province of Ontario? For instance, is there any control over the charge for meals to keep the meals to an average in the surrounding area?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would say, in respect to service centres—first, with regard to the Moravian-town Indian reserve we will, of course, make a note and look into it.

With regard to these service centres, the hon. member is quite correct. They pay a ground rental, then they pay a percentage of the gross, and this is based on a matter of tender. In other words, we call tenders and the person who offers the highest percentage of gross is awarded the tender. We do exercise control to the extent that these are inspected and supervised; and we do our best to ensure that the prices charged are not unreasonable, contrasted with the type of service and the quality of food being offered to the driving public. I think it is generally accepted that the prices are not unreasonable, and it is generally accepted that the service has been quite satisfactory. So, if this answers the hon. member's question, these are the related facts.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

On vote 803:

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether anyone was cut off in the midst of a question or not. There are one or two things I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton).

In driving from Hamilton to Toronto on the Queen Elizabeth Way and watching, over the past year or 18 months, as it has become a fully controlled-access highway in that area, I have noticed the service stations being boarded up and abandoned in this process. I have no association whatsoever with the people concerned, but I would be interested to know what sort of deal is necessary between the department and these people. Is it necessary for the department to buy out the whole establishment in order that they be closed up under those circumstances?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): I would say to the hon. member that the situation was simply this: When those people went in there to operate the service stations, it was with the full knowledge that eventually, some day—now, if you like—that, related to the requirements of the department, they would be obliged to go. They went in there with the full knowledge of this and they have now, in the process of widening that is taking place and so on, simply moved out as was understood at the time.

Mr. Nixon: Does the department own the premises which have been abandoned?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Probably not. We do not know what they have done, or why. They have done this in the line of what I have already indicated to you.

Mr. Nixon: There are two service stations just west of the Highway 27 cloverleaf, which now have a monopoly of the business there and really are in much the same category as the service centres on 401. Because of this, do they pay a premium for this special position, in the same way as they would along 401?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Probably the hon. member should be a little more specific. Is he making reference, for instance, to the Supertest station just west of 27?

Mr. Nixon: That is one of them; and I believe there is one across the road from it, too.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is an Imperial station, I believe. No, there is no premium arrangement there. They simply enjoy a good location and the benefits which accrue to a good location. It has accrued to them over a period of years and, eventually, either by negotiation or otherwise, arrangements will be made if the property they occupy is required for the interchange facility to be built in the widening processes which will be undertaken. I know of no special arrangement with them.

Mr. Nixon: I would suggest that it might be a profitable enterprise if the hon. Minister had his people negotiate with the owners and operators of these two stations, since the fencing off of the rest of the stations in the distance between Toronto and Hamilton has given them a very preferred position—very similar, I would submit, to the positions of the service centres on 401.

I would also like to ask the hon. Minister about the designations of the various roads. The hon. member for Armourdale (Mr. Carton), this afternoon was referring to a number of designations—and I think particularly of Highway 97 which runs westward from the city of Galt. I am not sure what its designation is, but I would wonder how long The Department of Highways intends to leave it at such a low standard?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, as I see it the hon. member has posed two questions here. The two service stations referred to, I believe, are the Supertest on the one hand and the Imperial, not too far away, on the other.

We have, for some time, owned the property on which the Imperial station operates, so they are quite well aware of the fact that some day we will have to say, "Remove yourselves," you see. With respect to the Supertest station, we have been engaged in negotiations for quite some time. They, too, are aware that they will be obliged to move, and these negotiations have been underway and are still underway.

With respect to Highway 97, I wonder—

Mr. Nixon: I could be more specific in that connection. I do not know whether you are familiar with this stretch of road, Mr. Minister, or not, but I see that it is in the proposed new work in the book we have before us, and it is going to undergo grading, drainage and granular base. This has been a King's highway for many years, and most of Highway 97 has been brought up to very high standards, indeed. There is one short section which has never been brought up to this standard, and it is a considerable hardship for the people who have access to that road. The dust conditions, the hills, the potholes, lack of good service, are quite a hazard; and I must say they will be pleased to see they are in line for grading, drainage and granular base, and will be most interested to know when they could expect to drive on a paved surface. It is a King's highway and has been so designated for a long time.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, I think I would simply say, in reply to that, Mr. Chairman, that the first form of work engaged in the improvement or reconstruction of any highway is the grading, drainage and granular base. We do not usually leave highways of this description unpaved for any prolonged length of time, so that if the grading, drainage and granular base is under way this year, I think it is only reasonable to assume that paving will follow when the road base is put in condition for paving purposes.

Mr. Nixon: Driving through the province, we are always interested to see the signs which contain information about a project under way. I think these signs are very well prepared, with the symbolic trillium and the names of the hon. Minister, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), and the deputy Minister, as well as the number of the contract and other information. I would suggest, however, to the hon. Minister, that his advisers might do well to look into the use of the word "another". There is something pretty commercial about the use of this on every one of these signs. I may be more sensitive than some of the hon. members opposite about this, but it appears to me you are in the process of selling something other than what the sign is there for. I would heartily recommend that it might add to the dignity a bit if this word were removed and we were not confronted with the fact that this is "another" project. We should leave something to the imagination of the citizens when we give this information.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That is what you call political advertising.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member will expect me not to concur with the sentiments he has just expressed, because every project of our department is another project; and every project, I may say, Mr. Chairman, no matter how small it is, is another contribution to the highway system of the province and the good of the people of this province.

Mr. Nixon: I would not dream of questioning that at all.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well then, if I may say so, I would expect the hon. member to comment as he did. I do not think he will concur with my sentiments and I might add, sir, that I do not concur with his sentiments. So there you are.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister one question. In the Hamilton area we have a very good grid work of highways now coming into Hamilton. We have one bottleneck, that is Highway 6 from Hamilton to Guelph. It is quite a winding road, and narrow. I am wondering when the hon. Minister feels he will be able to start making that a four-lane highway? Has there been any decision made on that as yet?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would say that no specific decision has been made on this particular situation. I think I would be inclined to say to the hon. member that we do have a forward programme with respect to every highway in the province.

At the moment I am not in a position to tell you with any degree of accuracy when the improvement of the section to which the hon. member refers will reach its priority stage for improvement. But certainly it will not be a long period. It is a matter of programming. As I have said before in the course of debating these estimates, we have to assign priorities, and I think you can safely assume, Mr. Chairman, that if this is not on the programme this year then certainly we have assigned higher priorities to other roads in the province. But this does not mean that this thing will be abandoned any longer than might reasonably be expected. It will come up in the due course of events.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, having answered the question, now that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) is in his seat, if I might talk to him about those trees in which he professed some interest, and rightly so. I was not aware that he was returning this evening. I proposed to do it before we adjourned at six o'clock, for the sake of the record, so that if he was not here to hear the proposition he could at least read it in the record later. Now he is here.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): I am usually here, unless there is an awfully good reason.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, exactly.

Mr. Oliver: I was not afraid of the hon. Minister's answer, either.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, no reason to be, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): This could go on all night.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The contract to which the hon. leader of the Opposition referred, before we adjourned, related to the cost of the planting of a number of trees—400 in all, I believe. Now this contract involved tree-planting on Highway 401, as he properly described, in the area of Avenue Road. Trees required are large trees; big ones.

Mr. Oliver: Large trees?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Big ones.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will describe the size of them to the hon. leader of the Opposition. Trees required for this contract were from 10 to 20 feet in height. The reason of course was that the department wished to restore the situation to what it was before, rather than plant saplings and take ten years to do it. These trees are also required to form a sound barrier in that area.

Mr. Oliver: Sound barrier?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Sound barrier; and they do a very effective job, I might say, Mr. Chairman, in terms of providing a sound barrier. Trees of a certain height and a certain description do a very effective job.

The contract also requires the contractor not only to remove these trees, transport them and plant them, but to maintain all of them for a period of one year. In other words he has to dig, move them, plant them and maintain them for a period of a year. We felt this was a somewhat difficult job. The location is difficult for the planting project that is associated with it and consequently, while it certainly appears to be a lot of money—it did to me, my first impression when the hon. leader of the Opposition mentioned it was that it was a great deal of money—but when you examine the facts it is not too much.

Four bids were received, the lowest, as mentioned, was $55,600. Now one would wonder why The Department of Lands and Forests were not able to supply trees for this purpose. The Department of Lands and Forests usually do not allow trees to reach this size before they make them available for distribution for departmental and other use. This may not be an answer that satisfies the hon. leader of the Opposition, but these are the facts associated with it, Mr. Chairman. Having waited for him to return I certainly wanted to tell the hon. leader of the Opposition these related facts.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Mr. Chairman, I was just wondering if any of these trees will be replaced if they die?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that, of course, was associated with my previous comments. If they die in the period of 12 months they are replaced at no charge to the department.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, before we adjourned for the dinner hour, I asked a question in regard to the service centres along the route of 401 to the effect that I thought there were eight in operation during this past year. I asked the hon. Minister what was the revenue received from those eight service centres in operation during 1963.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member, he will understand, of course, that these service centres have not as yet been in operation for a full year so that to project a full year's revenue is impossible. The estimated annual revenues from these service centres, the eight centres on highway 401 is $400,000 and the estimated revenue for the two centres on Highway 400 is $40,000. A total of $440,000 is the estimated revenue from these service centres.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask three brief questions. First I would like to adopt the suggestions, sir, of the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) and thank the government for the work that is being contemplated in my area, namely, eight-tenths of a mile of construction. For this we are very thankful. I know it is a very ticklish engineering problem and will be solved.

The questions are: could the hon. Minister determine as to when Highway 77 from Staples to Comber will be reconstructed?

The second question: in view of a letter I received from the deputy Minister on October 8 suggesting Highway 18 between Kingsville and Harrow was going to be completed this spring and—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am afraid I did not catch that.

Mr. Paterson: Highway 18 between Kingsville and Harrow—it was indicated in the letter to me that this would be done either this winter or early this spring and I do not see this in the estimates.

A further question with regard to development roads, I notice that the Chatham area has been appropriated slightly over three-quarters of a million dollars to be spent on development roads and it has been drawn to my attention, whether true or not, that Essex county has never received one development road in the past. I would like to know whether this is true or not, and if it is true are there any other counties in this province that have never had a development road?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: On the matter of Highway 77 from Leamington to Comber, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is aware that this section of road was only assumed within less than the last 12-month period as a King's highway. We are aware of the fact there are sections of this road that are not in as good shape as we like a King's highway to be, but certain sections of this highway are in quite acceptable shape, I think, as far as King's highways standards are concerned. Having only assumed this a year or so ago and with the assumption, it will be recognized, of course, that we added heavily to our maintenance costs, I think we sensibly and reasonably felt that this might be deferred to a future programme.

I would say through you, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member, that he is quite correct: There is nothing programmed for this year, but we propose to have our district forces keep close watch on the substandard sections and when suitable maintenance will not keep them in an adequate state of repair then in fairness I think we can suggest that we will think about improvement, reconstruction, resurfacing or something.

On the matter of Highway 18, Kingsville to Harrow, I would respectfully request the hon. member to allow me time to get the facts. If we do not convey them to him this evening, we will do as we did last year when we addressed a letter to every member who asked a question on which we did not have the facts at our fingertips. We wrote and provided complete information. If we cannot get that information tonight, I assure the hon. member we will make this information available to him.

So far as development roads are concerned, I would simply say the hon. member is not quite correct when he said there have been no development roads in Essex county. This may be correct in a sense of the word, but the town line between Wheatley and Tilbury is a development road and as the town line and the boundary it is related 50 per cent to the county of Kent and 50 per cent to the county of Essex. It is quite a substantial undertaking and I think both counties are benefiting here very substantially.

I would point out to the hon. member that in the ordinary sense of things and on the basis of the warrants that we use for direct assistance, this was a rather generous move on the part of the department, because neither the county of Essex nor the county of Kent, in all honesty, unless there is a specific situation arises, conform to the warrants that are required for direct assistance. So here you see we have a rather costly stretch of road down the town line and there are quite substantial benefits accrue to the county of Essex as a result.

An hon. member: Flexible!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Very flexible indeed!

Mr. Paterson: Could the hon. Minister tell me when that road was determined a development road?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It was designated as a development road at the outset, it has never been designated as anything else. The departmental people were down and discussed this matter with the counties involved and at that time it was so designated.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): I am aware of the magnitude of the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Highways and the scope of his department, but what I am going to relate now I think there is a principle at stake.

We heard today from the hon. member for Armourdale, Mr. Chairman, that it took about six months and he could still not get a decision from the hon. Minister or the department on a matter of importance. We have been over four years trying to get a decision for officials in Owen Sound and of our suburban areas commission, as far as the take-over of a highway. It is a case of a suburban area road going northwest from Owen Sound some 12 miles and it carries more traffic than the province of Ontario highway. We are being asked to maintain this road and this has no relation to the city of Owen Sound. Here is a case where a traffic count was taken by the department of the hon. Minister and it showed that they were carrying more traffic than a province of Ontario highways department road; and the city of Owen Sound is asked to maintain it as a suburban area road—12 miles out.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark): Does the hon. member not get a subsidy on it?

Mr. Sargent: Yes, we do.

Mr. Yakabuski: The traffic is all after dark, is it not?

Mr. Sargent: Every time we bring this matter up with The Department of Highways the hon. Minister is looking out the window. It has been going on for four years. They just cannot get interested in our problem. The traffic count was taken by the department last year from July 18 to July 25. On July 18 it carried 2,364 cars; July 19, 3,851 cars; July 20, 4,444 cars; July 21, 5,642 cars; July 22, 3,149; July 23, 3,339; July 24, 2,200 even; and July 25, 1,934—a total, in one week's time, of 26,932 cars.

Bearing in mind that this road goes northwest from Owen Sound, it funnels all the traffic to Sauble Beach, the finest sand beach in Ontario; it funnels all the traffic through Bruce, up the peninsula, up to Manitoulin Island. All this traffic goes over this suburban area road, which the department defines as something which we should maintain. For four years we have been submitting that this is unfair; it is inequitable. We in Owen Sound cannot afford to fix our own streets, but we have to maintain the department's highways. Every time we come down here we draw a blank.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister, on behalf of the people whom I have the good fortune to represent, for a statement of what he plans to do about it. It has been going on four years. I think it is only fair that the small parts of Ontario be looked after, because two-thirds of the hon. members of this House are from the small parts and are supplying two-thirds of the money here. I think it is time that we had an equitable look at the smaller parts of Ontario. I would like an answer from the hon. Minister on that tonight.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, singularly enough we rather expected that this question might be proposed tonight, so I shall read, Mr. Chairman, with your permission, the story associated with this. This matter, and the hon. member is almost correct on this, has a history which goes back to February of 1962, and again 1963, when resolutions from the city of Owen Sound were received requesting the department to assume county road No. 2. This request was studied by the planning branch and it was determined that this road should become part of the highway system.

The status of the other highways in Grey county were also studied. And as the development road from Mount Forest easterly to Shelbourne, referred to by the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, has recently been assumed as Highway 89—I am afraid that the hon. leader of the Opposition will not be too pleased with the comments I am about to make—I will say that as Highway 4, Durham to Flesherton, does not justify highway status, it was decided to propose to the county that the department assume county road No. 2 as a highway and that Highway 4, from Durham to Flesherton, would be reverted to the county following the completion of the building and the repairs which are necessary.

The regional functional planning engineers held a meeting on June 26, 1963, with members of the county roads committee and the Owen Sound suburban roads committee, and proposed a road transfer, the road transfer arrangement to which I have already referred. The council agreed to the proposal in principle, and it was arranged that the regional engineer will arrange a meeting with prepare the necessary plans, showing the work required on Highway 4, and present these plans to a further meeting. The necessary plans are approaching completion and, following the approval of the design by the planning branch of the department, the regional engineer will arrange a meeting with the county and with the suburban roads committee and I would anticipate this would take place in a matter of about three weeks' time. It is hoped, of course, that full agreement to the proposed road transfer arrangement will be obtained at this meeting. The work on Highway 4 is presently programmed for 1966.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman! I have sat here all afternoon waiting for an opportunity to speak on one item.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Armourdale made an exceptionally good case of the problem he has in his riding. He made reference to the fact that the highway was built rather close to homes whose property values have deteriorated to the point where they cannot sell their properties. I think possibly that we have an opportunity now to acquire some of the land, in about a 20-mile stretch from the Homer Bridge to the Peace Bridge, for right-of-way on which to develop service roads along the highway where there are no buildings. I think it would be good business to purchase this land, or look into the matter in the very near future.

I was fortunate, and very pleased, to receive a letter from the hon. Minister to the chairman of the street committee in Fort Erie. He was good enough to send me this letter. I think one of the paragraphs in the letter warrants reading. They made certain requests for work in their own town—and I think it is rather lengthy—but one paragraph of the hon. Minister's reply to Mr. Miner is worth putting on the record. The third paragraph:

The department plans to study the control of access to the Queen Elizabeth Way from Niagara Falls to Fort Erie. In this study consideration will be given to the recommendations of your committee. When such report is available, improvement to the Queen Elizabeth Way in your area, will be carried out according to priority.

I think it is an exceptionally interesting paragraph. He is going to make a study, and I believe that while he is in the process of making the study he should try to determine why there are so many accidents along that strip of road.

My own opinion is that when you come out of the city of Toronto to Hamilton you have no level crossings to speak of—none at all I believe to Hamilton—you have your service roads along the highway, and you have your overpasses. And then you come into a stretch, from the circle on this side of Burlington to St. Catharines, where there are many roads which, perhaps, should be protected a little better than they are. But, coming into St. Catharines, you have exceptionally good over-passes; you are building another one there—and I believe they are all needed. I am not objecting to that, but the travelling public comes through that strip and there are service roads and overpasses and cloverleaves. They come into a stretch of road from that point to the Peace Bridge, travelling at the rate of speed that they are entitled to, which is some 60 miles an hour. They naturally do not look for the traffic that has to cross that highway, and this is where you come across your accidents.

I believe that The Department of Highways should consider purchasing the right of way now along that highway. The land is available, there are no buildings to speak of in that particular stretch and it would be a good time to purchase it cheaply. In your study I hope you come to that conclusion.

Why I say that is because I see mention in the newspaper, the Niagara Falls Evening Review—I get it here every morning, the day after it is published—and I would like to read one of the stories, or two paragraphs of it, which I so often read in that paper. This is about the Queen Elizabeth Way, of which I speak. I quote:

BERTIE YOUTH DIES FROM INJURIES IN QUEEN ELIZABETH WAY CRASH

Fort Erie—Eighteen-year-old Geoffrey Raymond of 338 Ridge Road, Ridgeway, died in the Buffalo General Hospital Saturday night as a result of head injuries sustained in the automobile crash on the Queen Elizabeth Way at Pettit Road on Friday evening.

Geoffrey was born in Fort Erie and was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Raymond. Mr. Raymond is a sergeant in the Bertie township police department.

He was a Grade 12 student at Ridgeway Crystal Beach high school where he was active in sports, baseball, track and field.

This young man died at the very young age of 18 years. There are many such accidents along that strip of road. I believe the reason that that happens is because motorists come from an area where they have access cloverleaves and service roads, into an area where they do not have them. They have just a stop-street sign and people come through there.

I know one particular spot that The Department of Highways engineers should look at and I would like very much to take the time to go there with them. That is the Lyon's Creek road where there is a similar road crossing on the Queen Elizabeth Way going into Welland. There is a high rise on that highway. I would say that if you went up the highway, let us say to the north for want of a better direction, going south to the Peace Bridge you find yourself climbing over a bit of a knoll. I would say at 2,000 feet from that intersection you cannot see cars approaching. I think the people take the chance of starting across, not seeing any traffic. In that particular area alone I do not know how many people have been maimed and many, many have been killed.

I would like to get the record and I think the Ontario Provincial Police department will get it for me, if The Department of Highways does not have those records.

I would like to appeal to the hon. Minister and suggest that this survey be made very quickly. I understand that this is in the process, according to the hon. Minister's letter, and it will be found that life can be saved, as well as property damage avoided, heaven knows how much. Maybe certain types of signs could be put up, stating that from here on in, until otherwise designated, there will not be any cloverleafs or service roads and traffic should watch and be cautious for intersections. I do believe that with the traffic that originates in Buffalo, Fort Erie and that area coming through, better precautions are called for.

In 1950, the hon. member for Welland, who was here a moment ago, and I—when it was my good fortune to be the warden for the county of Welland—got quite a delegation together and we came to the former Minister of Highways. The then Minister of Highways at that time was George Doucette. Then after that time we had, I think, Bill Goodfellow. Then the present hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) was the Minister of Highways, sir. We approached him about a similar problem, an overpass at the Mountain road, if you recall.

Apparently the Minister did not hear me, but we had a delegation from Stamford township pertaining to the Mountain road where there is an overpass considered, sir, and the Minister gave us an exceptionally good hearing. George Doucette did a good job of listening to us; Bill Goodfellow did a good job of listening to us. As I say, the present hon. Attorney General treated us exceptionally well. We thought we would come back again, the treatment was so good. The results were nil. This has been going on for many, many years.

Now then, the hon. member for Sudbury said that it took him 11 speeches. He has no record at all because I have approached the government with delegations from the county of Welland for about 14 years and I can assure hon. members that very little has been done in that particular area pertaining to level crossings.

There was a traffic light put in at the Willoughby-Bertie town line road after accidents and it was brought to the attention of The Department of Highways. The new hon. Minister was good enough to put a flasher or a light at the intersection of the town line at Black Creek. That is a precaution but is not the right type of installation. At least, as a layman I do not believe it is. I think traffic-operated lights should be installed at that particular point.

So from time to time we wind up with accidents, Mr. Chairman, which I think could be avoided if proper installations were put in. But for a cost factor to determine the future of that particular area and to put in the service roads which will eventually be put in, now is the time to acquire the land.

I am sorry to have to draw this to the hon. Minister's attention. About two or three weeks ago I submitted the local paper to you pertaining to the condition of some of that road. We do not mind the bumpy roads; we do not mind some of the guard rail being down. The thing that we are concerned about is losing life on that highway. It can be prevented if proper installations are put in and I hope your survey will support this conclusion and that very soon now overpasses or some type of traffic signals will be put in there to save life, property, and naturally, the anxiety that these people have to go through.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I will comment only briefly on this. Some of it may be related to the comments I made in response to the observations of the hon. member for Wentworth East (Mr. Gisborn) this afternoon. Certainly we propose to control the access on the Queen Elizabeth Way from Toronto to Fort Erie.

I would point out to the hon. member that up to this point and waiting for the report on the traffic study that is being made, we have felt inclined, as I suggested to the hon. member this afternoon, to attempt to deal with it on some sort of priority basis.

Certainly when you review the matter relating it to traffic counts, you find from the time you leave Toronto, go over the Burlington Bridge, proceed to Niagara Falls and thence to Fort Erie, that the average daily traffic drops off very sharply. I am not going to go through all of this because it would take too long, but when we start at Highway

2, the Lakeshore road to Highway 27, the figure is 50,000 vehicles per day; Highway 27 to county road 4 at Dixie road, 54,000; when we get to Highway 10, it drops to 40,000. I am going to drop down quite a bit here. When we get to Burlington Street, to Highway 20 at Stoney Creek, the traffic circle the hon. member referred to, we find the traffic is chopped more than in half; it is down to 22,000.

When we get to county road 22 at Vine-lund road, and this is one section we talked about this afternoon, the traffic drops down to 16,000, notwithstanding that it is a very bad and very serious accident-prone location. When we get all the way down here—we will get down closer to home for you—to Highway 8 at Homer—the bridge now is more appropriately called the Garden City Skyway rather than the Homer Bridge—we are down now to the Thorold Stone road, and the traffic is down to 14,500. When we get to county road number 5, to the Fort Erie west limits, the traffic is down to 7,000.

I would suggest to the hon. member then, that while we are proceeding with this and while we are waiting for the traffic study, maybe we are proceeding in a sensible fashion in that we are trying to remedy the situation at these areas where the traffic is the highest.

I do not want the hon. member to get the impression that we are not aware of accidents, because we are. When the hon. member makes reference to accidents and wants details, I suggest that he contact me or the deputy Minister and we will do our best to describe these accidents to him and why they took place.

As far as control of access is concerned, we realize that down in the area referred to there are certain crossings at grade.

Mr. Bukator: Yes, there are.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, there are. Definitely. We do propose to provide for grade separations in all situations that are related to accident-prone areas, related to the demands that the traffic imposes. I think I will simply wind this up, if I may, Mr. Chairman, by saying that when we have the report finished and when we have had a chance to evaluate it, I would hope, as the hon. member does, that we will find the answers to these problems. I do not think there is anything more I can say at the moment, but certainly we hope as you do, that we will find a way to solve these bad situations and the problems associated with them.

Mr. Bukator: Is there a possibility that your people will instruct or request the purchase of at least the land for the service road at this time, because there are no buildings on it and it can be acquired very cheaply, so you will not come into a similar problem that you had here on 401?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: On the matter of property requirements I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, that they will be altogether associated with what the report of the traffic study reveals. In other words, I do not think it is reasonable to suggest that until we get this report and have had time to properly evaluate it that we can in fairness know what our property requirements are. But once we get this report, and have gone through the evaluation process, and this will not take long, then, I think we will be in a position to move in and acquire the property that is associated with all these requirements.

I think I could maybe safely say this, too, that to move in there now and acquire property might involve the acquisition of more than is required. But certainly the day of property acquisition is not too far off because the report is not too far off, Mr. Chairman. At that point we will move in and acquire our property certainly.

Mr. Bukator: Just to finish up; you have said that I could ask you for a report on accidents. From the Dorchester Circle to Fort Erie, these are the particular roads to which I make reference where they cross, at a level crossing or whatever you call it—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Crossing at grades.

Mr. Bukator: Yes, crossing at grades. I would like the accident report of, let us say, the last 10 years anyhow, because the second lane has not been finished for the last ten years. I believe that people travelling that particular highway believe they are protected from traffic coming in front of them, and then the cars come out in front of them and naturally they have these accidents.

There is one particular area, at Lyon's Creek, where this hump on the road is just like a dog waiting for a rabbit. A car comes across; and the poor soul starting across, that is where they kill him. Many have been killed at that intersection. If nothing more, they could take that down to level.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the hon. member to clarify this. Are you referring to the section of the QEW from the Dorchester traffic circle to Fort Erie?

Mr. Bukator: Yes.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: All right. We will provide as much of this information as we can make accessible to you.

Mr. Bukator: It would be interesting, not so much to myself, but I would like the hon. members of the Legislature to hear it.

Mr. Morningstar: Mr. Chairman, we realize that it takes time to get these things done. I am sure the hon. member for Niagara Falls knows that it takes time to get these things done. After all, we are in the great county of Welland. Some years ago, we were working on this west side road, which is 406 today. You will recall, my good hon. friend, that it was some 10 or 12 years since we were working on that road. Today it looks to be a reality, we are pretty sure it is and we appreciate what our good government has done—the provincial government along with the federal government—in providing this road.

Now they are continuing the extension of this road to the city of St. Catharines where other good friends represent the riding.

An hon. member: Who is that?

Mr. Morningstar: We do hope that the federal government will come in on this scheme and its construction and pay a portion of this extension of the west side road.

Then again the tunnel in the city of Welland, we are working on that. We are very pleased today to see the federal government working along with the provincial government in building this tunnel in the city of Welland which will go a long way in relieving the traffic congestion there. It is something we have wanted for a number of years and I am sure the hon. Minister of Highways in time will get along to the Niagara Falls riding, the same as he has up in the Welland riding.

It takes time to get these things done but today we are seeing results, and I am sure the people in our area do appreciate, Mr. Minister, the work that you are doing in the great county of Welland. Not only in the Welland riding, but in the Niagara Falls riding, too, on Highway No. 3, the Dorchester road. We are very pleased indeed to see that you have these projects under consideration.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Chairman, I must reply because I did make reference to the fact that the hon. member for Welland and I sat on county council and in 1950 when I was a warden of that county, we were on the committee in Fort Erie looking over the Queen Elizabeth from the Peace Bridge on through the county, that great county of Welland, to which you make reference.

From 1950 to 1964 is taking a lot of time to get around to that end of the county—at least where the traffic originates on the Peace Bridge, on the Queen Elizabeth Way—so I made reference to the fact that you and I worked together on this west side road of which you speak. It is one of the very few times that the federal government stepped into the road building business. It was maybe because I had friends in Ottawa at that time; because you got 50 per cent from the provincial government and we went to Ottawa and got the other 50 per cent. As a matter of fact, when we built the west side road from Port Colborne to Welland we wound up $18,000 ahead of the game. Do you recall that?

An hon. member: What did you do with it?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bukator: We had more money, as a matter of fact the hon. Minister might want to hire the hon. member for Welland and me to show him how it is done.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): One last question of the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman. Did the hon. Minister's department hire counsel to prosecute a Mrs. O'Hare and Mr. Swartman and what were their fees?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, this involves the case associated with the municipal roads engineer I believe in the New Liskeard district and a Mrs. O'Hare as part of the contracting firm. I might say that the costs associated with this action have never as yet been submitted because, if the hon. member is not aware of it, it has been stated in the press the case is being retried. The jury in the first instance was a hung jury and reached no decision whatsoever. The case is to be retried and I would presume until the thing is finalized there will be no charges submitted. We have no charges associated with that action submitted to the department as yet.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister did not answer my first question. Did he hire the counsel? Did his department hire them first?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The hon. Attorney General's department engaged the counsel for this.

Mr. Newman: That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, to clarify my request—I am sorry I did not understand the hon. Minister when he was quoting highway numbers—to finalize my request, is the Shallow Lake road to be taken over by The Department of Highways?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I submitted the information, Mr. Chairman, I do not think I will read this whole thing again.

Mr. Sargent: I am sorry, I just want an answer to my question, please, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Yakabuski: What do you want anyhow?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We have determined, as I pointed out, that this county road No. 2 should be part of the highway system.

Mr. Sargent: We do not know it as that in that section—as No. 2. We know it as Highway No. 27, I think it is.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, the reference was to county road No. 2.

Mr. Sargent: The Shallow Lake Road?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, known as the Shallow road.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister: how many miles of provincial highways as presently set out do you intend to try to get back to the counties in the next few months, or in the next year? You have had an evaluation, I understand, and you have arrived at certain conclusions that certain mileage of provincial highways is not adaptable for the provincial highway system and you are going to try to make an agreement with the counties. How many miles are involved throughout the province in this sort of a trading deal that you have in mind?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I will have to get that information for the hon. gentleman. It is not available immediately. I would suppose there are similar situations elsewhere in the province, but I am not aware of these figures tonight. I do not think they are readily accessible. I will make that information available to my hon. friend at the first convenient opportunity.

Mr. Oliver: May I ask my hon. friend a supplementary question? What standard is employed by your department to determine that a highway presently designated as a provincial highway should not in the future be a provincial highway?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The volume of traffic would be number one. The type of traffic would be another.

Mr. Oliver: The type of traffic?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The type of traffic! I would think it probably would be well established that the traffic over the section that has been referred to is largely local traffic. In other words, it hardly meets the warrants that are associated with a King's highway or a provincial highway. Now I have to assume, and I think fairly assume at the moment, that this has all been closely investigated and that the section of highway that is under discussion at the moment is carrying preponderantly local traffic.

Mr. Oliver: You will be able to persuade me that it is not for political reasons, in any sense of the word?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, perish the thought, is the word, Mr. Chairman, certainly not. I would repeat for the information of my hon. friend that before the county is requested to take it back, it will be restored to proper standards, probably a complete rebuilding job will be undertaken. You will have a better road than ever before.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make a few comments at this time. My hon. friend from Wellington-Dufferin referred to me this afternoon and I thought it only appropriate that I should make a few comments about his remarks at this time.

Indeed, I am happy and I appreciate, and I am sure my people do, the fact that the department and the government have built this road to which he referred this afternoon. It has meant a great deal to me and to them, I am sure, and certainly I do not hesitate in thanking the government for it.

The government has also built a bridge in my riding, a bridge on Highway 86, west of Wingham. Once again, we appreciate that and we thank the government for it.

Before I sit down, I would like to mention that there is another bridge we would like in my riding—that is, a connecting link bridge. Certainly I hope, and I am sure, the hon. Minister will give favourable consideration to this proposal.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a brief comment on this. The Department of Highways has never at any stage of the game refused the council of the town of Wingham this bridge. However, I would point out to the hon. member that The Highway Improvement Act stipulates that municipalities with a population in excess of 2,500 are entitled to 90 per cent subsidization on connecting links, or structures associated with connecting links. The problem in this instance, I think the hon. member is quite aware of this, is that the council of the town of Wingham, which he represents, simply feels that the rate of subsidy should be 100 per cent. Even if I wanted to subsidize at the rate of 100 per cent, I would have to say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the hon. member, that the statutes will not permit me to do it. And until the town of Wingham is prepared to absorb the modest ten per cent of this cost, I am afraid I have to suggest to the hon. member they will not have a bridge.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 803 carried?

Mr. Gaunt: One final comment, Mr. Chairman.

I would just like to say that I realize and I appreciate the hon. Minister's problem. I will say, however, that the bridge—the Zetland bridge to which I referred earlier—I believe cost $247,000. The Wingham bridge is only roughly half the length of that bridge. Maybe there are other things involved which add to the cost, but I understand that the Wingham bridge, as the plans are set out, would cost roughly $250,000. My question to you, sir, is: Where does the added cost come in? The Wingham bridge is only roughly half the length of the Zetland bridge, so where does the other cost come in? Of course, this all comes back to the town of Wingham. If the cost of that bridge could be lowered, then their share would be less.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would answer the hon. member's question by saying that, where a connecting link is involved, it is the prerogative and the privilege of the municipality to initiate any project associated with that connecting link if they so choose. If the town of Wingham, then wishes to propose to the department that they wish to build this bridge, under their connecting link agreement and on the basis of the subsidy contribution which the statute permits us to make; and if they, in their wisdom, feel they would like to employ consulting engineers to advise them in this respect; and a bridge, shall we say, which is satisfactory to the town of Wingham, can be designed and proposed by such consulting engineers, then I see no particular difficulty.

The estimates of The Department of Highways associated with this happened to be $250,000. This is what our engineers feel is required to build the type of bridge the town should have. It bears no relationship to the Zetland bridge which, I think, is the one to which you are referring on Highway 86. The span itself is not always the factor which determines the cost of the bridge. All other structural aspects have to be taken into consideration.

But I would repeat: If the town of Wingham is satisfied with the basic rate of subsidy the statute permits, and if they can come up with a design which costs less—and it suits them adequately and provides all the features related to safety and structural requirements—then I am quite prepared to say the department will approve 90 per cent of the cost for subsidy purposes.

This matter, you see, of where a connecting link is involved, Mr. Chairman, I would say through you to the hon. member, is entirely the prerogative of the municipality in which the connecting link is situated, and where the agreement between The Department of Highways and the municipality is related. So this is not a matter, I think, which involves the department to quite the extent the hon. member feels it does, because these prerogatives rest entirely with the municipality of the town of Wingham.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, might I ask the hon. Minister if the department has a plan which envisages the highway needs of this province for the next two decades?

Mr. Yakabuski: The hon. member is going back to the Hepburn days; we do not want that.

Mr. Sopha: I am thinking the hon. member for Renfrew South is the greatest argument I have seen in favour of retroactive birth control.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would say to the hon. member that a 20-year needs study was undertaken in the year 1959, under the direction of the then Minister of Highways, the present hon. Attorney General of the province. This needs study, sir, is now five years under way, and I think I can substantiate to the hon. member, or safely say, that the department has kept pace with the needs which were projected in this needs study, with 15 years to go.

Not content with this, Mr. Chairman, while we did project this 20-year needs study, we constantly re-evaluate it. We update it from time to time. It was followed by a study on the needs for urban roads and streets. Other studies have been undertaken. Studies have been undertaken relating to subsidies, and many of the increased subsidies introduced over the last 12 months have been related to this study. There have been substantial increases in terms of subsidies, as the hon. member knows, so I can safely say to you that, of course, we have a plan. Two decades is 20 years. We had a 20-year plan in 1959. In five years this plan has progressed, with the updating features I have mentioned. Of course we have a plan. We always have a plan.

Mr. Sopha: You have been talking vague generalities all day. Let me ask the hon. Minister specifically—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The hon. member asked a rather general question, may I say.

Mr. Sopha: What is the gross amount of capital which will be required over the next 20 years to meet our highway needs?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, the needs study to which I referred, released in 1959, indicated the cost of the road needs of this province for the 20 years subsequent to March 31, 1958 as follows: Roads controlled by the province, King's highways and secondary highways, $2,438,780,000. At the same time, the projected needs in the municipal sector—municipal roads, county, township and urban—was $4,714,140,000. The total, then, of these needs costs, forecast five years ago was $7,152,920,000. The study indicated that expenditures would keep pace with needs if increased annually by $7.8 million over the $276 million spent in the year 1957-58. If I am being too general now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member may correct me.

The expenditures were based on 1957-58 costs, and included a five to six per cent allowance for overhead. If the hon. member wishes, I can pursue these figures to show that the provincial government has been keeping abreast of roads. Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member wish me to go all the way with this information?

Mr. Sopha: Let me just ask the hon. Minister this: Are they related as well to the increase in motor vehicle ownership in the province?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, yes.

Mr. Sopha: And are they based upon the premise that with 2.5 million cars now that there will be four million or more in 1970?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is right.

Mr. Sopha: That is the premise?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: These figures were taken into the calculations. Normal growth figures relating to the specific items the hon. member has referred to were all taken into the calculations in the needs study. They would have to be or they would not be of value. This is not a stagnant economy. In those days, of course, we knew the province was going to grow, as we know it is growing and we know it is going to continue to grow. How could you predict a 20-year needs study on a constant basis? Mr. Chairman, I submit this does not even make sense. We must have projected some growth figures or the study would have been useless.

An hon. member: All we did was ask.

Mr. Sopha: It does not make sense at all. I will tell the hon. Minister one thing that has not been growing in this province in your 20 years of power and that is the population. The population has not grown very significantly. We are only six million—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Six and a half million.

Mr. Sopha: Can the hon. Minister tell us where six million of us are going to raise this fabulous amount of capital over the next 20 years to pay for these highways? Tonight, on March 17, 1964, the hon. Minister asks for $127 million. To meet, over the next 20 years, the requirements in excess of $7 billion he is going to need, sir, a capital vote of over $300 million a year. Let me ask the hon. Minister this: In order to meet the projected requirements of $7 billion, when is he going to start to ask for the $300 million? Is that next year? Or the year after?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would simply say to the hon. member that the figures I have stated tonight include not only the contributions that the province makes to the roads of Ontario but also the contributions that are made by the municipalities. These are gross figures.

The hon. member knows very well that when we get away from the departmental capital construction programme, a very great amount of our budget, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact a greater percentage of our budget this year, will be in the form of subsidies to municipalities. Certainly, while we are spending money the municipalities are spending money too, so I am talking about gross expenditures for road purposes. Naturally, our whole municipal programme outside of our capital construction programme is a joint one, with all the municipalities, urban, rural and otherwise involved, so that the expenditures I refer to are quite accurate and quite sensible.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. Minister this question? He said that it had to increase yearly by seven point something million dollars from the 1958-59 figure of $276 million, and how much per year does it have to increase?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: $7.8 million.

Mr. Whicher: $7.8 million—that would be $39 million over a five-year period from 1958 to 1964, is that correct? Well, then, according to my arithmetic, the hon. Minister should be spending $315 million this year on the highways, and he is asking for a budget of $299,406,000. Would the hon. Minister explain that, please?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I might review these figures with the hon. member, and they show certainly that the programme has been met very well.

Mr. Whicher: Not by your figures, Mr. Minister, because I am using your own. $276 million in 1958—that is five years ago; and $7.8 million per year again comes to $39 million. $39 million and $276 million is $315 million. This is a study the hon. Minister made only five years ago, and we find that the hon. Minister is very close to $16 million short in this particular year.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: But the hon. member has not heard the rest of the figures yet, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Whicher: No, I have not. Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Let us go back to the year where reference was made to $276 million, shall we? We said the total estimated requirements were $276 million. This is the base year. The subsequent year, the total estimated requirements were $283.8 million. In 1959-60, the next year, $291.6 million. In 1961-62, $307.2 million. In 1962-63, $315 million.

Mr. Whicher: But surely—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: He said the total estimated requirements. These include municipal subsidies, Mr. Chairman, these are capital costs. Now we can deduct from these municipal expenditures as I go along and show you the net provincial expenditures, but I am dealing with the total to which the needs study related. In 1963-64 the total estimated requirements $322.8 million, and in the year that we are now talking about estimates for $330.6 million. This is keeping pace almost to the dollar with the forecast needs.

From this we have to deduct municipal expenditures, and at the outset I made it quite clear, and I refer to my remarks to the hon. member for Sudbury, in talking about the gross needs of the province. So to be related properly, I am talking to the hon. member about the gross needs.

Mr. Whicher: Just one more question. The figures that the hon. Minister has added, along with the provincial expenditures, the initial expenditures are capital projected costs too, or were they for maintenance and capital?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Both, all expenditures! Total! Capital and maintenance!

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question with reference to the need for the massive changes in Highway 401. Were deficiencies discovered as a result of this 1959 survey or was the survey made as a result of suddenly finding the need for a greater amount of lanes on that highway?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would think in answering that question, I would say that the need for this construction to which the hon. member has referred, became manifest at about the same time as the study.

Mr. Braithwaite: One more question, Mr. Chairman. When was it made known to the public that the department planned for the widening of Highway 401 in the Metro area?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This was done about a year ago at a press conference called for that purpose.

Mr. Braithwaite: A further question, Mr. Chairman. Were the five years that elapsed spent in planning for the widening of the highway? What has happened during the five years? The hon. Minister said he found out in 1959.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is that the 1959 needs study indicated the need would arise in the 20-year period. I am quite frank to say that this need came about somewhat faster than we anticipated that it would.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 803 agreed to.

This concludes the estimates of The Department of Highways.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1801:

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, on vote 1801, there is a correction that the department has asked to be made on item 9. The reference there is to The Welfare Unit Act, RSO 1960, chapter 428, section 5. That should read: "The District Welfare Administration Boards Act, 1962-63."

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, last night when the House adjourned, the decision was that we were going to have the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources today, following The Department of Highways.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I was not here. There seems to be some confusion, because someone else told me that they expected the estimates of The Department of Economics and Development to follow The Department of Highways. All I am trying to do is accommodate myself to the hon. members in the House.

Perhaps we could have the opening addresses and then we could adjourn if this would be satisfactory. I do not want to crowd hon. members if they are not ready to deal with these estimates. On the other hand, we really were talking about dealing with these estimates last week.

Mr. MacDonald: It is true that we were talking about dealing with them last week, but last night the House leader first indicated it would be The Department of Economics and Development. It was corrected behind the scenes, in full view of us, that it would be The Department of Energy Resources and there was no mention made of Public Welfare.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might make plainer what happened. I announced on the adjournment of the House—and I noticed in Hansard today what I had said—that it would be The Department of Economics and Development. I had not talked to the hon. Prime Minister myself, but that was the information I had. The hon. member for York South advised me then, and in the hallway afterwards, that it was Energy Resources. Having nothing better to go on than that, and there being some agreement over here that that might be it, that was the basis upon which the House adjourned last evening. If there is any misunderstanding I can only take whatever blame or censure there may be for it.

On the other hand, I do know that the hon. member for York South had a schedule which he discussed with me. I do not know where it came from, but it had The Department of Energy Resources on it, I believe.

Mr. MacDonald: The schedule I referred to was the one the hon. Prime Minister gave us on Friday, which was Highways, Energy Resources, and Travel and Publicity, this week.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, we will have to work our way out of this difficulty. I might take it, through you, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member is not prepared to go on with these estimates tonight. I mean, is he raising a point of order or is he not prepared to go on?

Mr. MacDonald: I am speaking on a point of order, in that we were prepared to go on with Energy Resources, but my hon. colleague who is in a position to lead off on Public Welfare is not here.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Chairman, we will go to the order paper, we have lots of work there and we can deal with some second readings. We can go into committee of the whole House and deal with a whole host of bills. Just to keep the record straight, tomorrow afternoon we will go on with The Department of Public Welfare.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report it has come to a certain resolution and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to a certain resolution and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

THE COMMISSIONERS FOR TAKING AFFIDAVITS ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General) moves second reading of Bill No. 74, An Act to amend The Commissioners for taking Affidavits Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to make some remarks with respect to this particular bill.

The appointment of commissioners for taking affidavits has been of concern to me for some time. A commissioner is deemed to be an officer of the Supreme Court of Ontario. He must satisfy himself of the genuineness of the signature of a deponent and must administer the oath in the manner required by law before he signs the jurat. He should refuse to administer an oath for a deponent who he knows is swearing a false statement. Any person who administers an oath is subject to being called upon to testify as to the authenticity of the signature of the affirmant as to the form of administration and as to any other circumstances.

The importance of an affidavit which is sworn before a commissioner must not be overlooked. A person may be committed to a mental hospital on the basis of such affidavit. Some disputes relating to a man's property may be disposed of on the basis of affidavit material. Affidavit evidence may be used in settling important questions relating to the estates of deceased persons. It is thus obvious that serious consideration be given in the conferring of these commissions.

The important function performed by a commissioner for taking affidavits appears to have been lost sight of in the flood of such appointments, numbering now some 4,800. Far too many appointments, I feel, were made which were not required. Many appointments were unrestricted, both as to territory and occupation. Far too many have no conception of the duties or responsibilities involved in the appointment.

I have therefore directed the officials in my department in many instances to refuse requests for new appointments and not to extend many coming up for renewal. Many wide open commissions have on renewal been restricted both as to area and occupation.

The present policy in the department is geared to look after the needs of the public, not the convenience of the individual.

Appointments need not be made in areas where there are already sufficient persons authorized to take affidavits, whether it is solicitors, justices of the peace, commissioners or notaries. In out-of-the-way places appointments of commissioners, or even notaries, are required for the public good.

In dealing with particular groups, a definite number have been appointed with province-wide jurisdiction, thus eliminating the necessity of appointing an individual in each separate unit or area. This has been successfully achieved with regard to credit unions and the Canadian Legion and it is intended to extend this policy to other groups where practicable.

Two main areas are covered in the proposed amendments to The Commissioners for taking Affidavits Act, which is this bill.

In the municipal field it is found that more commissioners are urgently required to transact the public business and therefore the deputy clerk, in addition to the clerk and treasurer, has been designated an ex-officio commissioner. Further, in every local municipality with a population of over 100,000 the administrative head, and his deputy, of departments having dealings with the public have also been designated ex-officio commissioners for the purposes of the affairs of the municipality. It is appreciated that in certain areas additional appointments may have to be made and this will also apply to areas having a population under 100,000. Such applications will be treated on the merits of the individual cases.

It must also be appreciated that for the proper conduct of business in dealing with the public, certain officials in corporations should hold appointments as commissioners for taking affidavits. Therefore, upon application the bill provides that the secretary and treasurer of a corporation with share capital and co-operative organizations may be appointed commissioners for the affairs of the corporation. Further, provision is made for the appointment of managers in branch offices of such corporations where required. It should be pointed out also, Mr. Speaker, that, to impress all appointees with the duties and responsibilities of their positions in office, a brochure is being prepared. It will be sent out with each appointment.

While I am speaking on commissioners I would like, Mr. Speaker, to go a little further, with a word or two concerning the other two types of commissions which give people authority to administer oaths. First of all there are notaries public, of whom there are some 900, not including members of the legal profession, in our province. The hon. members will remember The Notaries Act was amended last year, providing for expiration of all previous appointments on June 30, 1964, June 30, 1965, and June 30, 1966, and for all new appointments to be of three years duration. A letter, and a copy of the Act, was sent to all notaries on record in our office, and quite a number of these have been returned marked "unknown," "deceased," "appointment not required," and so on.

The first group of notarial appointments is coming up for renewal on June 30 of this year. These will be carefully screened with a view, where necessary, to further reducing the number. In some cases it will be found that an appointment as a commissioner will be sufficient for the purposes of applicant; and in many cases it will no doubt transpire that the appointment is not required. The need for new appointments will be similarly screened. Here again, in the case of commissioners, the needs of the public rather than the convenience of the individual will be the determining factor.

The third category of persons, entitled to take affidavits and administer oaths, is justice of the peace. At the present time there are approximately 900 justices of the peace in the province of Ontario, usually appointed for the county or district but a number having provincial jurisdiction. Many of these have been appointed for a great number of years and still retain their appointments. My department is notified of these appointments, and of their death and removal, through the magistrates, the police, the local member, the Crown Attorney; and usually, if necessary, a recommendation is made for another appointment to carry on the work. Many appointments also, sir, which were made and required many years ago are now, in view of modern transportation, not required. It is proposed that many of these may be transferred to an inactive list.

What I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. members is that there are presently—in addition to those members of the legal profession who are both notaries public and commissioners ex officio, and in addition to the clerk and heads of council, and in cities the members of council, and members of this Legislature who are all authorized to take affidavits—4,800 commissioners, 900 notaries, and 900 justices of the peace. It would appear to me, sir, that the checking over of this, the revising of the requirements for the issuance of these commissions, is long overdue. With the assistance of the present Act it is my opinion, sir, that we may be able, first of all, to supply the needs of the public as well as those of the corporations doing business in Ontario. Also we shall enable them in those areas where they will not be covered by the new Act, to have special appointments made in a manner similar to that done in the past—except with a much better screening and proof of necessity.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): This is a step in the right direction—long overdue. However, in principle I must say, Mr. Speaker, that not much thought went into the preparation of this statute. It is perfectly apparent in section 2 that the statute is, I would say, designed for the interest of finance companies; because under section 2 every finance company branch office in the province of Ontario is going to have, as a matter of right, a commissioner for taking affidavits.

Hon. Mr. Cass: No, no!

Mr. Sopha: That is the way it reads.

Hon. Mr. Cass: It may apply.

Mr. Sopha: That is the way it reads:

Upon application therefor and payment of the prescribed fee, the principal officer in each branch office in Ontario, of a corporation with share capital.

The branch office of every finance company in the province is now, on simple application, going to have a commissioner for taking affidavits for the affairs of the corporation.

Formerly, a few finance company branch offices had commissioners in them. I recall that the Law Association of Sudbury at one time decreed that fact to the inspector of legal offices, if not to the hon. Attorney General himself, and got a very cool and a very evasive reply about it. Let us look at the contrast in principles—the matter of principle. The borrower goes to the finance company and, if the document is required—a document which affects him and his future, his future income and the matter of debt to the finance company—if it is to be executed then a commissioner, right in the office of the finance company presumably, may take the affidavit.

I do not know, it may be that people who work for finance companies are more ethical, and men of greater integrity, than lawyers; but, at least under the rules of court in respect of lawyers, where a lawyer wishes an affidavit sworn or a document executed which is part and parcel of a litigious matter, then the rules of court require the lawyer to go outside his own office to have it sworn.

He has got to go down the hall, if he is fortunate to have another colleague at the bar in close contiguity to him, to have it sworn in order that it may properly be presented in the proceedings in court.

There is a very good reason for it. It erases the feeling of suspicion that the document was not properly sworn. The court, when it has it sworn by someone outside the office, at least on the face of it gives that appearance; but, further, it has a very purgative effect, a very prophylactic effect against the presentation of questionable documents. But apparently in the mind of the hon. Attorney General and his advisors, the same considerations ought not to apply to finance companies. It is perfectly right, under section 2 of this statute, that every branch manager of a finance company office in Ontario may now, on simple application, become a commissioner for taking affidavits.

I think—I say as a matter of principle, Mr. Speaker—that such a provision as encompassed in the four corners of this Act is not therefore designed to protect the interests of the public; and whereas the hon. Attorney General prates about reducing the number of commissioners, if, as I say and is apparent in this statute, every branch office of a finance company is going to have one, he is not at all going to significantly reduce the number of commissioners in the province. I venture to say he is going to increase them. He is going to increase the numbers.

Furthermore, as a matter of a priority reasoning, I cannot see that the secretary and treasurer of each corporation with share capital ought to, as of right, be commissioners for taking affidavits in the affairs of their own corporations. Surely as a matter of practice and development, the taking of an oath achieves its fullest effect if someone not connected with the affairs of the very corporation is the person who swears the deponent to the oath. Now this is swearing, the way it is phrased in this statute, and I say not much thought has apparently gone into it at all. It seems that factor is completely eliminated. People, mixed in their own affairs, may with impunity take affidavits from deponents concerning the affairs of that very corporation.

It does seem to me that a matter of principle, but a very valid principle of our law, is quite overlooked if not entirely violated.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Chairman, following on what my hon. colleague from Sudbury has said, I have many times read and observed that the main defence of poor innocent people who are in the toils of finance companies, and are being sued for the unpaid balance of a note or bill is based on whether or not this note or bill was signed. And even when evidence is brought that a commissioner, who is not a party to the finance company—even when he is brought on the stand to prove that the note or bill was signed—it happens sometimes that there is difficulty with the evidence he gives. If what my hon. colleague from Sudbury has said is true, then it seems to me that there is going to be even more difficulty in the courts with reference to people who are unable to defend themselves and are sued by finance companies. There will not be a leg for them to stand on as far as whether or not they did or did not sign the note or bill in question.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the emphasis on this bill is that the hon. Minister is going to have a look at some of the merits of individuals getting the requirement of a commissioner for taking affidavits. I have been concerned, sir. I come from the west end of the city, representing many people who have come from Europe. To many of these people, the very name of notary public or commissioner implies this person has the full office and full responsibility of a lawyer.

I would suggest, sir, that for the life of me I could never understand just how there was any merit qualification in the method of giving the commissioner of oaths office to a number of people. I feel that it is very necessary the commissioner of oaths should be given to people who are closely in touch with large organizations. I am thinking of voluntary organizations.

I am still not clear about the basis of merit. I listened very carefully to the remarks of the hon. Minister in which he said that he would have a merit system by which the individual could apply. I would assume—I have had occasion where I have written for some people who I felt were doing a very commendable job, particularly with newcomers, in helping them get settled into the community. I wrote on their behalf, describing their work. They were turned down with no reason given.

We were told that the whole application process was under review. Now, if it is just met on a broad basis, then the question I raise, sir, is whether the hon. Minister could tell us when a person is turned down, would it be because of lack of education or would it be clearly stated why that person is turned down? I would like to follow up on the remarks of my two colleagues in connection with people signing a note. Again I speak with respect to people in my own riding.

I can remember some of the most heart-rending situations where a man and woman have gone into a real estate office, for example, and where they have signed papers. The papers have been signed and they have not had a chance of second thoughts as to what they were doing. They have come to my office to claim that they really did not understand what they were signing, that they were rushed into this. I could think of nothing that is more apprehensive than if we had this spider's web of finance companies drawing poor people in to sign responsibility for high interest rates on loans, and to think that they would not have the opportunity for a second thought by having to go outside in order to get a signature authorized.

I summarize my points, sir. I would like to have a clear understanding of the merit basis. I would like to see, as the hon. member has suggested, that this is not going to be an easy way for finance companies to stamp their approval on the contracts that they arrange.

My third point, sir, is that I did not get completely clear what the hon. Minister mentioned about credit unions and Canadian Legions. Will it be available now for someone in the Canadian Legion to be a commissioner of oaths? I am thinking particularly of my own riding where I get a number of Legionnaires coming down to me about pensions. This would be a very wonderful service if one of their responsible officers could be a commissioner of oaths.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, it would appear that there is a certain ambivalence in the policy of the hon. Attorney General with regard to the issuance of credentials to commissioners for taking oaths. As the three speakers who have preceded me have pointed out, the door seems to be open quite wide for officials of certain types of companies. The hon. Attorney General and other gentlemen on the government benches have pointed out that the granting of an application made by such officials, or officers, is discretionary. But the fact that they are singled out for special mention in the law would indicate that it would normally be expected that they will be granted this power upon application.

I would imagine that the hon. Attorney General would always reserve a certain discretionary authority to refuse the application of a person who is clearly unsuitable. But the fact that the section is being put into the Act at all would indicate that he would regard it as normal that these people will become commissioners for taking oaths. I would agree with the objections to the procedure that have already been stated. I will not bother repeating them because those objections have already been well expressed.

I would like to contrast this development with other developments, which, as far as I know, have been taking place. I regret that I missed the earlier part of the hon. Attorney General's remarks so I did not hear what he said with regard to branches of the Canadian Legions. But certainly the policy of the department a few months ago was that they were going to cut down on the number of people in Canadian Legions who would have this power; and, indeed, did cut it down. I know of a specific case, which the hon. Attorney General may recall, involving one of the largest Legion branches in Ontario to which I happen to belong.

I wrote a letter on behalf of the then president of that branch, who was applying for this authority. Traditionally there had always been one officer in that branch who had the authority to take oaths. The commission of the particular gentleman who exercised the authority was due to expire; he was quite elderly, not in too good health and he did not wish to carry the responsibility any longer. So another officer in the Legion applied. The hon. Attorney General's department advised him—and I think they were good enough to advise me, too—that their policy now was not to issue any more of these commissions to officers in Legion branches. The particular branch I am talking about has several hundred members. Legion members are getting older—like all human beings—and a good many of them are fairly elderly men now who have to make applications—

Hon. Mr. Cass: Oh, I am not that old, and I am a Legion member.

Mr. Bryden: But the average age is steadily increasing, and there are a lot of World War I veterans in these branches. They have made a tremendous contribution to the development of the Canadian Legion, but now they are in the position where they are applying for pensions of one kind and another and frequently these applications have to be notarized, especially in a large branch such as the one I am talking about.

It seemed to me sensible that an officer of that branch should be able to take affidavits or statutory declarations for at least members of the branch, and I would say perhaps all the veterans in the area even if they were not members of the Legion. But this policy has been changed and now, as I understood the policy as it was expressed last fall, at any rate, there are only a limited number attached to the provincial command of the Canadian Legion who are to have the power to administer oaths. I cannot understand why what I regard as a necessary and legitimate function should be now withdrawn, and yet at the same time we have the proposal contained in section 2 of this bill.

While I am on the subject, I would suggest to the hon. Attorney General that if applications from officers of finance companies are to be treated as more or less a matter of course, then we should consider the position of major trade unions and major branches or locals of trade unions where there is a substantial amount of work involving the taking of oaths. I know that under present policy some of these people do have commissions issued by the hon. Attorney General's department. I hope they are going to retain them. I would think that they have at least as much right to be recognized specifically in the statute as the officers referred to in the proposed new subsection 1(a) of section 6.

I am at a loss, Mr. Speaker, to understand the reason for this extension, especially in view of the policy of the department in other directions where there seems to be a restriction on the issuance of this authority. I just cannot understand why it should be restricted in fields where the need appears to me to be demonstrated. Yet it is envisaged in the bill that there will be an extension in a field where the need is far from demonstrated. In fact, I would suggest, relying on the arguments already submitted by other hon. members, that in that field there is a serious danger of abuse of the power if it is granted.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to compliment the hon. Minister in submitting this bill. Just as a point of clarification, possibly the hon. Minister would clear a point for me. In section 1, which will be subsection 3 of section 2—

Mr. Speaker: I might remind the member we are speaking only to the principle of the bill. I think perhaps if the member is going to particularize, that is as to sections, he should wait until the bill reaches the committee of the whole House.

While I am on my feet, I would also like to inform the members on both sides of the House that when they are speaking to the principle of the bill it should be done before the motion is carried, and not after it has been carried as has occurred in this case.

Mr. Bryden: We have to be pretty quick sometimes.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, most of what I wanted to say has been said, but there are one or two aspects of the principle involved in this bill that I find so alarming, to put it frankly, that I am going to, at the risk of repeating a bit, just draw attention to them.

As I understand the hon. Minister's explanation, he too is a bit worried about the proliferation of granting of rights to be a commissioner of oaths and taking affidavits. This I can understand because, quite frankly, I have been puzzled about concentrations in one area and apparent lack of them in other areas. So this effort to cut down and put it on a regularized basis strikes me as having some validity.

But then when he moves, as it were, to defeat his original purpose of cutting down, this is where his policy is ambivalent. You are granting them to corporations or to branch offices. Admittedly, it is "may", but the hon. Minister or his department is certainly going to get itself into a very invidious position in choosing between one corporation and its officers and not another, or one branch office and not another. In any case, in this instance it would seem to me that you are granting this power to a group whose exercise of it may well in many instances involve a conflict of interests. It is in relationship to business.

Yet the hon. Minister is hesitant to extend it to both unions and legions that have welfare committees and are working with people in the mass; dealing with their problems, coping with their pension needs and many other needs related to the thousand and one problems that a homeowner and a family man is running into. Yet this very area, where they could use it to benefit in meeting the needs of the people without any danger of a conflict of interests, here the hon. Minister is going to deny it.

There seem to be so many contradictions in the application of the underlying principle of this bill, that I shall certainly look forward with some interest to the explanation of the hon. Minister.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a word or two about this. I think most everything has been said and I hope the hon. Attorney General will not take advantage of the fact that I am not a lawyer, because some of my remarks will certainly not bear legal language.

As I understand this bill, it means that every manager of every bank in the province of Ontario would be a commissioner for taking affidavits. Every manager of every trust company, of every finance company, of the smallest company that we have in Ontario. I give you as an example—

Mr. MacDonald: Warton Dairy?

Mr. Whicher: Warton Dairy is an example.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): The hon. member can afford to go to a lawyer.

Mr. Whicher: No, but as I understand it, the secretary and treasurer of that corporation would be commissioners for taking affidavits. Now then, on the other hand, I had a case pointed out to me only yesterday where in a little village in Bruce county with 300 people this certain gentleman has been a commissioner for taking affidavits for the past 22 years. When he made his application only a few days ago it was turned down. I happen to know this situation most intimately. It is eight miles away from any other place or any other commissioner who takes affidavits. Eight miles away. It is a village of 300 and in the surrounding countryside live several hundred people. There is no bank there. There is no corporation there. There is no clerk of the municipality. This little village is in a township and the clerk lives many miles away.

So, in plain words: by taking away the opportunity for this gentleman to be a commissioner we are certainly causing a hardship, in my opinion, to the several hundred people who live in that immediate area. The nearest commissioner is eight miles away.

Now this may be a case that could be looked into again. I intend to bring it to the attention of the hon. Attorney General by letter, or privately. But it seems to me that where we have some towns—I am thinking of one of 3,500 people—there are four banks there and we have the clerk of the municipality and heaven knows how many corporations. Here we will have too many commissioners, and yet in this little village we have none at all. So I will listen most attentively when the hon. Attorney General makes his explanation.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, I would like to clear up some of these matters, both as to principle and detail, which have been raised in this debate. I am exceedingly pleased,

Mr. Speaker, to have heard the expression of views from the hon. members, because I think we are all agreed, on both sides of the House, that this particular situation had gotten out of hand and that something needed to be done.

I would say that it would appear to me that certain hon. members who have spoken to it, Mr. Speaker, certainly did not put any more time in looking at the bill than I was accused of in drawing it. Because the bill is quite plain with respect to certain matters and the hon. member for York South did point out the matter that I wish again to draw to the attention of the House. I have taken legal advice and Legislative counsel advice on it, and I do wish to say that this advice is that section 2, with the use of the word "may," does give the Attorney General the right and the discretion to deal with these applications.

Mr. Sopha: How are you going to discriminate between finance companies—

Hon. Mr. Cass: Now you just wait a minute. Just wait a minute.

Mr. Sopha: You cannot do it at all.

Hon. Mr. Cass: You just wait a minute now.

Mr. Sopha: Do not talk nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Cass: I am quite capable, Mr. Speaker, of dealing with this.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member for Etobicoke that any note or other negotiable paper which is signed before the finance company officer or elsewhere ceases to be negotiable and of any use to the finance company if it has anything attached to it; such as a declaration, or an oath, and therefore this particular Act, has no application whatsoever to the very real problem which he raised.

I would like to say this generally, also. Over the years the policy of governments requiring returns has been to shift from requiring returns of companies and individuals to be taken upon oath, as in the old days with income tax returns which were so made, and other returns, to the signed statement. It is my personal opinion that this trend, Mr. Speaker, is continuing. A great deal of the matters which have been discussed here to-night in the not-too-distant future will cease to be of interest because of the changing way of administering and dealing with government returns.

I would like to say, for the benefit of the hon. member for Sudbury, who does know so much—and I say this not sarcastically, who does know so much law—and who is a very good exponent of what he does know, that this Act was given a very great deal of thought. It was gone over very carefully, several times, before its introduction.

The particular matter of finance companies is a disturbing problem. In answering that particular criticism, Mr. Speaker, I could also answer the inquiry of the hon. member for Dovercourt. There are, Mr. Speaker, some 70,000 companies operating under the laws of Ontario and if there were to be commissions issued to each one of those companies, even one commission, we would certainly be overrun with commissions.

There are many companies in which a commission is not necessary for the dispatch of business; there are many companies where it is. Each type of company is fairly well known to my officials through past experience with applications for commissions, and I have no hesitation in saying to hon. members, Mr. Speaker, that I have complete confidence, despite the doubting of the hon. member for Sudbury, that it is quite possible to deal with this matter.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, applications for issue of commissions will not be given to mortgage brokers, insurance adjusters, finance companies, funeral directors, real estate brokers and certain others who will automatically fall into the conflict of interest problem area which has been raised by the hon. members. I propose that this particular criterion will continue to be used, unless there is good reason for otherwise determining the criteria.

I would say to the hon. member for Bruce that his problem is the one which I thought I had covered in the last part of my statement—that is that these are matters of public convenience. He has undoubtedly brought to our attention, Mr. Speaker, a matter where public convenience will require the issue of a commission. Those are the special cases which will be dealt with individually. I have in my office, Mr. Speaker, a complete list of all applications which have been received, and either rejected or the applicant advised that when policy is fixed it would be reviewed. It is my intention, and I can assure hon. members that this intention will be carried out, that each of these will be reviewed. I will be glad to receive the representations of the hon. members and interested public affairs who feel that there is a definite need. Provided the qualifications of the applicants are proper, and provided that the need is there, a commission will be issued.

With respect to the Canadian Legion, I would merely say this: The need in the legion, as has been pointed out, Mr. Speaker, is for someone to sign returns with respect to pensions and assets each year. A veteran who is getting a pension must sign a sworn statement, setting out the assets, as you may know, and his income. This is normally done by the service officer in the legion and, over the years, in various places he has had a commission.

It has been found, by the legion officials themselves, that it is not necessary that every Legion service officer should have a commission. After a considerable discussion with the Royal Canadian Legion's Ontario headquarters, it was agreed that the people they nominated for these appointments, who would service the legion members throughout Ontario according to the standards they felt were necessary, would be appointed—and they have been appointed.

Discussions are under way, and have been for some time, through certain channels with other organizations, both in labour and ethnic groups, with a view to determining how best we can meet the need in these areas by the appointment of responsible people where the need arises.

Then, I might say further to the House, Mr. Speaker, following what the hon. member for Dovercourt said, one of the great difficulties about these people who come to us with another language as their mother tongue and with, very often, an entirely different concept of law from what we have, is that they have been accustomed to consider a notary as a lawyer. And in their country the notary has been a lawyer, just as in Quebec he acts in many cases as a lawyer.

One of the great difficulties is that everyone who has been a notary or a lawyer, or done anything like that in his homeland, when he comes to Canada feels he is entitled to do the same thing for his people here.

Then, of course, we are in trouble, because he does not confine himself to the duties of a commissioner or a notary, but immediately gets into the practice of law. As a result, a great many innocent people rely on these people—with training in their own country it is true, but without the knowledge of our laws here—and suffer great loss. For that reason many such applications have been refused, both in my time as Attorney General and previously.

If these folk are properly qualified and understand the responsibilities of their appointment, and are not inclined to practice a wider sphere of law, then there is no problem.

But usually, by the time they have applied to the department, we have evidence, usually complaints, from people who have dealt with them, that these people are in fact going to use, or are using, their commission to practise law—about which I have no complaint, except that they do not know the law they are practising here in Ontario.

Mr. Thompson: Could the hon. Minister tell us the terms of reference of qualification?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, every case stands upon its own feet. The qualifications of any person who applies, as well as his character, have been in the past, and will continue to be, investigated. If the experienced officials—who are public officials in The Department of the Attorney General, and who have been there for a long time and have great knowledge—are of the opinion that the particular applicant does qualify, and there is need, then undoubtedly the commission will issue.

The whole purpose, Mr. Speaker, of this particular Act is to do exactly what some of the hon. members, including the hon. member for York South, have said: That is to try to see how we can, first of all, only have commissioners where they are necessary; second, to endeavour to cut out the undoubted conflict of interest. I agree a great deal has been said on the other side of the House with respect to that, Mr. Speaker. Third, to give the service which the public and members of the public are entitled to, in respect of their legitimate requirements for affidavits.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, and I am fairly confident, with the safeguards in this Act and the discretion which is practised by the competent officials who serve under me, that we will find a great improvement. I am not at all averse, Mr. Speaker, to say to this House tonight that if, in the year to come, as notary renewals come up and this Act goes into force, we find that it does not work out the way we anticipate, and find many dangers which are inherent in it—but which I am quite sure can be controlled—are creating difficulties, then, sir, I will be the first one to be here with the necessary legislation to ensure that the spirit of this Act is carried out.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour) moves second reading of Bill No. 76, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the moving of second reading of this bill, I do have some observations to make about it.

It is the annual amendment to The Workmen's Compensation Act, which is of such interest to many of the people of this province and certainly to the hon. members of this House.

At the outset, may I say quite frankly that I was pleased we could get second reading on it this evening, in the hope this might be accomplished and we would have an early opportunity of sending this bill on to the labour committee.

The bill itself has been printed and in our books for a considerable time. I would hope that no one would have any objection if an effort were made to get the bill to committee possibly towards the end of this week. On that occasion of appearing before the committee, we will have the opportunity of having the senior officials of the Workmen's Compensation Board present. They will be able to give us, from their first-hand experience, the situation with respect to the principles which the amendments to the bill itself raises.

The bill deals with the extension of coverage of the benefits of the Act to certain situations where common law wives are involved. As I have pointed out on several occasions before, with respect to this matter, it is certainly not the suggestion or the intention of the government that the theory of common law relationship should be given any sanctity, or advanced by this legislation. But on the other hand, it is our view that recognition must be made of the position in which certain people find themselves; arising from a common law relationship, and particularly with respect to a situation where children have been born of this relationship.

Because of the recognition of that principle, which really bears on and has to do with what I call a proper and a responsible approach to this subject, whereby innocent people of this type of relationship are not left as sufferers, which I doubt is the intention of any of us in this House.

The provisions of the common law relationships, and the benefits which the Act provides, are based on what we believe to be—and the board recommends—as an acceptable basis for approaching this subject. It was out of the acceptance of the principle which I have just stated, that an arbitrary time factor has been applied to the right to benefits from the section which I am advancing in this legislation. Therefore it follows that benefits would be available where a deceased workman has co-habitated with a woman for two years prior to the workman's death, and she has borne him one or more children. In a relationship where no issue exists, the benefits would be available to the woman involved if she has co-habitated with the deceased workman for six years prior to his death.

I do not think there is anything I could add about the principle of this matter. I think it is good legislation in a social sense, and I hope it will merit the support of the hon. members of the labour committee when it goes there.

Now, certain adjustments to payments are also provided in the amendments. For instance, an adjustment of the payments with respect to temporary compensation by reason of some matter arising out of the original accident. Those payments are to be paid on a current wage basis, if it is higher than the wage basis that was in effect at the time of the original accident.

Then, similarly, an adjustment in the platform of the minimum weekly payments for temporary total disability would now be on the basis of $30 a week minimum weekly payment. Where a permanent total disability exists, it would be a minimum payment of $130 a month.

Some reference should be made to the explanatory note number five, which deals with Section 8 of the bill and provides for an increase of expenditure to the board for rehabilitation work in excess of $200,000 per year. This arises from, and has to do with, the activities at the compensation board's hospital and rehabilitation centre at Downsview. Possibly—it may be by the time the committee sits—there may be some other explanation and information available with respect to the operation of that centre. But in any event, I would hope that authority would be given to permit expenditures beyond the presently stated amount.

Then, of course, we get into the question of accidents. As a matter of fact, with reference to the hospital at Downsview, it might be—and I think it would be worth while and I will propose this to the labour committee when it meets—that possibly at an early date, and before the House finally prorogues, that those hon. members of the House and of the labour committee who are particularly interested in rehabilitation, a visit for them might be arranged to the centre so we could see at first hand the nature of that operation.

Items six and seven in the explanatory notes really deal with safety and the relationship of the board to employers. It involves part of the programme to adopt a much stiffer attitude with respect to the prevention of accidents, not only in the construction industry but in all areas of employment. Particularly the subject is one that has been discussed in probably every magazine, publication and newspaper in this country over a period of years. The fact is that no system of compensation can really provide the kind of compensation that I am sure some hon. members of this House have in mind. I join in that category because money or monetary compensation is not a full compensation for much of the suffering, and those things which go with it that are endured by an injured person.

I would hope that the board would be able to use this demerit system in a way that would parallel and combine with an intensive drive not just to send out printed material or post notices, but to get at the grass roots of the cause of accidents, to get the education into the hands of workers; even to involve such matters as on-the-job training, because that is the kind of instruction that is necessary to prevent accidents.

Mr. Chairman, this is the nature of the bill. On the occasion of its reference to the labour committee, the senior officials of the compensation board will be available, at which time there might be a good discussion as to detail and whatever the committee is interested in.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate the hon. Minister on these steps. I would say that we appreciate his elaboration of the principles involved. I congratulate the hon. Minister on step one. From the point of view of children particularly, I think this is something that is a step forward.

The step about rehabilitation: our party agrees with this principle, that this is an area of real concern, to rehabilitate and retrain a man. I assume we will be going into greater detail on this but I would feel that the objective of The Workmen's Compensation Act really fails if a man is not adapted to obtain another job. When I am speaking of this, sir, I am not sure that the National Employment Service has not seen a role for itself there, with its special service placement. Between the two, federal and provincial, I hope that this load may be taken because I see, particularly in my own riding with individual cases, a gap of real significance.

I would say, sir, that in the other two points, in fact in the whole bill, for our part we feel this is very necessary. There are a number of details which we will certainly be interested in—such as safety education. May I also add that I for one, and probably a number of other hon. members of our party, appreciate the invitations to attend at Downsview. I look forward to it.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, of course we are all pleased to find that we are getting so-called improvements to The Workmen's Compensation Act. But when we deal with the principle, I cannot find anything in the proposed amendments to make us feel we have established an enlightened principle in regard to The Workmen's Compensation Act. I am not going to deal with the specific amendments at this point.

I feel that, somehow, we have lost track of the original intent and purpose and high principle of The Workmen's Compensation Act, as was applied to it when it was established first, some 50 years ago. I believe, if I recollect, in reading something of the history of The Workmen's Compensation Act, that words were used at that time which I have used since—inasmuch as many have said that it was established to provide, for the workman injured at his occupation, (1) the best medical attention possible and an amount of income maintenance with some relation to his total earnings.

I have not checked back to find out what the percentage was on the original conception of the Act; I am told it was 50 per cent. At that time, with the cost of living and the atmosphere of society, that might have seemed to be a fair percentage in relation to the principle of the Act. As time went on, it was raised to 66 and two-thirds; and now, at the present time, it is 75 per cent, up to a maximum of $6,000. The thing we seem to forget is that the only place where this income maintenance principle is maintained is when the injured workman is off on temporary total disability, in which case he gets 75 per cent of his earnings up to $6,000. In almost every other case, if he is on temporary partial disablement, it is reduced on a scheduled basis; for permanent partial it is reduced; for permanent total it is reduced to the scheduled basis.

What we find is that, in almost all cases, the injured workman has to look for funds from other sources, and this is a principle I cannot understand. He either has to apply for municipal welfare or apply to rehabilitation departments, and in fact he is in the same kind of position as one who applies for disabled pension in the province. At the present time it is $75 a month, if you are disabled to the point where you cannot earn a living. I would think that, in some sense, we are really getting away from the highly praised principle of workmen's compensation. And there are several areas to which we should look, to re-establish the principle of providing the best medical care and a proper relationship to income power.

First, I would suggest that we could upgrade the pensions to the present-day standard of living. If it seemed right 20 years ago when we established a rate of pension and said the principle is that one gets this amount to help live in these times, then we should look at it in the same light if the person still has the same disability—what is the cost of living and responsibility today, and apply that to the pension.

I would ask: What is the principle of a ceiling on income, on the amount on which you can receive your 75 per cent? Why set ceilings, in this day and age, of $6,000? At the present time, at $6,000, it means a man at that point would be making $115 a week, or about $2.85 an hour, and he gets maximum compensation of $86 a week. But we have several in industry today who make much more than that per hour.

I had one particular case of a chap at Hamilton who is now on partial permanent disability. He was making $3.50 an hour; 75 per cent would give him $105 a week, and there is about a $19 difference between the maximum and 75 per cent of his original earnings.

But, Mr. Speaker, why the difference in the ceiling? If he is working in an industry, and he is making that much money, then he should get 75 per cent of his wages if he is covered by the Act.

I think that we have to look at the waiting days. There does not seem to be any reason in not paying the workman for the first, if he loses one day off work. If we establish this principle under the Act, this is a cost which would be negligible to the fund but would mean an awful lot to the injured workman—receiving that one day's pay instead of losing it. It could run up to two days.

I would suggest that we have to establish the principle in regard to occupational diseases, particularly in the case of back injuries. In the occupation of operating heavy equipment, truck drivers and this sort of thing, where they are sitting down a lot—

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to be unnecessarily restrictive but is the member speaking to a principle or principles embodied in this particular bill, or is he speaking about principles on workmen's compensation in general? I think the discussion, or the debate, should be based on the principles embodied in this bill only. I do not have the bill before me but it seems to me the member is straying into general principles relating to workmen's compensation which are not embodied in this particular bill.

Mr. Gisborn: I might agree that in one or two cases I did stray from dealing with the principles involved in the specific recommendations, but I think two or three of them did come within the scope of my discussion.

On the last point—and I believe it is covered in the bill—that is in regard to the safety educational section—I think the principle we have to establish there, which has never been established, is that wherever there is a safety programme, and any monies are spent or allocations made, we should have joint representation on those committees.

I mentioned the waiting period. What I want to establish is: Is the real principle established in the changes to give workmen a certain relationship of maintenance of income, or it is just to provide an amount which leaves them in the position of being almost an indigent in society?

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to sound unnecessarily contumacious tonight; I am not really in that frame of mind. But every man should have a fetish of some sort in order to stimulate him on to activity. One of my fetishes is that the statutes of this province are so badly drafted. Heavens, but they are badly drafted. Some day I am going to make a study when I have some time. I am going to make a study to calculate the thousands and thousands of dollars which people have had to pay to have the statutes of this province interpreted in the superior courts of competent jurisdiction.

Have a look and see. How many litigants have had to go to the Supreme Court of Canada, for example, to have a proper interpretation put on statutes. Then we look at this one, sir. Look at this one and it will cause shudders throughout the whole of Canada in jurisprudential circles, for in its very first section it adopts the vernacular into the statutes of the province. Common law wife, it says. I will repeat that. Common law wife.

There never has been any such animal of the homo sapiens variety as a common law wife. In fact, the common law had nothing to do with wives at all. Wives were left to the ecclesiastical courts, which had all the jurisdiction over them; their property, their marriage and everything else.

In order, I suppose, to get across to people the meaning of the statute now they import that term into a statute of the province and dignify it with statutory prestige.

My submission is that the principle dealt with in section 4 could have, if care had been exercised in framing it, been enunciated without making any reference to the term common law wife at all, because it is a matter of policy, of principle. We still, in this province, I hope, recognize the sanctity and the integrity of marriage. It is people in the married state, having been put there by bonds of holy matrimony, with which we are not concerned about at all.

Surely, if we had wanted to, as we should have done years ago, accord to this other group that are dependent upon the injured workmen, the deceased workmen, we could enunciate that in words of a statute without importing that horrible term common law wife into it. I hope that my words will have some effect, and before my words come to the labour bills committee that the hon. Minister will ask his advisers if he could redraft that section in such a way so as to leave out that very distressing term.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am not a lawyer so I cannot speak in legalistic terms. However, I would like to commend the hon. Minister on presenting this legislation because it is a step in the right direction. It still does not go far enough. I would like to refer to the fourth principle in there, which provides a minimum weekly payment of $30 for temporary total disability.

Now, $30 a week today certainly is not sufficient for the individual to maintain any decent standard of living. I just wonder why inclusion was not made for individuals suffering from total disability for the payment of both medical insurance and hospital premiums, because after the individual pays for two items the $30 has dwindled substantially.

Now in the next—and that is the principle of rehabilitation my colleague, the hon. member for Dovercourt had made reference to—it hardly recommended the principle. However, with the rehabilitation the individual receives workmen's compensation up until the time he is rehabilitated. But that still does not provide him with employment.

He may remain unemployed for a long period of time after, and I think consideration should possibly be given to the extension of benefits up until some type of employment is obtained for the individual because he is still not rehabilitated unless he is actually put to work somewhere.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I, in common with all other hon. members of the House, intend to assent to the second reading of this bill because, as I think the hon. Minister has indicated, it is a definite step forward in many respects. But before I do so I cannot refrain from expressing my disappointment that once again The Workmen's Compensation Act is opened, including the sections related to accident prevention, and still we do not have any recognition of the principle that employees and their representatives have at least as much interest in the prevention of accidents as employers.

There is no recognition of the principle that prevention of accidents should be a joint effort of employers and employees. We have a continuation of the principle laid down, I think, in 1915 when the Act first became the law of this province that this was a prerogative of employers, and they were provided with certain funds out of the accident fund to set up industrial accident prevention associations.

I am not criticizing the work of these associations. I am just suggesting that they are like birds trying to fly with one wing. A former Minister of Labour used to take the position, when we raised this matter, that the money that was financing these associations was employers' money which, of course, is a ridiculous proposition.

Once the money goes into the accident fund it is no more the employers' money than the money I pay to The Department of National Revenue continues to be my money. It is money in the accident fund, and in return for that payment, let us bear in mind, the employer receives a significant benefit. That is the freedom from legal action with regard to industrial accidents. He is relieved of that hazard in return for a payment, sir, which is an insurance type of payment. So that type of argument holds no water at all. I think we should look at the broader picture. We often hear assertions—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, I do not remember ever advancing that argument.

Mr. Bryden: I said a former Minister of Labour. I do not suggest that the present hon. Minister did so. I was trying to deal with the argument in advance, just in case you might. I am not suggesting that you have used this argument. But one of your predecessors used to advance it regularly, almost every year when we raised the question.

I hope that the present hon. Minister does not consider that that particular form of argument has any merit at all, because I do not think it has. If he does, then perhaps he would care to look at the broader picture, which is the mutual interest of employers and employees in preventing accidents.

We often hear—and sometimes with justification—that accidents arise because of the ignorance or negligence or foolhardiness of employees. There is truth in that. Sometimes employees contribute through ignorance or foolhardiness to the accidents they suffer. That makes it all the more important that they should be involved, through their representatives, in the whole process of the prevention of accidents and of education to make all people safety conscious, both the employees themselves and the representatives of management.

I cannot understand why the hon. Minister persists in the antiquated and obviously fallacious philosophy that this is a special preserve of the employers, and that they alone should be involved as far as direction is concerned or at any rate in the work of the accident prevention associations. I think representatives of trade unions—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is not giving credit for a major step which was taken in this field: the first major study with respect to a specific subject which might provide a solution for the general matters you are talking about, which is the prevention of accidents. The first major study in recent years that I know of is being undertaken by a committee on which are leading men from labour as well as management. That study is presently under way and—

Mr. Bryden: You are referring to the labour safety council?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The safety council.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I certainly think that is a welcome step forward. Just to conclude my remarks in a sentence or two; I hope that as a result of the efforts of that council we will not only have a full recognition across the board of the principle of labour-management co-operation in this field, but perhaps we will get some co-ordination of industrial safety.

This is another difficulty and it is not easily solved. It exists in every jurisdiction that I can think of. It is the division of authority and responsibility in this field. The Workmen's Compensation Board has an interest in it, the Labour Department has an interest in it; and in some fields other departments such as the Mines Department and The Department of Lands and Forests have an interest in these matters. I think it would be desirable to try to develop some degree of co-ordination at least in the field of safety education and accident prevention.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a few comments concerning this bill. I am not a lawyer but I have looked through the bill and it seems to me that one of the principles inherent in this bill is that we want to provide an adequate income to those who get injured in accidents of one form or another.

It seems to me that people who have been injured, and I think back to cases in the 1930s, and perhaps the 1940s, when the cost of living was not as high as it is now, some of these people received dismemberments at that time and were compensated. I can think of one case where the chap was compensated in the amount of $22 per month for a dismemberment. He lost his arm just below the elbow.

It seems to me that we should—and I would ask the hon. Minister to consider this—we should fill that very obvious gap between what is now being paid and what was paid at that time. I think that these people should be considered. I think there should be a consideration given to these people to raise their amount of compensation more in line with the present-day cost of living. It seems to me that these people, if they had lost their arm or perhaps another limb of their body today—and we know this is a very unfortunate thing—but they would be compensated in a much greater amount than perhaps the fellow who had lost his arm or leg back in the 1920s or 1930s.

I would ask the hon. Minister to consider this problem. I think it is a very real problem. I think there are a great many people across the province who are in this very position and it seems to me we have a vacuum here between these two groups.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before I move the adjournment of the House, tomorrow I would like to go back to the order paper. There are further second readings and there is a lot of work in the committee stage. The next estimates to be taken will be those of The Department of Public Welfare; after that will be The Department of Travel and Publicity.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask my hon. friend when he intends, or if he has a plan in mind, for finishing up the Budget debate?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have, I think, as of now, perhaps three or four names of hon. members who wish to speak. We will have a couple of hours of the Budget debate this week, I would hope, but I do not think I will finish it before Easter. It is just simply that, as three or four speak, then three or four more names come on the list, and we will keep going until everybody who wants to speak in that debate has spoken.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.45 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 18, 1964

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We welcome to the Legislature today, in the west gallery, students from St. Pius X Separate School, Toronto; and in the east and west galleries, students from Oak Ridge Public School and Prince of Wales Public School, St. Catharines; and in the Speaker's gallery, the advisory committee of the conference of women of The Ontario Crusade.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. C. T. Rollins (Hastings East), from the standing committee on natural resources, wildlife and mining, presented the committee's second report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill No. 34, An Act to amend The Game and Fish Act, 1961-62.

Mr. A. W. Downer (Dufferin-Simcoe), from the standing committee on education, health and welfare, presented the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill No. 52, An Act to amend The Schools Administration Act;

Bill No. 53, An Act to amend The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act; Bill No. 54, An Act to amend The Public Schools Act.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. E. G. Freeman (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, may I have your permission to read an article from the Toronto Globe and Mail of today's date? It is entitled:

MATHEMATICS COMPETITION FORT WILLIAM STUDENT BEATS 5,000 RIVALS

A 17-year-old Fort William Collegiate Institute student has topped 5,000 competitors to win an annual high school mathematics competition for schools in Ontario, Quebec and Newfoundland.

Richard Ferch, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ferch, scored 106.75 points out of a possible 150 to win the Mathematical Association of America and the Society of Actuaries annual competition. A Grade 13 student who hopes to become a nuclear physicist, Richard was described yesterday as the outstanding student in the school, which has an enrolment of 900.

Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to bring this to the attention of the House, and the students who are assembled at this afternoon's session but not out of any desire to boast about the prowess of the people of north-western Ontario. They are definitely known to be very shy, self-effacing and modest people, as exemplified in our hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope).

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to refer briefly to a matter which is of growing concern to the farm people of Ontario, particularly in south-western Ontario.

During the present session of the Legislature, hon. members of the House have heard of the great economic loss occasioned by blackbirds, particularly insofar as the corn crop is concerned—a loss estimated in excess of $1 million a year.

Today, I am pleased to announce that the government, following a survey of the situation, is taking immediate steps to make a thorough study of the problem. Under the direction of Dr. De Vos, Ontario Agricultural College, a group of experts, representatives of Ontario and the federal government, in liaison with the United States authorities, will make a complete and comprehensive study of the problem. Dr. De Vos will have the assistance of an advisory committee in the persons of Dr. D. N. Huntley, director of agricultural research, Dr. C. H. D. Clarke, chief of the fish and wildlife branch of The Department of Lands and Forests, and Mr. J. E. Brant, wildlife biologist of the Canadian Wildlife Services, Canada Department of Northern Affairs.

It is estimated that the study and remedial measures will encompass a period of five years and will cost an estimated $260,000 over that period. I need not tell the House that such a sum is a very small price to pay to bring about the control of a scourge which costs the farmers of the province an estimated $1 million each year.

Objectives of the undertaking will be to assess the biological basis of damage by blackbirds and to develop economical and acceptable methods of controlling the depredations of the birds. It is proposed that most of the field work will be conducted in Kent and Essex counties, with the laboratory and research phase being conducted at the agricultural college in Guelph.

Projects envisioned under the programme will include a basic study of the food habits of the birds, a study of the breeding habits and the factors influencing flock movement. Of particular importance will be research into the effects of gametocides, or breeding inhibitors, and their possible application towards meeting the growing population of the birds. Protection of areas through electronics will also have a large share of attention.

It is also proposed to keep a close liaison with the extension branch of our department in order that farmers may be kept aware of known control measures. The study of control measures will get under way April 1 and will continue until March 31, 1969. It will be a flexible study, in that it will tie in various interested groups and people who are fully appreciative of the economic loss being entailed by the ravages of the blackbirds.

Some idea of the magnitude of the task can be gained from the fact that there are approximately 200 million red-winged blackbirds on the North American continent. I point out to the House that there is no sudden easy solution to the problem. There are, however, two major factors with which we must be concerned.

One of these is the fact that the United States is giving a great deal of attention to the reduction of bird numbers. It follows that any developments proceeded with in Ontario should be co-ordinated with those south of the border. It is our intention to co-operate in that regard.

The increase in blackbird population and the economic damage to crops is of increasing concern in southwestern Ontario. Representations urging immediate action were received from the hon. member for Kent West (Mr. McKeough), supported by the wardens and chairmen of the county council agricultural committees of the five southwestern Ontario counties—Essex, Kent, Elgin, Lambton and Middlesex—in December last. Farm organizations have also supported such action as is now being taken.

Of 420,000 acres of commercial corn production in Ontario in 1962, some 335,000 acres were produced in the five counties of southwestern Ontario, with the damage by the birds being estimated at between eight and ten per cent. The birds attack the ears during the milk stage, open the husk and feed on the soft corn. As well as the corn that is eaten, there are secondary effects which are probably more important.

Damaged corn becomes dwarfed and warped, permitting insects and fungi to invade the ear, resulting in a greatly lowered price to the producer.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the setting up of Operation Blackbird is one which will commend itself to all hon. members of this House, and to the farm people of Ontario.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Mr. Speaker, might I be permitted, on behalf of those people from the corn country, to say a very sincere thank-you to the hon. Minister and to the government for taking these steps. We very much appreciate it, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 41st order; House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to say that Ontario has enjoyed a favourable year. Employment has been good throughout the province and farm income has generally kept apace with the economic growth. I would anticipate, from all current signs that in the coming year we shall be able to continue our advance and benefit from the progressive steps being taken to provide opportunities for a better standard of living. Nevertheless, despite the overall improvement in the economic climate, the estimates of expenditures by The Department of Public Welfare, being presented for your consideration, will exceed the previous year by approximately 15 per cent. This seeming anomaly, however, is largely due to increases in the allowances for recipients and because of the expansion in programmes.

Under our legislation, a gross expenditure of almost $118 million is anticipated—an increase of about $15 million over the past fiscal year. Ontario's taxing sources, alone, will be responsible for about $71 million. This is an increase of approximately $9 million over last year and $14 million in excess of the expenditures two years ago.

I should say further, although I do not have the most recent figures, that Ontario provides about 51 per cent of the gross cost of welfare services; the Ottawa government, 32 per cent; the municipalities, 15 per cent; with two per cent coming from other sources. In any given month under the maintenance programmes, we have upwards of some 230,000 persons receiving aid, in one form or another—with 55,000 of this number being eligible for medical and hospital services only. This latter group represents the federal old age security cases.

The growth of welfare services in the last decade has been substantial. Recent additions include the provision for the granting of allowances to widows and single women which, in effect, reduced the age from 65 to 60 years for qualification for a type of aid similar to old age assistance. Another important measure adopted last year was that which extended mothers' allowances to families where children are continuing with their education beyond the age of 18 years.

I have indicated the approximate sharing agreements in meeting the costs of the variety of our welfare programmes—particularly as related to the federal and provincial governments. I have high hopes that discussions with the Ottawa government will lead to the establishment of a comprehensive agreement which will serve all persons in need, and under which we could design our own legislation.

Or, as an alternative, sir, we might look forward to the combining of three categorical programmes—old age assistance, blind, and disabled persons' allowances. This could be developed on the basis of an agreement that would establish acceptable standards for the cost-sharing arrangements, but leave to the province the design of the details in provincial regulations in the light of the needs of the people of this province. In this way, much of the inflexibility which now exists under the present agreements could be removed.

I am hopeful, Mr. Chairman, as a result of the federal-provincial negotiations, that the House of Commons at Ottawa will give approval, this year, to the necessary legislation to bring about the changes in approach which I have cited. At the present time we share welfare expenditures with the federal government under five different agreements, designed primarily at the federal level. These are the agreements respecting old age assistance, disabled persons' allowances, blind persons' allowances, rehabilitation services and unemployment assistance. The first three agreements are most rigid in their approach. We have almost no room to move in introducing even minor changes. On the other hand, the latter two—rehabilitation services and unemployment assistance—give more latitude. In the light of the last federal-provincial conference, there is hope that the federal authorities will accept the proposal of the province that mothers' allowances become a shared programme.

In proposing new and amending welfare legislation from time to time, the government has been aware of the long-term, so-called "irreversible" type of case. For example, some years ago, it was felt that the municipalities could readily be relieved of assisting large numbers of totally and permanently disabled persons. Thus The Disabled Persons' Allowances Act was introduced in Ontario—the first Act of its kind in Canada. This legislation was administered by this province alone for several years, before its development at the federal level. Other refinements through the years have removed other more permanent types of cases from municipalities, such as the extension of the mothers' allowances programme to include unmarried mothers and Indian families. This same approach led to the development of the programme for widows and unmarried women at 60 years of age, since it was felt that this group of cases might best be served directly by the province. It may thus be observed that the provincial welfare programmes are mainly involved with providing public assistance on a long-term basis.

In contrast, the direct relief programme—known as general welfare assistance—which is administered by the municipalities, shows a much different pattern. About 30 per cent of the cases which apply for and receive relief remain on the rolls for three months or less; with 50 per cent of the total receiving aid for six months or less. In other words, half of the cases are of short duration. As a matter of fact, about two-thirds of all relief recipients require public assistance for periods of less than one year. It is perhaps interesting to note that women who apply for general welfare assistance remain on the rolls longer than men, averaging about ten months; while the men average out at less than five months. This pattern should alter, to some extent, when the widows and unmarried women cases are wholly transferred to the province. We are anticipating that when the majority of these cases have applied, we will have a total of about 8,000 women receiving this new type of provincial aid.

The development of certain special services has, of course, created additional responsibilities, both as they affect the province and the municipalities—and, to some extent, community organizations. Take, for example, homemakers' and nurses' services — a most worthwhile programme. We find these services relate not only to the province and the municipalities, but to private organizations as well—particularly children's aid societies. There is no doubt that homemakers' and nurses' services could have more considerable bearing on the care and treatment of certain types of hospital patients who might be discharged more readily to their homes as a result.

Nursing homes, which are proprietary in nature, are primarily the concern of municipalities. But day nurseries and rehabilitation services are related to a variety of organizations, both private and public.

It should be noted that the servicing of these many welfare measures has placed a strain on welfare personnel, not only in the department but in municipalities and private agencies. To meet the added responsibilities, some extraordinary steps have been taken towards acquiring suitable persons for work in the public welfare field. I should add that difficulties in recruiting trained workers are universal. A shortage exists throughout the North American continent.

To encourage recruitment, the department—for some time now—has been making special grants to the two schools of social work in Ontario. In addition, during the past year we entered into an arrangement with the federal department of welfare to provide bursaries to students who will eventually be employed in the welfare field. At the present time, a total of 31 such students are in attendance at the University of Toronto School of Social Work and St. Patrick's School of Social Welfare in Ottawa. The province underwrites two-thirds of the costs of these bursaries.

Beyond this, however, our advisory council on public welfare training—under the chairmanship of Professor Charles E. Hendry, director of the school of social work, University of Toronto—has negotiated an arrangement with the Ryerson Institute of Technology to conduct continuing courses for the training of personnel to carry out the range of welfare services at the intermediate level. We feel that, in this manner, suitable additions to staffs will be acquired.

I am indebted to Professor Hendry and the other members of the council—namely, Father Swithun Bowers, director of the St. Patrick's School of Social Welfare; Miss Robena Morris, welfare commissioner for the city of Toronto; Miss Bessie Touzel, executive director of the Ontario Welfare Council; Mr. Stuart Legge, an executive at Massey-Ferguson Ltd.; and my deputy Minister, Mr. James S. Band—for the determined efforts they are making towards acquiring staff and in the development of training programmes within the department.

The growth of Ontario has been remarkable in the past three decades. We have doubled our population and new Canadians, on the whole, have been integrated into and accepted well in all of our communities. We are sometimes, Mr. Chairman, inclined to forget the great contribution which is being made to the economy of Ontario by these new citizens. There is every reason to be proud of the manner in which this inflow of new blood has served to be of benefit to all peoples of this province. Personally, I would be most favourable to a greater flow of population from other countries after seeing the successes achieved by the many fine people who chose Ontario as their home.

There is one racial group in Ontario, however, which has been the source of much concern. I refer to our native Indian population, and particularly to those Indians living in our northern areas where there has been little opportunity for association with our civilization. The native Indian population has a higher birth rate than the population as a whole. Their normal sources of livelihood have disappeared to a large extent and, as a result, there has been an influx of Indians into and on the fringes of several centres in northern Ontario, notably at Red Lake and Moosonee.

The majority of these Indians speak only in their native tongue and their presence in these centres has created acute problems in housing, health, law enforcement, employment, welfare and education. The circumstances of these people are such that no one of these factors can be treated by itself. Multiple services and a combined approach is required.

Commencing a year ago, the department, at the request of the municipality of Red Lake, placed a development officer and field worker in that area, specifically to give all assistance and direction possible in serving the Indian population. The results within the past year have been, in my opinion, quite remarkable in their accomplishment. I note that, whereas only three of the several hundreds of Indians living in Red Lake were previously employed, 63 permanent jobs have been found for them in the past year. More than that, many casual and temporary jobs have been obtained.

There has been much attention given to law enforcement, with favourable results. As a matter of fact, our development officer was appointed by The Attorney General's Department to serve as a probation officer. He works closely with the court, the Children's Aid Society and the police. I need not add that the drinking habits of many of these people have been the cause of much concern, and a large number have been placed on the interdiction list.

The health of Indians, to say the least, has been one of the most difficult of the areas of service. I am afraid that the attention available to them, at present, is inadequate. Not only are bodily afflictions in evidence, but the lack of sanitation measures is deplorable.

Housing has been a matter of real contention. Many of the Indians were living in hovels of indescribable filth and squalor. An experiment has been carried out in housing in which six prefabricated homes were brought in and placed at the disposal of Indian families, at the request of the municipality. This housing, however, has proved to be costly and of inferior construction. It is imperative that the additional needed housing should be made available, probably with local labour and material being used to provide economically suitable accommodation for these Indian families.

The education of Indian children, in addition to the white population, is placing a very decided strain on local resources. Emphasis must be placed on the teaching of English, in addition to the other regular subjects. The future place of Indian children in the province is dependent on their ability to communicate.

Training and retraining measures, while essential, are most difficult to arrange because the adult Indian is not familiar with the English language. He has had no training or understanding in following normal employment activities. Nevertheless, every effort is being made to re-establish them on a gainful employment basis.

Welfare services, while not costly, extend into counselling and child welfare. These services are time-consuming, but pay worthwhile dividends. For the first time in memory, eight Indian children were placed for adoption at Red Lake.

I have outlined some of the basic requirements in resolving the unsavoury conditions among the Indians at Red Lake. The same problems exist at other centres in the north, particularly Moosonee and Batchawana, and to a lesser extent at Hornepayne. We are determined to give all possible advantages to Indians in these northern areas. I am convinced that we must make a massive attack on the problems presented if we are ever to lift the Indian out of his poverty-stricken way of life. This will mean some agreements with the department concerned at the federal level. I am sure that this can be resolved in the discussions which are scheduled to take place in the month of May.

I should make favourable comment on the manner in which the Indian reserves in the southern part of Ontario are managing their own welfare services. You will recall that some years ago we decided to have the elected councils of Indian bands act in the same manner as the councils of municipalities for purposes of local welfare programmes. This venture has moved forward in a very satisfactory way.

Now, I should like to turn my attention to the universally popular subject of women. We are all aware of the extensive changes which have taken place in family life. It has been said that the law of progress has made the woman of today a different woman from her grandmother.

According to Changing Times, which refers to a study in the United States—the same results would presumably apply in Ontario—a girl born in 1900 could look forward to living 48 years. Today's female baby has a life expectancy of 73 years. In 1900, 145 babies in every 1,000 live births died before they were a year old. The figure today in Ontario is only 24 per 1,000. In 1900, working women were still something of a novelty and made up only 18 per cent of the labour force. Today, one-third of all workers are female, and over one-half of these are married. Women, of course, outlive men by some five to ten years. More than this, women today have the vote; many are active in politics; and they hold all types of professional and executive positions.

There can be no question that the family is the basis of our civilization; and women, as mothers, are primarily responsible for family life. I have questioned the advisability of mothers accepting employment, unless there is every assurance that adequate provisions are made for the care of their children. Substitute services such as day nurseries are available, but there are not enough of them.

I am afraid that there are several thousands of children in Ontario whose mothers are employed full time and their children are being left without adequate care and supervision. I am referring particularly to those families where both the father and mother are employed, in many cases quite unnecessarily from a financial point of view. In the light of this disregard of some women for their offspring, I can appreciate the reasons for a number of the difficulties that teenagers have experienced in their brushes with the law, and in their rebellion against society.

I have said before that, in my opinion, the boy and girl of today are much better, healthier, finer and more intelligent children than those of past generations. We need have no worries as to the future when we look at the quality of the average youngster of today. Nevertheless, I do think that the complex of employment and homemaking has contributed to many of the social problems which have to be faced and treated.

A great deal of our legislation is directed to services required by families, women and children. In fact, throughout the statutes of the province and the federal government very full recognition is given to the place and rights of women.

I am proposing, at this time, to form a representative committee of women to review their many roles in our current society, and to consider any betterment that might be made through welfare legislation. No doubt there will be related matters which concern education, employment, the place and contribution of women in the life of the community, our province and country, and the all-important subject of child care.

But, in the main, I would prefer to have the committee review, broadly, those features which relate to welfare legislation, particularly those that might contribute towards the fulfilling of that most important role of all, the role of wife and mother. Perhaps I should promise that no males will serve on the committee, although I would expect the full facilities of the department, including the males, will be available to give every assistance and advice.

In the child welfare field, adoptions of children in Ontario have reached their highest level. Commencing in 1959, you will know that we took a bold step in using an extensive advertising campaign to draw to the attention of the public the children available for adoption—particularly the so-called "hard-to-place" children. These are the children who are beyond the readily adoptable baby stage, sometimes with physical handicaps, or of mixed racial origin or having a specific religious background.

During the last calendar year 5,493 adoptions were completed, 411 more than last year, which was the highest on record up to that time. Over the last five years—with the advertising campaign in operation—there has been a yearly average increase of 33 per cent in the adoptions of children through children's aid societies when compared with the year 1958, the year before the advertising campaign was put into effect. It seems evident that, during the five-year period, almost 4,300 additional children have been adopted solely as a result of the advertising campaign. In round figures, it is estimated that these additional adoptions have resulted in a saving of some $10 million in public welfare expenditures. But more than this, all of these children are now members of families, assured of a permanent home and parents of their own.

During the past year, the relationship between adoption and religion has been frequently raised. I feel I should point out that part five of The Child Welfare Act, which governs all adoptions in Ontario, makes no reference to the matter of the religion of the child, his natural parents or to that of the adopting parents. It will be understood, however, that the children's aid societies, in placing their wards on adoption, have full authority, as the legal guardians of these children, to select the adopting parents. No doubt they follow the precedence and custom established by the foster-care section of the Act, as well as what would appear to be local public acceptance and attitudes.

I cannot let this occasion pass without making reference to the willing, whole-hearted and progressive steps taken by television station CFTO, channel 9 in Toronto. This station has continued to make free programme time available in order to promote the adoptions of children. I can assure the hon. members of the House that this has been a fine instrument for good and we are most grateful to CFTO. I am sure that the programme must be costly because they designate a very skilled staff to the venture, including Mr. Kevin Holen, promotion manager and Mr. Pat Murray. Refreshments are provided for the children and other participants, and everything is done to make the experience helpful and memorable. This is private enterprise at its best.

At the other end of the life span, the needs of the aged, through the establishment of a select committee of the House, will receive careful and detailed study—that is as to how we might deal with the many-sided aspects of care and services. I would anticipate the varied measures now available, such as homes for the aged — both public and private — special-home care, the geriatric research projects, maintenance allowances, housing, social and recreational services will be reviewed and, possibly, recommendations will be made towards expansion of these and other measures. We in the department will welcome the opportunity to contribute to the knowledge of the select committee as they conduct their comprehensive examination of the economic, social and medical needs of elderly persons.

As I have already indicated, Mr. Chairman. I would anticipate that the government of Canada will be clarifying their role in public welfare in relation to the legislation and programmes of the provinces. It seems likely that the federal government will arrange for some form of consolidation of their legislation and thus permit this province to realign some of our welfare services in a more effective way.

At the present time, there are four major levels of operation in the welfare field—financially and administratively—namely, the federal government, the provincial government, the municipalities and certain private agencies. All have a part to play; but the main factor to be considered is that which will assure assistance being made available to those who qualify, whatever the cause of dependency.

I do not think there is any magic wand which can reduce to a single formula the multiple needs for public assistance. Each of the categorical programmes established by the Ottawa government has a specific factor of need to which it relates—whether that of age, blindness, disablement or some other specific cause of dependency. We also have to recognize that many cases require aid for relatively short and variable periods of time, while others are provided with assistance for specified periods, or over a lengthy span of life.

The question has been raised that, possibly, there is too much welfare legislation on the statutes. But in reviewing the expenditures, programmes and services, I am certain that it would be quite unrealistic to attempt to eliminate or curtail the progress that has been and is still being made. Each advance has, indeed, meant the expenditure of additional funds; but the steps that were taken have proved to be justified and necessary.

In the treatment of the aged, for example, we embarked some years ago on a forward-looking programme of capital expenditures to assure that suitable, adequate and proper accommodation would be available for those elderly persons who are unable to live in the community on their own. These capital commitments on the part of the government have been applied to the establishment of both public and private homes for the aged; and, of course, provincial subsidies are also being paid on the operating and maintenance costs.

Provincial assistance under The Elderly Persons Housing Aid Act has served a worthwhile purpose in the construction of low-rental apartment units for older people who can continue to live in the community. Maintenance allowances in the form of old age assistance and supplementary aid are available to all needy persons 65 years of age and over. Allowances to widows and unmarried women at age 60 years have already proved themselves as being a necessary and proper advance.

Far-reaching studies in the field of geriatrics are proceeding with the benefits accruing not only to persons residing in the homes for the aged, but also in relation to our general knowledge of the aging process. We have also moved forward in promoting the establishment of social and recreational centres for elderly persons and we feel that this programme will prove its worth as time proceeds.

A range of services for neglected children is supported by the province and municipalities through the children's aid societies. I have already referred to the significant achievements in relation to the marked increases in the adoptions of children, especially during the past five years. Much progress is also being made by societies in their protection services which are designed to prevent child neglect.

Our mothers' allowances programme has been consistently broadened and is well integrated in providing maintenance and other supportive services to families where the breadwinner has died or is incapacitated.

Day nurseries have proved themselves particularly beneficial for the adequate care and supervision of young children whose mothers accept continuing employment.

Children's institutions are being supported by the province for those children who require a specialized form of group care in order that they may better adjust to family and community life.

Handicapped persons are assisted in several ways. Disabled persons' allowances are made available to those who are totally and permanently disabled by reason of physical or mental impairments. A special programme has, of course, been designed for blind persons. In addition, rehabilitation services are provided in the form of restoration services, assessment, counselling, maintenance allowances, vocational training and job placement for any handicapped persons who may be enabled, with such help, to accept some form of gainful occupation.

General welfare assistance is granted, in the main, to those who require short-term aid. Special provisions are included in this municipally based programme for those who need care in nursing homes. Post-sanatorium allowances are provided for patients discharged from TB sanatoria; and special incapacitation allowances may be rendered on behalf of those unemployable and disabled persons who do not qualify under a special welfare programme.

Homemakers' and nurses' services may be used to excellent advantage in keeping families together when the mother is ill at home or has to go to hospital; or in other family emergencies. Elderly and handicapped persons may also be cared for in their own homes, and persons may be able to return home from hospital, much sooner than might otherwise be possible, through the use of this programme of services.

Public assistance recipients, regardless of the type of aid that is provided, receive medical services without charge from the doctors of their choice as well as free hospitalization.

Mr. Chairman, in this thumbnail sketch of the multiple forms of aid that are available, I would again repeat that each and every service is essential. I think, too, it is obvious that many of our programmes do not lend themselves to consolidation into one overall public welfare Act. Some of our services are primary in nature, while others are basically supportive.

As Minister of the department, I have covered the province extensively in my travels. I have been impressed with the response of the municipalities and of most private organizations towards the work being done. I also have a great respect for the hon. members of the Legislature for the efforts they devote in serving the individuals who come to their attention.

I must, at this time, pay a tribute to the newspapers of Ontario for the coverage they give to the welfare services. They have never failed to provide the information which is of help, particularly to the persons who require assistance, and have sometimes taken extraordinary steps, especially for the benefit of the children who are available for adoption.

Editorial comment, in dealing with the complex of welfare services and programmes, has been welcomed. I was much impressed with the series of articles which the Toronto Daily Star ran this year as written by Arnold Bruner. The Toronto Daily Star took a most positive approach towards outlining the variety of services on a factual basis. This series has proven to be of such interest that reprints are being made available to the public, as well as to welfare workers in the employ of the province and municipalities.

Within the department we have always had a high regard for the members of the Queen's Park press gallery. Their duties are heavy at times; but they never neglect to outline and explain the meaning and provisions of any new legislation which is being made available to the public.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I would want to take the opportunity of expressing my personal sorrow—along, I am sure, with the hon. members of this House—in the passing of one of our most outstanding civil servants, Mr. Arthur T. Bosanquet. Mr. Bosanquet's funeral was held on the day on which he was to retire officially from his work with the department, just a day or so before his 70th birthday—a very sad turn of events. The municipalities of Ontario, in particular, had great respect and high regard in the day-to-day operations of this valued servant of the people of Ontario.

Mr. Bosanquet was certainly one of the best known of the government officials in this province. He was a capable man with a very large administrative chore in relation to direct relief in earlier days and the general welfare assistance programme as it is known today. There is no question that these duties absorbed his full-time efforts—often both day and night. He was indeed a most helpful and thoughtful person and we regret, so much, that his death has occurred—particularly at a time when he should have been able to enjoy his years of retirement away from the onerous tasks to which he had devoted his life. I am sure the sympathy of this House goes out to his wife, daughter and grandson.

I feel obliged to refer to the heavy tasks which the staff of my department have to carry out. The responsibilities are not lightly held I can assure you; and I am certain that case problems are on the minds of the staff beyond working hours. I feel we have moved along rapidly in expanding our programmes and services and in the development of new opportunities to assist people. Yet, with continuing added responsibilities, the staff carry out their duties willingly, capably and, I am certain, always with the best interests of the persons being served.

I sometimes marvel at the durability of the senior members of our staff in withstanding the intensity of the work and in maintaining the continuity of services. It is no easy task to give attention and find solutions to the never-ending problems which are presented day to day. There is no simple answer which can be applied routinely to our cases. All are individuals and require individual treatment. Nor is there any easy way in the administration of the legislation for which we are responsible. It is for these reasons, Mr. Chairman, that I would take off my hat to my staff for the collective services they provide, for their devotion to their duties, and for the durability they exhibit, and for the out-going manner in which they render their respective services.

In closing, may I express my appreciation for the consideration you will be giving to the estimates now being submitted for your approval.

On vote 1801:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, at the outset may I say I was sorry that the hon. Minister did not get his wish yesterday. He passed me a letter which I am sure I can mention—a note—in which he hoped for once his estimates might come up on March 17. But because of circumstances beyond his control, this did not happen.

I would say at the outset, sir, that I would like to start where the hon. Minister ended: to express my appreciation and that of my party for the very dedicated work of your staff. It is natural that we should single out the deputy Minister, Mr. Band, who, after all, is at the head of the department. I think all of us have known of the very great personal interest and kindness which he shows in connection with any of our inquiries concerning people who come before his department.

My hon. colleague from Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) unfortunately is indisposed. Perhaps he will be well enough to be back in the House before the estimates are through. I know he will then have something to say on a number of points he wished to make.

I wish to point out what, to me, seems to be one of the problems of welfare. This was brought up by the hon. Minister. That is the levels of authority. The hon. Minister has mentioned four areas with respect to administration, suggesting the federal, provincial, municipal and voluntary organizations. If I could come to the particular, about these areas of responsibility; and I am thinking of people who come to my office, and I am sure they are representative of people all across Ontario. When it comes to welfare and trying to see what rights these people should have, I become a Philadelphia lawyer.

I cannot say I become a lawyer, because I am not a lawyer. I start phoning to see if they fall into the category of the federal government. Can we somehow work something there? I come up against the difficulty that it might be an elderly man, but he has a mortgage on his house. He has struggled through many years, with supposed prudence in trying to get some financial resources so he can retire in dignity. Because of ill-fortune all that he has is the mortgage on his house.

Then we come into the bureaucratic red tape which suggests you have got this house, you must not have it or you will not be liable for certain welfare assistance. You come into all these situations. We have fought over this before, where if one had twelve rooms, or so many children then one does not come under a category.

I think of the wife of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis), who seems to be a very able person in her writing and who showed up this mish-mash situation. If you are the deserted child of a deceased veteran that is a better break for you than if you had been in some other category.

Surely what is being pointed out is what we must do: that is to get at the need of people and not the categorization of people. Now, sir, that is perhaps an easy thing for me to emphasize when I am not administering the finances. I can understand that you, sir, have got to watch that money. You cannot hand it out to everyone who asks. But on the other hand I would suggest that there does seem to be such a mixture of categories that perhaps we may have to look more closely to see that we are not categorizing cases to such an extent that we are blocking out needs.

I could go into this at considerable length. I could refer, for example, to unwed mothers. As I understand, there is greater encouragement, and I can see this, the child of an unwed mother would be adopted, or would move into a foster home. I was just looking, taking one example from the Toronto Star of March 5, where Thomas P. Abel, the treasurer of the Metropolitan Children's Aid Society, suggested that:

The need for service work for unmarried parents is expanding at astonishing rates; and that we are going to have to have a look at what they do in European countries and that is to consider that the government may be forced to have some kind of policy for subsidizing unmarried mothers to support their own children.

The point I am making is that if I were to be the child of an unmarried mother, and she wants to look after me herself, from the point of view of the child I would not get as much opportunity for assistance as if I had been adopted.

I know, sir, that you grasp that the main point is to give equality to all children.

I notice you do, you refer each year to the fact that unemployment could be a factor in connection with welfare needs. This brings up the point that welfare, after all, should be a whole part of a full programme.

There are many interrelated factors, if your narrow department is doing something but if there are other departments that are not doing things, really what you do is inadequate.

May I clarify a little more: I am thinking, for example, of many cases that have come to my office. I will take one.

A mother who has, say, a child who is unfortunately retarded. She and her husband have a family of six. He has been working as a truck driver. She needs to get some kind of housing; and in this city, among other things neglected in your human betterment programme is the area of low cost housing.

This woman cannot get adequate housing. This is not your area of responsibility; but because there are not these additional social measures you cannot be too helpful if the person remains in a house made with cardboard and the children have colds, and so on. The welfare paid will be going down the drain. It comes back to this point that we have not got adequate housing for people, and as a result money is being paid out for cough syrup and so on.

Take another situation! I noticed last year that the hon. Minister emphasized that we should have a broad contributory old age pension. The hon. Minister said that this really could be a bolster with respect to the programme for older people. Of course it could be! If we had a pension programme that provided dignity for the people, perhaps so many old age homes might not be needed.

I am suggesting, sir, that this whole picture of welfare, as Professor Morgan has said, should not be a patchwork or a bit as if you have a bucket to take the leakage that comes through holes in the roof. Let us patch up the whole roof and get everything together so that we do not need this welfare bucket below.

In a sense I think that welfare has been relegated to be a department which is looking after the needs of people because there are large gaps in your human betterment coverage.

Therefore, to summarize, what I am suggesting is that you scrutinize your whole social welfare service. When you go to Ottawa I hope you will talk, as you have agreed in principle, in favour of a contributory pension programme. I hope that you will look at the medical insurance programme and I hope that you will look where there have been obvious inadequacies.

It comes down to you, sir, having to fill these gaps with your department. Because of your experience in these areas, I am sure you are in the forefront for progressive legislation across this province. I can see the hon. Minister, like a knight in armour, a crusader, standing up to Ottawa and going after a pension programme, an adequate medical insurance programme, so that the hon. Minister is not having to do this piecemeal job.

With respect to some of the programmes the hon. Minister has talked about, the homemaker programme, for example. I think that last year 112 municipalities were using this legislation. I will be interested to know how many municipalities are using it to date.

This brings up another area which should be looked at and that is, and I said this before, the hon. Minister provides, and I congratulate him on this, some very progressive legislation in the homemaker service. I think it is progressive because it keeps families together, it is preventive. I would like to see much more of the preventive approach, rather than an approach that is taken in order to pick up the pieces. I think this is a good service, but I still raise the question, since only 112 municipalities have this service, is this because some municipalities cannot afford it or is it because they do not want to pay the cost of having a homemaker service? I suggest we may find that the municipalities that cannot afford, or are reluctant, to pay the cost, are possibly the municipalities which most need a homemaker service. I raised this before, sir, and I will appreciate hearing from the hon. Minister about it.

While I am on administration with municipalities, we came from an educational committee meeting today at which the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) was asking us to pass a bill in connection with county units of administration. I think all parties agreed with this principle and I would hope, as the hon. Minister has stated, that he agrees with the principle of having county units of welfare. I hope that he will be able to report that his department has encouraged more such units to develop during the past year.

Moving again to what the hon. Minister discussed with respect to children's institutions: last year I remember asking the hon. Minister a question concerning children's institutions. I understood the research by Miss Bessie Touzel had been finished and that certain qualifications, suggestions and recommendations were made by her committee.

As I understood, there were four categories which justified children's institutions. Very briefly, my understanding was that one category of children's institutions was for emotionally disturbed children. I asked the hon. Minister what kind of staff were in these institutions; were they people skilled to deal with such children? He replied: "Well, we really have nothing to do with these institutions."

Then further on he admitted that he did provide grants to the institutions. I suggested surely he could have some qualifying clause relating the grants to certain standards. I never did get clarification from the hon. Minister whether he is doing this. I asked him what number of institutions were below and what number were above standards. He at first answered that he did not know.

I pointed out then, and I point out now, that I hope the hon. Minister will know completely—

Hon. Mr. Cecil: I do not think I ever stated that.

Mr. Thompson: All right, perhaps I am interpreting that in my own way. If I am, I take it back, but I ask the hon. Minister: After this, when we come to the children's institutions, will he tell us the number which have fallen below standards, and tell us how he is encouraging these institutions to come up to standard? And if they do not, will the hon. Minister close them down?

I say this with some considerable feeling, because if we all go back not too many years ago, and think of some children who were out at Mom White's—I think that was the name—really it was a very unfortunate situation for those children. Again I say that the real test of humanitarian approach by any government should be its responsibility to the helpless children who are wards of that government.

I move now to day nurseries. The hon. Minister had mentioned his dilemma—whether or not to promote day nurseries. Do they encourage women to go out to work, leave children and their home responsibilities? I realize that quandary. But, with respect to day nurseries, again on standards, I would like to know which kind of standards the hon. Minister demands. I am thinking particularly with respect to staff.

Coming to the next remarks of the hon. Minister, I notice they were about Indians. He mentioned having sent a worker up to Red Lake. I would say, having read accounts of conditions in Red Lake, that he should be congratulated in that he moved in when there was this emergency. Perhaps the department should be criticized that the crisis had to be exposed up there before it moved in. However, that is past, and it did move in.

I often think, when I think of Indians who have left the reserves, of the role of the government of Manitoba—and this is going back four or five years ago, at least. They set up a commission. It was not just one person; it was a commission to work with both Indians and Métis in order to rehabilitate and help those Indians off the reserve to integrate into the community. I am not sure, since the hon. Minister has assumed the responsibility for this, whether he should not be having a look not only at Red Lake, which was given publicity, but also at other areas where Indians have left the reserve.

I am thinking, particularly at this point, of my own location in Toronto. Several years ago, I think the hon. Minister told us something about giving a subsidy to an "Indian House". I think he himself had certain questions about an "Indian House" and the role it would perform, whether it might segregate by being distinctive or whether it would really act as a bridge to the Indians moving into the community. I would be interested to know what the feeling of the hon. Minister is now, and what else he is doing, with respect to the Indians.

The hon. Minister mentioned with considerable pride, and if I could say so, with some Gallic emotion, that he was going to have a representative committee of women.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Emotion is where the blood is.

Mr. Thompson: I acknowledge that. The only other group I can recall like this was a group which I think the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Macaulay) had formed. He has been out of the House so much. I really have forgotten which seat he represents—I think it is Riverdale. With respect to this committee, it seems to me that it was called prior to the election. I do not see that it has the sort of vibrant life one would have expected when you had a Minister, so active as the hon. member was, behind it. Some people suggested that it might have been formed just for political purposes. I would sincerely hope that would not be the hon. Minister's intent, although I noticed he mentioned something about women having a vote when he said it.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That would be the last thing in my mind.

Mr. Thompson: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That would be the last thought I would have.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I appreciate that.

I was interested in that you can ascribe many characteristics to the female sex—but it seems to me the hon. Minister picked out one which must have some significance, and that was that they had a vote.

However, I am saying that certainly it is an important area to look at—the changing role of women in our society. We will be interested in knowing which organizations they represented and, really, just what the hon. Minister's purpose is in getting these women together; also the terms of reference of the discussions.

I think the hon. Minister is going up to Ottawa. Is he going to Quebec in connection with the federal-provincial conference?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I do not know. Are we going to Quebec?

Mr. Thompson: Since the hon. Minister asks me, I apologize. I wish I had the authority to say he is going. I would assume that, having seen the letter from the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada to our hon. Prime Minister—a public letter, I hasten to add. I had no privilege or anything—I notice in that letter—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Which letter is the hon. member talking about?

Mr. Thompson: I am talking about both the opening remarks by the Rt. hon. Mr. Pearson to the federal-provincial conference, sir, in which it mentioned that one of the discussions would be on amalgamating welfare services; and I am sure, if the hon. Minister is not going, that the hon. Prime Minister will have something to say at this conference.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I can assure the hon. member that the hon. Minister will be there.

Mr. Thompson: He will be?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we had better clarify this. The agenda for the conference is not finally settled, therefore the list of those who will attend is not formally settled; but I cannot imagine the federal-provincial conference taking place without the hon. Minister of Public Welfare being present.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Especially when he is going to be interpreting.

Mr. Thompson: I am sure he will add a real contribution.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I say, as a potential interpreter, that the hon. Prime Minister speaks very good French and understands it well.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: All I can say is you are very kind.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, the question I ask—because this, after all, is fundamental to the whole of your estimates—is: Just what are you going to stand for when you go up to the conference? You are asking us to vote on your estimates; you are going to Quebec with the idea of making some kind of arrangements in connection with federal-provincial responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: May I answer my hon. friend immediately? The only thing I will stand for, when I am in Quebec in the presence of the other provinces and the federal government, will be for the people of Ontario. I can assure you.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate that you could also say you will stand for motherhood and you will be against sin—that is about as useful to us.

I would say, sir, when you go there, that if that is going to be your contribution then I take back my kind remarks to you. I think you will have to be a little more detailed than that. The concern we have is this: You are going to Quebec; you prefaced your opening remarks on the importance of an arrangement between federal and provincial authorities; and I wondered—I know that you mentioned one particular need. Last year you mentioned the need for a pension plan. All these things fit in. With these estimates, could you give more detail of the points you will be making? I say that because, previously, the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Grossman) stood up before us and I do not think I am unfair to him in any way, about the impression I had. He was for the Fauteux report which suggested that the province should take the responsibility for those offenders of six months or less, and that the federal government should have the remainder of offenders. We learned roughly what his thinking is.

When your estimates are coming up, sir, particularly with your preoccupation about the federal-provincial responsibility, I would hope that you will clarify for us just what you mean by that.

I would just like to end with this point, that I do feel The Department of Public Welfare has to be backed up by social legislation from the federal level, and at all levels. When I say social legislation, I am thinking of such things as hospitals. I could dwell at considerable length that it is most important that we have hospital beds, and hospital staff. Otherwise people who are sick are not able to get treatment. Eventually they are going to be thrown on you.

I suggest workmen's compensation. If we do not have adequate programmes in connection with workmen's compensation, the recipients are going to be thrown on you. If we do not have adequate opportunities for retraining, people are going to be thrown on you. My own feeling about the people of this province is that the last thing the majority of them want to do is to be thrown on welfare. I remember one voice that would give the impression to us that people on welfare were no good and just naturally lazy and shiftless.

From my own experience, I can recall two years ago, testing that premise. I had a group of people who were on welfare. I heard of a job that was open for about three people. The wage was $1 at the time. You did not have a minimum wage then. These people had families. I got my secretary to phone a number of them. They had to get on a street car and get away out to Mimico, I think it was. Every single one of them went out to try for those jobs. There were two of them who walked there in the hope of getting it. My impression from the people of my riding is they want the dignity of work and self-sufficiency. I feel that in the welfare area, so that you do not get encumbered with a great load, you must have other adequate services backing this up.

I would say, sir, that you should take a hard look—and I am not sure whether we should not have a commission on this—at the division of responsibility. We have talked about the federal. We will hear from you, I hope, sir, what you are going to ask from the federal government. We have talked about the municipal problems. I question whether in some cases the municipalities are not getting such progressive legislation as homemakers, because they are crippled financially to provide these services. I suggest those so crippled, or who think they are, may be the ones that should provide the service.

And then I come to the voluntary agencies. I am not sure, sir, as I look at the role of this provincial government with voluntary welfare agencies that if in a sense this is not getting so confused. With the grants that you give some of these voluntary agencies, they are almost quasi government agencies. I say this because of the past situation.

Though I respect very much the numbers of people who work in the voluntary agencies, it seems to me still that the role of a voluntary agency is not to quietly take up the gap which your legislation permits, as to have to supplement the unemployment insurance and so on; but it is to experiment. This is a main role of a voluntary agency. To experiment, also to have a strident voice, to push the government, in order to expand to take more responsibility.

I think that the voluntary agencies have a very important role. I think we can be proud of their dedication. All I say, sir, is there seems to be a great deal of confusion with areas of responsibility of welfare. If I could come back to the particular, this debate is so important because you are dealing with human beings.

One aspect that came home to me more than anything, one major responsibility of being in this House, is that in the debates we have had over welfare, in the legislation that has been passed, you go back to your riding and you meet a mother or a child and you realize that through our discussions here we have translated legislation to the benefit of these people. That is why, sir, I hope that during the estimates, and I feel sure it will be, that we will get very clear answers from you. And, sir, that you will be patient as we ask our questions.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, apparently the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare have a certain psychosomatic effect on the minds and bodies of those who speak to them. The hon. member for Parkdale is indisposed today. I was indisposed last night. I may say to the hon. Minister that he and I may come soliciting at your door for some of the services that your department provides. You amply open your arms. I have no doubt that we will be received with some favour.

I might say that as a new member in this House, I think it only fitting at the outset of such estimate remarks to say in personal terms—and I expect that I echo the words of the hon. member for Dovercourt and everyone in this House—that the services rendered by your department, particularly the graciousness and facility of the deputy Minister, is something almost unparalleled in other areas of government. We congratulate you for it.

The only reservation I have is not a personal one. It is, in a sense, a public reservation, because one of the sad and true facts of political life is that the vast majority of human beings who approach their individual members for assistance in one area or another have justifiable complaints and justifiable causes. One wonders how many people are alienated from the process of knowing what is due them by never having access to the channels. The department of the hon. Minister offers a very wide degree of public service. I would think that it could be better advertised than merely sending around small brochures in multiple quantities, such as many members of this House recently received, describing welfare services in Ontario.

I recall that just prior to the provincial election last September, the government—The Department of Labour to be specific—launched on a very widespread campaign to advertise minimum wage legislation in the province and what it was offering. I would think that certainly The Department of Public Welfare might institute a similar campaign so that the citizens of this province would know to what they are entitled.

Mr. Chairman, while as an individual member it is virtually impossible to take exception to the administrative handling of individual problems, the burden of the remains I would like to make this afternoon—and I hope it will be a theme which the hon. members can follow from beginning to end—is to say that we in the New Democratic Party take profound exception to the social philosophy which appears to animate The Department of Public Welfare.

Throughout society at every level—I think this is true municipally and federally as well as provincially—we continue to suffer from an antiquated, forlorn, condescending—I am reminded of the British and French imperialists—welfare psychology which is essentially handout in nature. Alas, into the middle of the 20th century, the mentality of the dole still perpetuates.

The ironic fact, Mr. Chairman—and I trust I will be able to document it in the body of my remarks—the ironic fact is that the mentality of the dole is becoming more, rather than less, entrenched in this society. I think it has certain social and economic reasons. We have fallen en masse for the myth of the affluent society which most certainly is not pervasive. There are still some who subscribe to the Horatio Alger dictum and there are many who have no reality whatsoever about the social and economic groupings in North America.

It is all very well for the hon. Minister to say blithely that economic circumstances have recently been fairly good; but it is worth pointing out that others are gradually having a change of attitude about this society. With the emphasis on higher education and higher educational needs, certain facts become apparent which were hitherto not apparent. With the spread of the technological revolution—an area in which the deputy Minister of the department is exceedingly well versed—again facts not hitherto apparent become so. With the widespread publicity of poverty and the embarkation on the part of the President of the United States on a crusade against poverty, certain political and economic facts of life in this society become apparent.

But the reality which those facts demonstrate has not yet caught up with the welfare mentality. I wish to take some time now to demonstrate that, with implicit and explicit criticism, and then finish with a specific ten-point alternative programme to be outlined for the next three years. So this becomes in a sense a study of misdirected social attitudes which have a profoundly asocial effect on society.

First, Mr. Chairman, that misdirected attitude complex was demonstrated at the municipal level most graphically towards the latter half of this last year, 1963, when certain of our municipalities grasped the idea of working for relief. An unemployed person who lacked sufficient financial resources to provide for his basic needs and those of his family, was requested by certain municipalities to work for relief.

Now I say, to the credit of The Department of Public Welfare in the province of Ontario, that they have not endorsed this principle. But it is interesting to note that for the sake of five per cent more money, municipalities in Ontario were prepared to demand that men work for relief so that they would be paid 80 per cent of the labour cost under public welfare instead of 75 per cent of the labour cost under other works assistance programmes. It betrayed an attitude of mind on the part of large numbers of municipalities which viewed welfare recipients as essentially unworthy.

Of course, this particular allegation has been frequently vitiated by the evidence.

The social planning council for Toronto put out its work for relief brief and I want to point one paragraph from it.

It is unthinkable that because of a small number of malingerers or lazy persons, that the majority of employable unemployed relief recipients should be dealt with in a punitive fashion.

—a fashion of “enforced” labour, Mr. Minister, and yet that was the attitude of a vast number of municipalities in the province of Ontario.

Now the sham attitude towards welfare, the dole mentality, the basic perversion, is demonstrated in the provincial level most unhappily, I think, by the very statutes which this Legislature has endorsed. I want to be exceedingly specific, I do not want to range over them all, so I chose only two from the welfare statutes available.

The fact of the matter is that the greatest pieces of window-dressing legislation which the government provides, the so-called far-seeing examples of building and bulwarking the welfare apparatus, are defeated by their own regulation. We have a peculiar sort of refrain where we pass a reasonable Act and then simply hand down regulations which undermine its total purpose.

Now the hon. member for Dovercourt and the hon. Minister himself mentioned the homemakers' service. I think the hon. Minister called it, and I am quoting, a “most worthwhile service”. And so in essence it is. But the homemakers legislation is somewhat fraudulent, Mr. Minister. There is something profoundly wrong with it, because although a homemakers' and nurses' service Act is passed in the province of Ontario, when the money spent is analyzed on the basis of the hon. Minister's own report in 1961-62, it is found that only $70,000 to $75,000 was spent providing homemakers' service throughout the entire province.

When the regulations are analyzed, Mr. Chairman, it is found that again and again the objectives of the Act are frustrated. It is said in rather highfalutin language in this new little pamphlet “The government of Ontario contributes 50 per cent of expenditures incurred for services rendered to those unable to meet the total cost themselves.” Well, Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, that is simply not true. The province provides a maximum of $4 to homemakers for an eight-hour day and agencies do not survive on that kind of money. In fact the voluntary Toronto homemakers association gets 80 per cent of its financial resources from the United Appeal, only 15 per cent from monies which come from municipalities.

Moreover, it has been demonstrated by the report on the homemakers' services done by the Ontario Welfare Council in February of this year, that the average daily use of homemakers is nine hours or nine and a half hours or ten hours. The government does not begin to pay 50 per cent of the cost, and a large number of people require around-the-clock service as well. Indeed, let me say to the hon. Minister that when only a maximum of $4 for an eight-hour period is contributed, it is perilously close to defying the government's own minimum wage legislation.

But it goes further. In most municipal eyes, homemakers' services allowances will not be granted unless the individual requesting it is totally indigent. So to suggest that it goes to those unable to meet the total cost themselves is fallacious. Most municipalities require proof of indigence before being willing to supplement it. The city of Toronto is an excellent example of that, and yet the need lies precisely in the area of $3,000 to $5,000 income a year.

Let it be said, when you talk about homemakers' services for the aged, Mr. Minister, that vast numbers of elderly people within municipalities have been found to be cheaper burdens on the municipality to place them in nursing homes, because the provincial grant is more. So we have big agencies like the Toronto Homemakers Association which have been forced to remove from their waiting list all service to elderly people.

Similarly one gets no sense of urgent provincial promotion. Let it be pointed out that for a service to cover the entire province, there was at its inception one woman at the centre for informing 900 municipalities of what was required.

So no matter how one analyzes this so-called showpiece legislation, one finds on the basis of the regulations that the intent and objective of the Act is defeated.

But it is not only the homemakers Act, Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister. The Children's Institutions Act of 1962-63 is another piece of legislation of which this government is profoundly proud. This Act, I think, characterizes the provincial attitude towards emotionally disturbed children, and its regulations suffer from that "whichever-is-the-lesser" refrain that resounds again and again.

The hon. members of the House might be interested to know that in this Act individual beds are subsidized $2,500 or 50 per cent of the cost—whichever is the lesser; that a child who is accepted is subsidized to 50 per cent of its maintenance or 50 per cent of the maximum established by regulation, whichever is the lesser; that the regulations are even more specific, they pay 50 per cent of the average daily cost of $4, $6 or $8, depending on the kind of institution, or whichever is the lesser.

Now I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that that kind of phraseology is precisely what perverts basic social welfare attitudes, and that is not 19th century, but worse. I did not study much history, Mr. Chairman, but what little I did reminds me that that kind of phraseology was first embodied in the Elizabethan Poor Law legislation in the 16th century, and it is not acceptable to this provincial Legislature.

The travesty of the showpiece legislation defeated by its own regulations goes further, Mr. Chairman. In The Children's Institutions Act, the institution involved, must reapply for the grant every month and fill out the most indescribably complex form in triplicate, so that the secretarial service involved virtually utilizes the total grant.

The regulations state a need for trained staff and psychiatric experience, but that cannot possibly be achieved on the present basis of part grants. And as always, Mr. Chairman, and this is the profoundly sad fact, it is the child who is penalized. Under this children's institutions legislation, in the case of any child whose parent is judged able to pay a part of the cost but does not pay that part the child is denied. He is not acceptable. And so you have a parent guilty of neglect—to the devil with the child. Then one reads cases, as one does today, in the Toronto Daily Star and the Toronto Telegram and the Toronto Globe and Mail of a nine-month old baby who died because of inadequate care.

The means test in regard to this legislation is left entirely to the discretion of the provincial supervisor, who tends to interpret it on the basis again of total indigence. Now the point is, Mr. Chairman, that the basic attitudes of the government cannot possibly be positive when regulations in one piece of legislation after another defeat the intent and the purpose of the Act. The best intentions of provincial statutes are strangled by their regulations. Mr. Chairman, it betrays an attitude of mind which should not be.

But we go further in the provincial field. Another frame of mind, which is basically perverse, is the dependence on the present administrative units. Now I am here simply repeating the point that the hon. member for Dovercourt was making, but I want to make it in a slightly different fashion. The hon. Minister of Education has presented in this House a consolidation of units that everyone thought eminently desirable. At every level the Opposition in the provincial Legislature has been requesting consolidation of administrative units.

If you maintain your present basis, you perpetuate the jaundiced welfare view in the following way: To begin with, individual municipalities with Neanderthal social views continue to see welfare recipients as unregenerate and undeserving. Secondly, the rural and, many times the local urban welfare officer, is handling a plethora of duties ranging from sewers to roads. He has to handle the welfare payments as well—and that too is manifestly unjust. Thirdly, obviously trained psychiatric and social work care cannot be provided on a minuscule administrative basis. Fourthly, inefficiency runs rampant. Indeed, the whole principle runs against the trend of this society, Mr. Chairman.

It is not enough that you have accepted the integration of Peel, and it is not enough that you have accepted the integration of Wentworth county. In the report of the deputy Minister to the hon. Minister, he said this at page 14, and I would like to read it into the record:

It is our view that this administrative unit, namely, Wentworth county, is proving to be most successful in every detail. All favourable features have been adopted on behalf of the individuals and families who require public assistance. It is felt that in taking this step, the collective local municipalities within the county of Wentworth are adopting a modern approach which will ease the administrative pressures on them individually.

At the same time, the cases qualifying for the variety of municipal welfare services are reaping the advantages of this consolidation.

Why, when the hon. Minister hands down the estimates of his department before this House, does he not speak of the extension of larger administrative units? If welfare services in Ontario are to cover this whole range of services, if they are to be integrated with the entire range of shared federal services, if they are to be integrated with plans like general assistance administered exclusively by the municipality, and if they are to be integrated with voluntary agencies ranging from the Red Cross to anyone the hon. members may wish to name, then we must have large administrative units or we mock public welfare in the province.

There is very little co-ordination presently, very little co-ordinated planning. This vast document of study of needs and resources for community-supported welfare in Metropolitan Toronto makes 150 recommendations, all of them depending in essence on the request for larger administrative units.

Now let me take the next step in this demonstration of perverse basic attitudes in the government welfare policy. I want to deal with the sometimes difficult and perilous field of child welfare services. And I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that nowhere do the conflicting mentalities and approaches demonstrate themselves more strongly. Even given that the Children's Aid Society and the department itself do nobly, and even given that they do all in their power; somewhere something is profoundly wrong. And I want to take the department's own report to recognize this, and to document it. I think it is interesting that we have a report from a department, which report is not mirrored in the remarks of the hon. Minister of Public Welfare and which recommendations, sir, do not come forward in the remarks of the hon. Minister.

Apparently there was a survey made, research done, under the sponsorship of the hon. Minister's advisory committee on child welfare. It was taking a random sample of 186 children under care and it found the following: That only one in six cases in this review had remained in a single foster home.

And what does the deputy Minister of the department say, Mr. Chairman? He said this:

It is frightful to consider that when a child is taken into permanent care by society he may face, if he is not placed on adoption, the deteriorating experience of being moved time and again from one set of foster parents to another.

And he goes on:

It is questionable, however, as to whether this incessant shuffling of children in care from one foster home to another, is not inflicting greater damage on some children. Perhaps we should be giving greater recognition to the development of group care facilities on a smaller scale than in the past for certain children who find it difficult to adjust to normal family life.

And yet, one asks, where is this mirrored in the estimates of the hon. Minister?

Well, let us assume for a moment that the answer will be that the hon. Minister will say, "I am going to give you the answer when the advisory committee reports on child welfare." And I take the hon. Minister back to April of 1962 when the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), the leader of my party, said as follows:

How many years does the hon. Minister expect will go by before he finds out whether or not this committee can do the job and whether they will get on with it?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I might be in a better position, Mr. Chairman, to answer the hon. member next year.

That is 1962. In 1963, Hansard again, in the body of the hon. Minister's estimates:

May I also say that the advisory committee appointed to review activities within the child welfare field will soon complete its studies and I expect to report within the next few months.

March of 1963. It is now March of 1964, close to three years having elapsed since the committee was set up and not a single word mooted in the estimates of the hon. Minister.

Now, I say to the hon. Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, that again something is profoundly wrong. If the hon. Minister accepts—as he must—by having established the committee, that child welfare in the province of Ontario is inadequately handled, then the hon. Minister has a responsibility to table the report of that committee before the House. We implore the hon. Minister to let us know. There must be guide lines.

Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that there are unhappy and critical whispers abroad in the land. There is a growing body of opinion saying a multiplicity of things. There are those who say that ultimate control should not rest with semi-private religious agencies. There are those who say, like the eloquent plea of the hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Eagleson), a member of this government, that the entire adoption system is archaic and estranged from reality. There are those who say that the disposition of children should not be determined behind the scenes, but that children lacking adequate homes and parents should be wards of the state and wards of the state only. And there are those who say—experts in the field—that sufficient monies are not forthcoming, particularly for emotionally disturbed children, to do the job; and thereby children, their parents, and the society suffer.

Mr. Chairman, a very excellent speech was recently made by Mr. John Brown, the executive director of Warrendale, to the Windsor Children's Aid Society on February 20 of this year. In the body of the speech he said as follows, and I want to read it into the record because I think child welfare must surely be important to the hon. members of this House. I am quoting:

We have heard about the high cost of welfare and we will go on hearing it as though we can measure human need or misery in dollars and cents. We demean ourselves to the same degree, that we withhold the necessary resources to properly meet the needs of the children who become wards of society because of parents or family failure to meet their needs.

Those who read the recent budget for Ontario may recall that the interest on the provincial debt was $20 million more than our total welfare budget. I can certainly work up more enthusiasm for paying increased sums to better our standard of service to children and families in need than I can about paying off interest charges.

Mr. Brown goes on, and perhaps this is the psychologist's analysis:

I think we can afford it, and when we don't afford it it isn't because of lack of cash—it is because of lack of motivation. We somehow want the inadequate and maladjusted person around to reassure ourselves of how very adequate and really well adjusted we all are.

Now, there are those who might dispute it, but it is interesting that a trained man in the field is willing to put it that way, that the basic perversion of government attitudes is such that, in the area of child welfare, we are failing. He ends up by pointing this out:

It has been estimated that upwards of 25 per cent of children in the Children's Aid Society need special treatment if they are to adjust. They are not getting it, of course, and they are not adjusting. We must begin to request the resources that will make the full parenthood of our children possible.

End of quote.

So there you have it, Mr. Chairman—a state of intolerable indecision in the area of child welfare; inevitably the children's lives are sacrificed and, one asks, "At what human and social costs?"

The further, and perhaps most fundamental, evidence of basic attitude distortion lies in the means test rationale being the sole criterion on which welfare is allotted. We say strongly that categorical aid should be eliminated. It should have substituted for it, public welfare programmes on the basis of need; that way you eliminate the sting of rebuke and social scorn.

I think that the hon. member for Dovercourt, Mr. Chairman, made the same point; and I say to the hon. members of the House that admittedly this would mean a dramatic overhaul, but I ask them, "How else do you reform the government welfare policies?" And I add that the prevailing mentality is sadly exposed by the following set of conditions—and every member of this House has dealt with individual public welfare cases and knows the set of conditions for himself.

We have arbitrary income ceilings and maximum allowances, into which recipients must arbitrarily fit, no matter what their circumstances. We never hear talk of minimums, only maximums, and we always demand a continuing demonstration of need.

Further, Mr. Chairman, allowances are based on totally inadequate definitions of financial needs for food, clothing, shelter, fuel; and again they must always fit within the maximum. Pre-added budgets, let it be pointed out, are based on what every human being in this society deems purely marginal. All experts deem them purely marginal; so the poor become less poor, but their dignity remains denied them.

The federal Liberals are apparently overcommitting this kind of principle by the present contributory pension plan idea; where is evidence of that reality in the provincial Department of Public Welfare?

And then we have antiquated and irrelevant residence requirements—even more irrelevant in a highly mobile society.

The most interesting thing, Mr. Chairman, is that all these specific categories delineate—let me say in an aside that they sometimes disqualify—certain deserving groups. That deserving group idea is an insidious term, for precisely the same principles, applied by The Department of Public Welfare, harshly discriminate against the so-called “undeserving”—the general welfare recipient.

I say to the hon. Minister through you, Mr. Chairman, that pre-added budgets are different for general welfare recipients. The grants are lower for general welfare recipients.

Mothers on mothers’ allowance can obtain a higher maxima than mothers on general welfare—and I would appreciate it if the hon. Minister answered the following questions for me later on. Are they different human beings, Mr. Minister? Have they different needs, Mr. Minister? Are certain children born with an aristocratic privilege, Mr. Minister? Is it that the Conservative Party subscribes to a Marxian class structure, Mr. Minister?

Mr. G. H. Peck (Scarborough Centre): Oh, come now!

Mr. S. Lewis: What I want to know is: How does the hon. Minister—with the greatest respect to the people on the left of me, and I am glad they are on the left of me in this context—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Most class-conscious people in the world, the—

Mr. S. Lewis: I think the hon. Minister owes it to this House to explain where the needs and responsibilities, and dignity and rights, of a mother and her children are less in one case than in the other. I say to the hon. Minister: There is no explanation. The explanation lies in the fallacious principle of categorical aid which should be dismissed by this government.

It should be dismissed, Mr. Chairman—I want to go one step further—because it discriminates against and discourages those who wish to become self-supporting and self-sufficient. If I may say to the hon. members of this House, that is the greatest anomaly of all. Surely, and I think one can speak frankly and openly here, surely it is the aim of a public welfare programme to make the recipients of that welfare wholly self-sufficient, and integrate them into society. And it is the greatest paradox that this government persists in preventing that.

You see, Mr. Chairman, there is no provision for the transition period between welfare and self-sufficiency. Many who would wish to achieve self-support are positively terrorized out of it. Let me state some examples with which I know the hon. Minister cannot but agree.

Suppose you have a family, on public welfare, who take in a boarder to supplement their income so they can reach a viable economic state and self-sufficiency. They find their allowances drastically cut.

Suppose you have a woman on mothers’ allowance desperately seeking renewed self-respect through employment. According to the regulations she cannot work more than 24 hours a week, and even a percentage of that pittance earning is subtracted from the total allowance, or vice versa depending on how you view the regulations.

Suppose a man finds work, he is immediately cut off welfare. If he has accumulated debts the unhappy syndrome begins again.

Or let us take the adults’ retraining centre. Perhaps the hon. members will not think it invidious if I refer to this article in the Toronto Globe and Mail by Michele Lansberg outlining the adult retraining centre difficulty, where people who are paid $6 a day to retrain themselves so that they can become dignified and self-sufficient members of society. On the basis of being paid $6 a day they are disqualified from all, or a major part, of their welfare receipts.

How does a government sit in a state of resignation when the end objective of its welfare programme is defeated by its own regulations and by its own set of attitudes? I know not the answer, Mr. Chairman, but I hope it will be forthcoming from the hon. Minister.

The hon. Minister indicated in his remarks, and the hon. member for Dovercourt made reference to it, that he was going to form a representative committee of women. I was interested in hearing him say that he wanted that committee to study women, particularly in the role of wives or mothers. That may be very well, Mr. Chairman, but that is not sufficient. We are not simply dealing with the area of wives or mothers. We are also dealing with women as independent human beings who, at certain points in their life, and those are the points the committee will be dealing with, want to gain self-respect and an adequate income.

When you emphasize the other aspect, I think you detract from it. I know the hon. Minister has a good deal of jolie de vivre; he probably has read Simone de Beauvoir’s The Second Sex in its original language, from cover to cover. I want to say to him that he should not, in this House, subscribe to an attitude of women solely as wives and mothers, which tends to regulate them to the sort of subordinate position which North American society tends to accept. The emphasis should be twofold and it should be demonstrated in the hon. Minister's estimates.

But the final point I wish to make, Mr. Chairman, and I will then conclude with our outline in the New Democratic Party, is that nowhere is the folly of this particular approach better demonstrated, and I must say that this surprised me, than in the report of The Department of Public Welfare itself. It stands as a remarkable piece of self-indictment and I commend it to all the hon. members of this House.

The department undertook a study, a most interesting study, and the deputy Minister is to be commended on it. It analyzed 200 chronic, long-term welfare families. It divided them up into two groups of 100 each. Let us call them group A and group B. Group A of 100 families were given routine welfare services and, in the words of the report, it says as follows: "to measure the effectiveness of the services which may normally be rendered by the staff of a welfare department."

Group B of 100 families were given all possible help and treatment and personal counselling, short of additional funds, and again, to quote the report of The Department of Public Welfare: "the results exceeded all expectations."

Twice as many people in group B given personal help and counselling were rehabilitated within six months, and twice as many of those people in Group B did it on a voluntary basis. Forty-three out of the 100 families, nearly 50 per cent, and these people were supposed to be long-term chronic cases. What the hon. Minister's report itself describes as the normal welfare services rendered by his department, were only half as effective as the specialized services which his department undertook in the survey.

Now the hon. Minister has presented his estimates to this House and I ask him forthrightly, where is the extension of what this case study demonstrates in the apparatus of The Department of Public Welfare? Why can it not be extended? It is a sad fact that one did not have to be a prophet or a clairvoyant to demonstrate that such would be the result; and the result bears out, Mr. Chairman, most effectively, three areas:

First, the persistent allegation that only chronic dissolutes join the welfare rolls is totally absurd. Half the cases returned to work in six months, with specialized attention.

Second, if you reject the normal approach used by the department itself, then you save families, you save money and it is twice as effective. Let me quote from the department report, page four:

The additional cost of the unit was, of course, offset many times over by the re-establishment of a substantial percentage of the families and their removal from the welfare rolls.

The hon. Minister said that welfare was up 15 per cent. He implied that it might be nice to lower that somewhat. Surely in his own department he has canvassed the study which demonstrates that it is feasible.

Third, the welfare mentality which tends to permeate our system is demonstrably fossilized, Mr. Chairman, and the deputy Minister wrote this in his report, page three:

It is evident that in the administration of welfare programmes today there is a primary need to revise our thinking. It is not enough merely to maintain persons on public assistance. Increasing efforts must be directed toward re-establishing individuals and families on a self-supporting status within their communities wherever this is remotely possible.

So there you have it from the department itself, a complete refutation of the normal services it has provided, an appeal for the specialist approach which it has delineated, and not a word from the hon. Minister of Public Welfare in his estimates before the House.

Mr. Chairman, in view of all that I have said in attempting to outline the perverse welfare attitude which is characteristic of the government; in view of the criticisms both implicit and explicit, it becomes necessary, I think, to enunciate a new programme and to enunciate that new programme on new principles.

I fully admit that this will be a somewhat dramatic and revolutionary departure when compared to the present welfare system, but we deem it to be necessary. We deem it to be necessary within the next three years and we urge that the department give consideration to implementing the following ten points:

One, abolish all categorical aid, which is seen as totally self-defeating and replace it with a broad programme of social aid which will respond flexibly to the needs of each individual and family in order to rehabilitate, not just maintain.

And that implies point two, Mr. Chairman, the elimination of the rigid means test as the sole qualification for aid, to be replaced with an assessment of need, including the need to live decently while being helped to become self-sufficient.

Three, eliminate the residence requirements which are fallacious and antiquated and administratively expensive in a mobile society. They often disqualify needy individuals, or trap families in depressed areas where employment and retraining possibilities are limited.

Four, create large administrative units so as to permit more economical use of professionally trained staff and equipment, better distribution of skilled persons and more cohesive supervision.

Five, assess the study—if the hon. Minister will provide it—of his advisory committee on child welfare, and implement all those proposals which place absolute priority on children who are now inadequately cared for, including a vastly extended network of trained workers and facilities. This should be viewed as the question of utmost urgency.

Six, increase financial assistance to schools which train social workers while establishing other schools to provide a large number of trained but non-professional field workers, and encourage on-the-job training and recruitment of older workers and part-time workers to fill the "staff gap," so-called.

Seven, establish a provincial interdepartmental council representing welfare, health, education, the Attorney General, labour, citizenship and reform institutions for a more integrated and comprehensive approach at every level.

Eight, establish a local appeal board and a higher appeal court to replace the present three-man board appointed by the department itself for appeals on provincial grants only. It is shocking that an individual welfare administrator can eliminate a person from the rolls or deny them the right to go on the rolls without any appeal being granted.

Nine, throw the entire weight of the province behind a retraining and rehabilitation programme including that for disturbed children, on the assumption that the welfare department exists primarily to encourage people to become self-sufficient, responsible and self-reliant.

And finally, ten, create a special fund for on-going research projects to reform existing legislation and to specify a series of plans in every field of public welfare for the decade ahead.

Now I feel, Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, that implicit in this particular programme for the next three years is a profound change of attitude. While complimenting the department on pieces of social legislation which are far reaching, and while recognizing the difficulty of administration in a field like public welfare, I think we deserve and need a profound transformation of mentality, attitude, approach and pattern. It is that which we advocate and that which we commend and that which we hope will be acceptable.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, first of all let me congratulate the hon. member who just sat down for a great flow of words. I am sure that I would not even think of competing with him in ability to use the English language in the way that he has done. But I might tell him this, that in more words than he has used, I have heard this gospel of the socialist point of view and I appreciate it.

You have full right to have those views and express them. But unfortunately, I am not in that thinking group, although I appreciate the statements that were made in this respect, and I must confess there are some good things among them, things that we feel we could associate with our thinking in the matter, and which we will be pleased to take into consideration and possibly use. But until such time as the people of Ontario are satisfied to have a socialist government in Ontario, by which they will be regimented and for which they will be paternalized, well, until then, I will leave it up to the people.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: And we are dealing with welfare problems. I am not here to express in so many words, as you do, and say they should have done this and that. We are doing it all the time. These reports are not there for the fun of it, and in fact they are given out to the general public, which is proper, you may add your innuendoes as you see fit.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, I have been here for the last 16 years. I have seen the socialist party, either the CCF or the NDP, and I have often wondered one thing. Are there only three places in the world where you find the perfect man—either in an Ontario hospital, the cemetery or the NDP?

Mr. MacDonald: This is the kind of brilliance that is worthy of welfare.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, we will see. We have heard that for many years.

With respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Dovercourt, he has asked me especially what my attitude will be when they have the conference in Quebec City. I think we have had some very useful conversations with the officials of public welfare in Ottawa at the last federal-provincial conference in Ottawa. We are sure to have more useful discussions at this particular conference which will be in Quebec City. Also in May we will be dealing directly with matters of this kind with the appropriate Ministers, not in the general conference.

Mr. Thompson: What kind?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Everything dealing with The Department of Public Welfare and the—

Mr. Thompson: What will you be dealing with?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The whole programme as we know it and where we have participation with Ottawa.

Mr. Thompson: Could you give us the areas you are going to discuss?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The whole thing, sir.

Mr. Thompson: What do you mean, the whole picture?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I mean the whole question of disability pensions, old age assistance and mothers' allowances and also all the programmes that we share in equal participation, or in unequal participation if you wish, and those particular matters that are dealt with by this department.

Mr. Thompson: Could you clarify one of them? Mothers' allowance. How are you going to deal with mothers' allowance? What is going to be your stand when you go to Quebec? Nothing else, just mothers' allowance? If I could get your point of view on that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to deal with that particular problem when in Quebec City. We will do that possibly in May. As you noticed in Mr. Gordon's budget the other day, it was not mentioned. Naturally, I am not making any comment about this because there are some reservations. When the pattern of equalization is mentioned, we have to go very carefully. However, it was mentioned that they might possibly induce the provinces to accept the full responsibility, with the federal government providing the taxing powers which we should have in this respect. That is one of the things for discussion.

But, my hon. friend certainly would not expect me to give anything away regardless of how friendly he feels towards the people in Toronto and Ottawa. Certainly he would not expect me to reveal all my lines of battle beforehand.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister has told us, not in this report but the previous report, of his enthusiasm for a contributory pension plan. We have found from the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), when I asked him during his estimates, that apparently the integration of existing pension plans with a contributory national pension plan has been studied. When I asked specifically of the hon. Provincial Treasurer, has the Ontario civil service been discussing this, I got the reply that they do have the technical answer, but it now rests on the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario to find other answers. But that I assume is the political answer.

Now we know you are speaking on this. What is going to be your stand on the national pension plan? You, yourself? Obviously this is so important to your whole fabric of welfare services.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give any comment upon a national plan, because we have no such thing as yet. There is an Ottawa plan. That is what we have. We have no national plan. Now after the Quebec conference, we might have and then it will be possible to give some expression to our point of view concerning it. I am sure my hon. friend can understand that.

Mr. Thompson: Well, is this going to be on the agenda at Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I do not know. I am not the man who deals with the agenda.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have asked for it to be put on, but I have not yet been told it is going to be on.

Mr. Sopha: Do you want us to ask Prime Minister Pearson for you?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: If you think it would help.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister—I am sorry, were you going to—

Mr. Chairman: I would ask the member to allow the Minister to reply to the questions that have already been asked.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I was going to say, Mr. Chairman, a question was asked of me by the hon. member for Dovercourt. He talked about county welfare units.

I have not got the full answer here. I will give it to you later, if you will bring it up again. But I know there are two county units in full operation, with six counties now attempting to go into it. As you can appreciate with me, if my hon. friend has any knowledge of members of county councils, they are not people who usually jump into a new situation of any kind very quickly. They have to study it well. I think we are making progress. If you will ask me the question later, I will be able to give you a more definite answer on this matter.

Mr. Thompson: Could I just say we came from a meeting today, sir, this morning, with The Department of Education in which they have a bill which is going to encourage far more than just two units of education. I wonder whether you have given any consideration to a similar kind of bill to get county units of administration? We will discuss this later.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, if the questions have been answered, I wonder if I could ask a question of the hon. Minister relating to some of my remarks. I preface it by saying, Mr. Minister, that I accept the validity of the difference between you on that side and we on this side, and I would hope that you also accept that validity without impugning its integrity.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am not doing that. In fact, if my hon. friend thought that was it, I am sorry. I did not intend to do that.

Mr. MacDonald: What about your cheap references?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, who are you to talk that way about cheap references, my hon. friend from York South?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Just get back to the point—

Mr. Sopha: No bloodshed.

Mr. Chairman: Order. I am going to ask the members to ask the questions under the different items under this vote. Continue.

An hon. member: That is what we are doing.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am genuinely interested. I think this is the place to ask it, Mr. Minister, as to whether you have any date in mind for the report on child welfare in the province? Is the committee on the verge of submitting it?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I would like to tell the hon. members, through you, that point was covered in my remarks. I expected a question of that kind and I might say I give notice there are no monies in the estimates for this committee. They are through now and I expect the report any time within the next month or two.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister a question about his department and these various items here? I do not want to miss the opportunity—and this may stimulate him not to answer my question—but I do not want to miss the opportunity to say to him, through you, sir, that his remarks to the thoughtful presentation of the young man from Scarborough West were unworthy of him.

Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sopha: A great deal of thought went into the preparation of that address. It might be idealistic, it might differ from your pragmatism, but you should not get up and ascribe to a youthful person in public life the things you did.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): The pot calling the kettle black!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on the main estimate of the hon. Minister—

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Attorney General had better keep silent because he was not even here.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Socialist element!

Mr. Sopha: Could I ask you, sir, if in any place in these votes there is any money voted for family counselling services?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Not as such, Mr. Chairman, I would answer the hon. member for Sudbury, but this service is provided by the different organizations, and by some of our own staff, if you want to refer to that. But named as such, no.

Mr. Sopha: Well, there is a phenomenon within our society which worries me a great deal. I want to be very careful what I have to say about this problem, but a good many of the hon. members of this House, as well as a great body of people outside the House, will have noticed in recent weeks the rather startling series of homicides that have occurred in household units, whereby mothers apparently have been responsible for the deaths of their children.

In my own community, I am very depressed to say, that within a period of two months two families were obliterated, literally obliterated, as a result of homicidal action of one or other heads of the family.

But it does occur to me that, let a half dozen people in Ontario, or a very few number of people, suffer from something like muscular dystrophy or some other rare form of disease, and immediately somebody will proceed to set up some pluralistic association to bring aid to those who suffer or toward the elimination of that disease. But I ask, rhetorically, what have we done in the province toward the creation of some vehicle whereby we look into the problems of the family?

I would think that in this, the seventh decade of this century, all our major urban communities would have some sort of counselling service where a parent that is in a home where the bonds of matrimony and the conjugal union between the parties has disappeared, that they could go to some form of agency and seek relief and assistance and advice. I ask, when are we going to arrive at that point where we have enough social workers and the mechanics, the vehicle, of some assistance to the family?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I assure the hon. member for Sudbury that one of the main groups that deal with that to a very large extent are the children's aid societies. Also I know there are many private agencies which do the same.

The hon. member has suggested that possibly there should be a special grant for this. It is a matter that possibly could be looked into, but then again he mentioned a certain tragedy that took place in Sudbury. I am sure these tragedies, as my hon. friend will recall well, are not only of our modern society, they have been going on for many years in different areas, in different places, for different reasons.

There might be a larger prevalence today, and I do not wish to excuse anything when I say this. But I suppose the population is larger. I suppose as you say, the morals might be a little looser. You might go on to very many extensive reasons. I might even dare say this, and I am not doing as the hon. member for Armourdale (Mr. Carton) did yesterday, but I might also be taking my religious principles within my own hands—I do not suppose I would be ex-communicated but however I think maybe we are all lax in this—each and everyone of us. Possibly the church also could do their part to a larger extent than they are doing in dealing with particular cases like that. We would avoid, I am sure, many of these tragedies that happen by doing a lot of counselling ourselves.

I can recall the day when people used to go and take counsel, which maybe they do not do so much today. However, it is a very large problem. I believe that the hon. member for Sudbury brought this up if only for the purposes of encouraging more people to enter the social service field and go to university to take social service courses instead of some other courses they might wish to take. I am sure there is a great field there, and I appreciate his remarks.

Mr. Sopha: This government equates everything in terms of the amount of money that it gives. It seems to me we never measure up to our responsibilities at all.

As long as the government says, we give $75 million to universities, give $100 million next year—we are starting universities in Niagara Falls, Peterborough, and Sudbury. This government never apparently gives any stimulation toward the training of the type of people that we need.

Everybody with glass in one eye and sand in the other knows that there are not enough social workers, there are not enough people induced to go into the field. But in the meantime, when the wife, and it is most often the wife, is in a period of distress with her marriage and it seems to be going on the rocks; within our society there are two people she can turn to.

She can turn to the clergy. Most of the clergy, of course, have a large flock and they cannot give individual attention.

Or she can turn to the lawyer, who is utterly ill-equipped by his training. A lawyer, after all, is not more qualified to advise a person on their marital problems than is the baker, or the man who picks up the shirts for the dry cleaning—such a person might have more knowledge of family problems than a lawyer. My hon. friend from Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. Newman) says the milkman—but they come in large numbers to the lawyer.

I sav to them when they come, "Really, I can tell you about your legal rights, but I am not qualified to advise you on how you keep your home together."

And then about two weeks ago I happened to be at the police station—on business, I hasten to assure you—and when I was there a woman came in carrying a brown paper bag. I could not help but overhear what she said to the sergeant and she said, "I have a gun here and I would like to leave it with you". So he took the gun and he looked at it and he gave her a receipt for it. And when she went out, I said to him, "Am I thinking the right thing? Am I thinking the right reason that she brought the gun here?" He said, "Indeed you are." I said, "How often does that happen?" He said, "At least two or three times a week when they are fearful of their safety at the hands of their husbands who are into the barleycorn, they bring the gun to the police station."

On many occasions, Mr. Chairman, they do not bring the guns soon enough, when a family is destroyed or great harm is done to them.

I say this, and I am not going to elaborate and I am doing my duty in pointing this out here, in the light of recent events that have happened in my community which have, I cannot help but feel, given my community a bad reputation throughout the province if not the country, when we had two terrible tragedies within a period of a month or two. We have got to come to the point where, in every major urban community, we establish some sort of agency where people in distress about their marital problems, or when their home is breaking up, or one or either of the spouses is demonstrating anti-family tendencies, can go to get counsel and, what is more important, follow-up care or follow-up attention. That is more important.

It is all right for the husband to pledge off the drink, but unless somebody in our society is going to go around and see that he does stay off the drink and encourage him to do so, and to lift out of his temperament and personality the nobler emotions, then we are allowing the basic institution of our society—the family—to falter and be destroyed.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to add to this. The hon. Minister has said that he has studied the research done—I mean the research which was done by Miss Bessie Touzel, a pioneer project of a county system approach. I would like to concur very much with the remarks of the critic of the New Democratic Party. I listened very attentively. I did not say it as ably or as fluently as he did, but for the most part I think a number of the points I made were similar to his. I do not consider them socialist whatsoever. I think—

Mr. Bryden: They are socialist; that is—

Mr. Thompson: I think there has been an Elizabethan attitude in respect to residence clauses and in a number of other things; but, to get back again, one of the points the hon. member made was in knowing when the research was being done and when it will be implemented in practice. One of the points Miss Bessie Touzel made was that if you have a county unit you should have a family counselling service attached to the county unit. You should have a trained family counsellor. She stated that if this was done eventually money would be saved. She suggested that, eventually, money would be saved because, just as in many other things, the old proverb is true: Prevention is far better than cure. I agree with what the hon. member has said about having trained people in these units.

In the sense of having municipal units, particularly in small municipalities, there is no question that in some cases they have relegated the role of the welfare officer to the dog-catcher, or some such position. Until you get a larger unit you cannot get capable staff. I appreciate that desire for county units, but I would hope that there would be an infusion of real vigour into getting this.

We have asked, time after time, about the county units. We notice where The Department of Health has gone after this. We see that The Department of Education, facing the political reaction to some small school boards being amalgamated or consolidated, has very courageously gone after it. And yet we come back to this hon. Minister and each time it is admitted it is important, and then the hon. Minister tells us there are only two of these county units. If we had county units then we could have the kind of services which my hon. friend from Sudbury has so ably emphasized—that is to have units staffed with qualified people—and I wholeheartedly concur with his remarks.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to those remarks either; nor did I have any in respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Scarborough West. But I am asking the hon. member one question: Does he think, or would he prefer, that we have a statute establishing welfare consolidation as a law and forcing all the counties to do that? I do not think that would be very wise—at least I found that out.

What we are trying to do is to educate them along that line; and if we establish, as we have now, two projects which act as pilot projects—they will come in and they are coming in very quickly now. That has always been our understanding.

I understand the district of Sudbury is now coming in, and that area is very enthusiastic about it. You can get the ball rolling, so to speak, and I am sure we will have results; but I just cannot accept any other method in the sense of forcing counties into consolidation. That has been my problem.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, I have been saying this, frankly, since I first had the honour of representing a riding in this House. Surely the hon. Minister can look at Britain, where it can be seen there was encouragement by tax inducements for more industry to move into Wales. We can look at our federal government. We can look at the situation right here. As well as just talking about it, you can have tax inducements. You can offer such inducements; if they organized a county unit, again you could provide certain administrative areas, free of cost.

But, not just talking, I do not think the carrot is then quite juicy enough. I think that, knowing the motivations of not only people but also of the small administrations, the hon. Minister must present a fairly juicy carrot to get the local person, who perhaps is a dog-catcher, to say, "Look, I agree. I give up my position to be part of a broader unit and for the good of the people." I suggest the hon. Minister look at carrots and try to see which kind of carrots would induce the small municipalities to join together; because for four years the hon. Minister has been telling us about this, and the report shows only two of them coming in.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would agree with my hon. friend from Dovercourt that the carrot is useful in this situation, but let us face the fact that the prod is also essential. If the hon. Minister of Public Welfare would take a look at the experience of the hon. Minister of Education, he will find that there comes a time when you simply have to lay down the law.

The Department of Education was also following the permissive policy, and they continued to have over 3,000 school units in this province. It is obviously impossible to carry on modern education in such a situation so they have now, or are in the process of providing by law, that the number will be reduced. There will be a compulsory amalgamation of some of them; that, I think, is only the beginning of a process.

The hon. Minister is going to have to face up to the problem that if he really wants to get larger units, and more efficient units, of welfare administration, his present laissez-faire attitude will not be sufficient, nor even the carrot approach of the hon. member for Dovercourt.

The hon. Minister is up against the problem of the petty vested interests of big toads in small puddles, who will never give up. And since the protection of their little principalities is the least, or should be the least, of our concerns, the time has come when we simply have to lay it down that the principalities are abolished, and there will be larger units of administration in the interests of the people who are using the services. That should be the paramount concern. As long as we give prior consideration to little vested interests then the people who require the services which can be provided, are going to suffer.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, concerning the amalgamation of units, my own municipality did amalgamate the health units. We had a metro health unit, and it is now being expanded into a countywide unit—as of, I think it is, July 1. When the municipality appealed to the municipal board for annexation of the suburbs, the interim report suggested an amalgamation of the utilities commissions, after a fashion.

Surely, if such a recommendation or suggestion was made by the municipal board, then amalgamation of social services would be in order at this time also? We have four or five municipalities receiving various types of assistance from this department. It certainly would be much simpler for administration if they all were under the one unit, operated as a single unit.

However, I would like to pass on to a different topic; that is, concerning the day centres. We have a senior citizens' centre in the community and it is functioning exceptionally well. It provides all types of beneficial assistance to the senior citizens. It is in operation practically seven days of the week. Now it has proven itself to the point that I think it merits duplication in other parts of the province. Are other centres being contemplated throughout the province? Is the province recommending centres similar to the one in my own community?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that we have inquiries now from two or three different places, like Kitchener, Peterborough, and, I guess, Toronto who have been discussing it. It is there for them to undertake the project. As you know, under the conditions that were explained in Windsor. Windsor is a pioneer on this matter. In the case of any municipality that wishes to do so, we are quite willing to look at the proposal and advise them.

Mr. Newman: It is more than simply a case of having the legislation there and allowing municipalities to take advantage of it if they wish. If it is something that merits duplication, I think it should be the policy of this department to suggest that here is a centre that is of definite value to the senior citizens, it overcomes a lot of their problems and it should be copied.

However, I would like to get away from that into another topic and that is the grey area in which we find our senior citizens who no longer require hospitalization treatment, and at the same time are not well enough or cannot get accommodation in the old age homes. We take care of three different categories of people, those who are seriously ill, who need active treatment and intensive care. We place them in ordinary hospitals. We have those who need some medical supervision and therapy, but do not need intensive medical care. They may be chronic or convalescent patients. And we have a facility for them likewise. We also have those who need custodial care, bedridden or semi-bedridden.

But we finally find another category. That is the older person who is unable to fend for himself entirely, but who is able to get up and about. There certainly should be some facility provided to accommodate this fourth category of individual. Would the hon. Minister care to comment on this?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I wish to understand the ideas of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville when he talks about the aged people. I know that in the homes for the aged there are three different categories of care—the ambulatory, the bed care and also the special care. Is that what the hon. member had in mind when he mentioned special care? If the space in the Windsor home—in Huron View Lodge, which I guess is what he is speaking about—is not sufficient, I am quite sure the local people there will take a look at the picture and will possibly enlarge the home. Or even, I would suggest, if a new home is in order we are quite willing to discuss this matter with them.

Now, if you deal in another sphere beyond that, then you may be talking of those who are chronic cases. That is another story. I could not advise the hon. member about that. I am speaking strictly about those I believe he had in mind—those that we entertain in homes for the aged.

Mr. Newman: Well, just recently the Riverview Hospital had to release a large number of patients because they apparently were simply boarders in the hospital in the eyes of the department. Now where are these patients to go? They will not take them into the homes for the aged. The department is requesting that individuals in the municipality house these people. It is not that simple to come along and say: Here is a patient, take care of him." These people need some special type of accommodation to which they can go. The hospital treatment is too expensive for them and we should save the hospitals for the patients who need hospital treatment. These people do not need this type of treatment. They can fend partially for themselves.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: In other words, Mr. Chairman, this would be a person who would be eligible for the home for the aged except there are no more rooms there? Is that what the hon. member had in mind?

Mr. Newman: Well, they need some type of nursing care in addition to that. Now the home for the aged does not necessarily provide that.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I suppose, Mr. Chairman, what the hon. member over there means would be that some of them would be eligible for a nursing home which is comparable to the homes for the aged in what they do. Let me assure him now that there is already a committee formed including the members of my staff, myself, and The Department of Health, to look at this matter. I know we have, as an example, the situation that exists in Windsor, sir, as regards what the hon. member is speaking about. What is going to come out of the discussion, as yet I do not know and I could not say.

However, I still say, and I say this not only for the county of Essex or the city of Windsor, but for the province as a whole, in the building programme of the homes for the aged we have no restriction at all. I am quite sure if another home is required in Windsor we would be quite willing to sit down and talk to the people interested, if that would serve the purpose.

Mr. Newman: I thank the hon. Minister. He had one official from his department go into the community and make a comment to the city fathers at one time, so the department should be well aware of the problem.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, on this home for the aged I want to support my hon. colleague in connection with research. I just throw this out to you. Why are we having old people today who have to go into homes? Is it because of a lack of responsibility on the part of the younger generation? Is it because of the cost of living? There are many questions that one could raise.

If you had, for example, some kind of tax incentive—and it is unfortunate one even has to raise this—suggestion to have a family take responsibility for their grandparents, would we get people staying within the family unit rather than having to go to old people's homes? Have we ever thought, for example, and again I raise the question, where you have low-cost housing—and I am thinking of a plan in the United States—a municipality with the province will buy a couple of homes on a street? Have you ever thought that instead of having a large old people's home, you might actually choose individual homes on a couple of streets, say something like a Markham street where artists were invited to live after the homes clean up. Have you ever thought of doing this with old people instead of relegating them to the institutions?

I am suggesting sir, that we could just experiment, that you might take one house on a street and you can have four old people there. They can still stay in the community rather than moving out to an institution.

I am suggesting as well that if you have homemakers, perhaps the old people that my hon. friend has talked about so sympathetically, perhaps if you threw some weight behind the homemakers' services those old people could still stay in their room and so on and never need to go to an institution.

I raised about four possibilities off the top of my head, but I am hoping that ideas are receptive to you. I think that research should look into why these things happen. These suggestions I gave of experimentation are all such things that should be encouraged by you.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased my hon. friend brings these activities up because we have been doing just that to a large extent. I wish you would put that same question to my friend the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) when he has his estimates—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Oh yes, he is going to get a lot of questions.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is one question I would like you to put to him, because we are embarking on a programme similar in description to that of which you speak in conjunction. I think, with the federal government. As you know, we also have low cost housing for any group of people such as a service club who will form a company. They can borrow money from the federal government, and $500 is given by the province as an outright grant to help those projects. Also we promote the idea of encouraging people who can live in the community to remain in their own homes.

I am sure the idea my hon. friend mentioned is a good one. We have been doing, not exactly what you are talking about, that is, taking a whole street, but certainly there are elderly persons housing projects where elderly married couples live together, especially in these housing centres that you have here in the city of Toronto, the city of Windsor, the city of Hamilton, the city of Kingston. They have them in quite a few places and they have proven very worthy. I accept ideas at all times and I am sure this one will be considered as we carry on with the programme.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, four years ago I mentioned in the House family allowances in reverse, where a family might receive sort of a grandparent bonus if they took care of their aged parents. Now, has the department conducted any studies as to the feasibility of that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I do not get my hon. friend's idea. If he means to say that instead of holding myself responsible for taking care of my mother and my father, if I can afford to do it, I should have the state do it, I do not think I would like that idea very much; if that is what he had in mind. But if he is talking of foster children, that is another story. We already do that.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, allow me to explain to the hon. Minister. A family receives a family allowance until they reach, today, 17 years of age. Now the family would receive a grandfather and a grandmother allowance if they took care of parents who normally might leave them and go into a home for the aged. Rather than saddling the province with the additional cost of taking care of the individual in one of these homes for the aged, the family would take care of their parents, which they should do in the first place but they do not always do. For taking care of their parents, that is, those who normally would not, some type of allowance could be made available to them.

I suggested this four years ago and I thought possibly the department would have done some type of studying on it and come up with the advisability or feasibility of implementing something similar to that.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I think the old age pension covers this area. Normally, if it is a woman, she can now receive a pension at 60 years of age and if she is a widow, and many can get old age assistance at 65. We also have old age security. I do not mind looking into this proposal about grandparents but I have not much faith in it, really.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I do not mean it is just general, but I know of dozens of cases in my own community, and I imagine everyone else does in their communities, where parents are a financial burden on their children, that is, aged parents. As a result the children have them placed in homes for the aged. Now, rather than have them in homes for the aged, if the province made some type of allowance, a baby bonus in reverse, then possibly the family would maintain and keep their parents with them rather than relegating them to a home for the aged.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, with regard to grants to adult homes. Is an individual who operates a nursing home which The Department of Health will not approve, eligible for a grant from your department or must the home be operated by an organization?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: There is no grant to residents as such, but, as you know, nursing homes are all operated privately and we reimburse the municipality, based on how many of their citizens are in the home. The rate is 80 per cent up to $100. This refers to the grant to the municipality.

Mr. Troy: In your public accounts there are such adult homes; there is the Nipponia Home board and Salvation Army Eventide Home, Sisters of St. Joseph, Cambrian Hall and so on. You must—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: They are charitable institutions.

Mr. Troy: You cannot have an individual?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, our charitable institutions are not the type of nursing homes we were speaking about.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, under the item of children's institutions, I would like to ask the hon. Minister again, sir, on this study of children's institutions—it showed a shocking situation. It was shown there are children in this province of Ontario placed in institutions and there is no reason for them being here at all. If we have a look at other studies that have been done on children's institutions, a child who has been kept in institutional care often is shown to be very detrimental to his emotional upbringing. There have been studies of schizophrenics which have shown the condition in part to be the result of being brought up in an institution.

It was strongly recommended from the children's institutions study—referring to the three-year study done under the chairmanship of Miss Bessie Touzel—it was strongly recommended that you should be getting children out of the institutions, because they were healthy kids and had no reason to be in the institutions.

It was recommended there should be four groupings. As I understand, there should be a grouping for emotionally disturbed children, there should be those for whom group activity would be useful; there are the kind who do not fit into a family; and so on.

Now, I asked the hon. Minister last year had these institutions to which grants are given—children's institutions—had they come up to the standards which are wanted, that is the standards which the research recommended in connection with staff? Have they come up to the standard, and if they have not how are you encouraging them to work toward such standards?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I wish I could give an answer which would fully satisfy the hon. member. I do not like to mislead him.

As you will appreciate, this is a very difficult area, and all I can say to him is that there has been some improvement in the fact that we have tried, at least, to be stricter with them by asking them to have people that are more knowledgeable in doing that kind of work. But I must confess to you that there are not too many such people available. This is our difficulty.

I am unhappy, as the hon. member is, with this situation, but all I can say is that we have not lost sight of it and we are looking at it every day. We are doing the best we can about it, but I cannot assure you that the improvement is 100 per cent, but there is improvement.

Mr. Thompson: Sir, could I follow on to make my point clearer? As I understand, there are orphanages in which children are placed and in some instances they stay in these institutions for a long period. These orphanages, and I dislike that word intensely, these orphanages get grants to continue. I would feel the whole philosophy is that these orphanages be closed down and that the children placed in foster homes or to be adopted. My question is: Without embarrassing the hon. Minister, may I ask him whether the Orange Order, for example, gets a grant to continue an orphanage?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, but I am advised that their operations are very highly approved. I might point out to the hon. member that the one safeguard which exists in this, is the small number of children who are affected. I am informed that about 90 per cent of the cases in children's institutions or in homes of that description, are placements of the Children's Aid Society; and they certainly, I am advised, have constant supervision there. The situation of the other ten per cent of cases, which, I agree with you, should not be in institutions at all, is being looked at; and although improvement is not as fast as I would like, there is improvement. I am assured by my people here that the place you mention—the lodge up on Highway 11—does receive grants, but we are satisfied that the progress has been good in the last year.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister was courageous enough to make some suggestion about the role of the church. You said you were speaking as a person. I come from the north of Ireland. I will come out in connection with the Orange Lodge and say that I think that the day of an orphanage for children in this province is past, unless they are dealing specifically with the particular problem children as Bessie Touzel, paid by the department to do the study, outlined.

I stress that aspect in that study that emotionally disturbed children could be in institutions, when it is difficult for them to develop in a family setting; but when there are institutions for this type of child. How many such institutions do you have for emotionally disturbed children?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that we have 22 children's institutions. They are not all in the category the hon. member speaks about. There are 12 providing, more or less, board and lodging care. That is what you had in mind mostly—

Mr. Thompson: No. I want to know about emotionally disturbed—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: There are eight providing specialized care for children with behaviour problems, and one providing specialized care for emotionally disturbed children. Is that what you—

Mr. Thompson: Yes. There are eight which provide care for emotionally disturbed children. Could I ask how many of those fall short of the staff requirements as stated by Miss Bessie Touzel?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: All I can answer the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, is that there is a shortage. I have to admit that there is a shortage, but to put a figure on it would be very difficult for me.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I have said this before and I say it again: I do not think it is good enough that grants are being given to these institutions which fall short. Take the example of community chests: When an agency which is a recipient of a community chest does not come up to the standards, then it is thrown out of the community chest; any vital community chest will do that.

The hon. Minister similarly should be able to tell me about the institutions to which he gives grants, yet he cannot give me an answer with respect to the standards of the staffs. I simply say it is not good enough.

As the hon. Minister who is indirectly responsible for the lives of those children, he should know who is falling short of standards, and should be able to tell us what is being done to raise those standards.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am not saying that, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to argue with the hon. member, but I know this: As I said a moment ago, I just cannot draw up a staff out of paper and place it there. I must have a body which will make these studies and go in there. There must be actual persons who will undertake child studies and accept employment in these homes. I have to deal with that; and I think, with the staff we have now, that we are doing a pretty fair job of it.

I admit to you that there is a shortage of staff. If my hon. friend, with his influence and his natural ability in this field, can convince more people to go into this field he would certainly not only help the people of Ontario but he would be helping me at the same time, I am quite sure. This is what I mean by that. After all, I cannot take the responsibility of developing people who will undertake these studies. That is what I mean by saying that—I have a shortage of staff.

If there were people available they would be taken in very quickly, I assure you.

As far as the general standards are concerned, they are all set out in the regulations. These places are inspected, and although they are not perfect they are not doing too badly with whatever they have at their disposal.

Mr. Thompson: I do not want to belabour the point, Mr. Chairman, but the hon. Minister does have to take the responsibility on this. These are public funds which are being given over to these institutions, and I would say that the hon. Minister should know.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I do know.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister does know. Does the hon. Minister say that he does know the number of institutions which as yet do not have the proper qualified staff? The hon. Minister mentioned eight institutions which look after emotionally disturbed children. Miss Bessie Touzel, in her study, suggested that there were certain qualifications with respect to staff who would look after emotionally disturbed children. The hon. Minister has paid for that study. He said that this had to be the standard toward which to aspire.

What is the point of having this study done? What is the point of knowing what the standards are when the hon. Minister stands up each time in this House and tells us that he cannot tell us who has fallen short or who is up, but that, "We are all trying the best we can." Surely the standards are a guide, and the hon. Minister should know where he has fallen short. And because the hon. Minister, with all respect, comes into the House as a Minister of Public Welfare, he is falling short on the job when he cannot provide those answers.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I do not know the answers the hon. member wants. I told him that there were eight institutions providing specialized care for children with behaviour problems. In those eight institutions there is some staff which is knowledgeable, but not as much as I would like to have. After all—

Mr. Thompson: Of the eight institutions, how many are up to the standards as described by Miss Bessie Touzel?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that these eight at least meet the regulations as set out under the Act. They meet the regulations. I have one home providing specialized care for emotionally disturbed children, and eight others that are also following the regulations. Naturally, following regulations, I appreciate, might not be enough. There is something else over and above that. I am quite satisfied and disposed to take the hon. member's criticism about this. That is quite all right. I have no objection to this because we can always improve on these matters.

There are 12, as I stated before, which provide, more or less, board and lodging. That is a different proposition. The ones in which you were especially interested are the other nine. I can assure you that I may come here for 20 years perhaps, and tell you the same thing: I am doing my best to get that staff in there, but I just cannot invent the people to go there.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what is the Minister's best? Is he providing training systems? Is he providing scholarships? Are his salaries competitive? These are things which would attract new staff. I am just unable to follow the hon. Minister when he says, "I am doing my best but we are still short of staff."

In The Department of Education, the public accounts committee was having a look at some of their staff problems this morning, and their officials admitted quite frankly that one of the reasons they were short of staff was because they were not able to compete with other people on the salary basis. I wonder if this does not apply to your department. If it does then surely, Mr. Minister, this is your responsibility. If the salaries fixed by the Treasury board and by the civil service commission are too low to attract the sort of people you need, then you should be telling us that and you should be saying that representations are being made to increase the salaries, and to increase the training. Surely it is not enough, with the greatest respect to the hon. Minister, to say I am doing my best. There is a shortage. The hon. Minister recognizes the shortage and he should tell us how he is going to cope with it.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Again, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to argue with my hon. friend. This is an argument, and I know I have not got the ability of the hon. member across the way to argue with him. But I can tell him that we give bursaries; we also give grants to the two schools of social work, one in Ottawa and one in Toronto, and we were able last year to get 31 students.

Our competition is not strictly money. Our competition are all the welfare agencies in the municipalities, and everybody around who use these people. This is our great competition. As you know, 31 bodies is not an awful lot of bodies to deal with in the great field of that description. But we hope that we have been progressing in this field. I can recall when there were only seven bursary students. We hope, next year possibly, to double that number of bursaries. That is all I can tell my hon. friend.

I do not mind taking the blame for it, if that would satisfy anybody's feelings. However, I am just putting the facts as they are.

Mr. Singer: We do not want to blame anybody. We just want to have the schools built up to strength.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister consider giving grants or scholarship aid to students attending American universities but resident in Ontario if they are going to study in the field of social work?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: My only answer, Mr. Chairman, is that we have a lot of places in Ontario for this training. I do not know why they want to go over to the United States for it. We have even a better course here in Ontario.

Mr. Newman: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can very easily answer that in my own community. The individual only has to cross the river and he is two miles away from the institution. If he wanted to study in Ontario he would have to travel to Toronto, or to Ottawa, so would it not be an advantage for the province to provide the scholarship for that individual to cross the border, take his training, and then supply his services to Ontario? Then the brain drain would be in the reverse.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Let me make a suggestion to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville. He lives in what I know is a great country. I know it better than he does because I was born there and lived there for many years. I would make a suggestion to him that instead of making the suggestion he made to me, why not approach the university in Windsor about having their own course? That would be much easier yet.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I will do that, but in the meantime and until the time that course is set up at the university—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That could be done in four weeks.

Mr. Newman: —in Windsor, why not take advantage of the facilities that you do have across the border? Our American friends will train the individual and then we take advantage of the training they gave him. Is there something wrong with a suggestion such as that?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Newman: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have one other question for the hon. Minister. The individual in later years, after he is 45 or maybe 50, finds it most difficult in obtaining employment. As a result he falls in the ranks of the individuals receiving general welfare. Has the department ever made a suggestion that possibly certain types of employment could be reserved for elderly people? I am referring to such things as ticket takers, building guards, watchmen, desk clerks and receptionists in certain institutions, parking meter checkers, elevator operators, toll collectors.

I have mentioned about six or eight different categories of people, elderly people who could provide this service if the job does not require any physical endurance. It would give this elderly citizen an opportunity for some type of employment, rather than have him fall in the ranks of general welfare. Has the department ever considered making a suggestion similar to that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I can recall having said that in speeches I have made across the province many times. And I would say that all I can do is suggest it. We have worked with different people, like Mr. George Gardner in Windsor, for instance, suggesting that he do his best to investigate and place these people. That has been the general policy, but to propose it for everybody, I do not think I could do that.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I said—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The fact that you make it as such is a public statement. It should give it effect.

Mr. Newman: Well, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Gardner, back in Windsor, will certainly look into it. He is a most capable man.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, following up on that, I would like to raise another suggestion for when you go to Quebec. I am thinking of other countries with respect to disabled persons. In Germany, for example, industry is encouraged to give opportunities to disabled persons. Tax inducements are granted the industry to have a proportion of disabled people. Again, it is really returning to my opening remarks, as well as those of my hon. colleague from the new party, that there should be a better look at the broad scene. There are people, who are probably in institutions, being given just maintenance help, rather than an urge to get back into the economy of the society.

My hon. friend has talked about opportunities for older people. I am thinking of opportunities for people who might be disabled in some way. I am thinking in my own area there are fellows who become partially disabled and are, frankly, caught in the gap. They are partially disabled and get a small pension. They go down to the National Employment office to try to get a job, and they say "We are sorry we could not get you a job, you are partially disabled." They are trying to get a light job, and they cannot get a job so then they come and get welfare. We need such tax inducements and more retraining. I noticed yesterday that with workmen's compensation there is a greater emphasis on retraining.

But I would like a bold hard look at this. Let us talk about a sort of new frontier approach—not people going off to Asia or somewhere as it applies in the States. I read a little while ago about another new frontier approach in which the United Church, or some spiritual voluntary group are taking a group of people up to the Arctic to work with the Indians.

And yet I think of Canadians in our cities in Ontario in connection with poverty, and the recurring generations of people who are on welfare. Here is a really challenging problem to be faced. And I am not sure that it has not to be faced from a number of facets. I am thinking of the co-ordinated approach of departments suggested, and I whole-heartedly concur with this. We need such an approach on the hard core group, in places where children are probably going to grow up without opportunity and become welfare cases themselves. Let us encourage top-notch teachers in this area. Let us go further than that. Let us give opportunity in education; really make opportunity for these children in order to pull them out of their environment. Scholarships and so on. This really comes to the point of research.

I am sure if that study was done on a hard core group approaches would be developed. I would be interested to know, as my hon. colleague has asked, about the completed study. The deputy Minister wrote up the study stating there would be new approaches. In fairness, can we not ask what are the new approaches to the grave problem of the hard core of welfare? What are the new approaches, sir?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, Mr. Chairman, the only answer I could give to this is that our approach is through constant research and improvement.

Mr. Thompson: No, I am really concerned about the hon. Minister. This is almost like an itch. One can keep itching away all the time just on research. At some point you need action.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is your answer. All right.

Mr. Thompson: When is the hon. Minister going to stop research and apply it? Implement it? How much more research is needed? Is the hon. Minister doing research on the report he has, and thus research the research?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I have answered the question.

Mr. Thompson: No, the hon. Minister has not.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, I think I have.

Mr. Thompson: Well, let me just ask this again, or we are going to get into a fight about it.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, I am not.

Mr. Thompson: Because we are talking about men and women and children who are suffering, who are not getting opportunity, and you are taking the most dilettante approach. A study has been done and the hon. Minister turns around—and what is his answer? He has had the ground rules suggested to him, and he stands up and suggests the answer: "Research, research, research." I suggest to the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I said we will try—

Mr. Thompson: I suggest that, as the Minister of Public Welfare, I do not think the hon. Minister is too adequate.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Balderdash!

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I want to pick up—

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Minister would listen instead of defending the indefensible.

Mr. S. Lewis: I want to pick up immediately from where the hon. member for Dovercourt left off, and say that not only Mr. Minister, do you display an anti-humanitarian attitude, because we are dealing with human beings—but you make no fiscal sense. Your research study is saving the government money—half of the people came off the welfare rolls and went back into regular employment. If that is the case, if people become self-sufficient and integrated into the economy, why cannot a specific answer be given as to whether the hon. Minister is prepared to make the results of this study actual departmental policy?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, this research was only the first project. It was a joint effort between the city of Toronto, Metropolitan Toronto, and ourselves; and it is being applied as of now. These things do not show up prominently in the public eye like a big balloon—that is what I meant to say a few moments ago. The results of that research have been applied, but research will not stop. It will continue at all times; even the results obtained in the application of this research will be again researched; I think that is the only way to do it. I cannot give any better answer than that.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, I think there is a distant communication between us. The deputy Minister in his report suggests that there would have to be new thinking. I am trying to find out where he said it, but it was read out by my hon. friend. All I am asking is what I think is a fairly simple question: The deputy Minister said “new thinking” and I am just asking if the hon. Minister could tell us what new thinking? Can the hon. Minister not tell us that? It was written up in the report that from this study there was going to be new thinking. Could the hon. Minister tell us what new thinking there has been?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, I suppose, the new thinking is simply that you improve upon what is being done and has been done—that is in line with new approaches. Many new approaches have been made, and we will have new approaches to make in the child welfare situation when the report is in. I hope it will be in by some time next May or June. And as far as mothers' allowances are concerned, we made new approaches in this respect in dealing with them more in an economic sense, as well as in any other sense. These things—I just do not know what my hon. friend wishes me to lay my finger on, because it is a subject that is so general. I might point to some instances here or there which are obvious, and in other instances it is some improvement that you might not see. But this was a joint research with, as I told the hon. member, the city of Toronto; and I am advised further that the city of Hamilton is involved in this also. These cities are doing research for their own purposes as well.

To have me tell the hon. member anything different from that, and point my finger at one particular part of what it is being accomplished—well, that is very difficult. I would say, in a general way, that that research has opened new horizons, and is leading to experiments and the research will continue.

Mr. MacDonald: Words, words, words!

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa East has the floor.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, having been associated for many years with one of the largest children's aid societies in this province, I am a little upset by an item of $20,000 for a demonstration project for preventive services to the city of Ottawa. Mr. Chairman, this province has, at the present time, one of the best organizations for the care of children—

Some hon. members: Wrong vote!

Mr. Racine: Shall I discuss that on the next vote, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: We are still on vote 1801.

Mr. Racine: Thank you. I will reserve my comments for the next vote.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. George.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Niagara Falls has the floor.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): There are three questions I would like to ask the hon. Minister. How many counties has the county welfare office in operation? Does the hon. Minister have that before him?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Wentworth county, and Prince Edward.

Mr. Bukator: How long has the first one been in operation?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: A year, I would say.

Mr. Bukator: Then my third question is: How is it operating? Is it going along well? Are they giving the service you believed they would in the first instance?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: From all reports I have had so far, the thing is running very well.

Mr. Bukator: The hon. Minister made a comment here, a while ago, that he did not wish to force the county system on the counties because we do not do business in that way in this province. I believe that is what the hon. Minister said about an hour ago when we were discussing this matter. I tried to get to my feet before this on that subject. Is there any way the hon. Minister's department could persuade counties to apply the county system in other counties of the province?

The reason I ask is that most of the townships and villages—yes, and towns and counties—have to administer the affairs of welfare of that municipality through their clerks when they are a small municipality. In many cases the applicant should be investigated. The clerk should not, and does not, have time to do the job properly. Is there any way the hon. Minister's department could, through publicity or through a circular letter to the counties, persuade them to go into the county system?

I do not want to relate my remarks to certain municipalities in my riding, but I know that the clerks of most municipalities are capable and decent people. I am not pointing my finger at any of them. But I do believe that this burden should be taken off their shoulders because they have other work to do. I am wondering what the department can do, and will do, to assist counties to start in on the county system because I believe that is the answer to that one problem. Is there any comment the hon. Minister would like to make on that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We try to use the services, as much as we can, of the municipal welfare officers who know about the proposals, as well as our own officers, we wish to give them the whole picture of what they are getting into, if they should get into consolidated welfare services. Furthermore, we provide staff for the counties for a period of at least six months, longer if necessary, to get them completely started. My deputy Minister advises me that the next county he thinks will be coming in line in this matter—and this might be of interest to the hon. member—is the county of Welland.

Mr. Bukator: Yes. Well, we have been pressing for this in our area—the county council especially. The chairman of that committee was, or still is—there is only one thing wrong with him—Malvin Swart. He is an exceptionally fine man, but he leans to the New Democratic Party. Mal has worked hard from the county level to put this into existence, and that is why I mentioned his name. The hon. Minister says that Welland county will be the third, or is heading in that direction.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: It appears that way now, yes.

Mr. Bukator: Any assistance the department could give them through its experts would be appreciated by everybody in that riding.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, it is very pleasing to see the front part of your head for a change instead of the back.

I wanted to speak on a couple of these grants, Mr. Chairman, that are not listed in the main office vote. I am sure the hon. members of the House who have Indian reservations in their ridings welcome the assurances which the hon. Minister gave them in his opening remarks. But the remarks of the hon. Minister were dealing with some of the problems that Indians have on the reservations, and of course the problems that I want to present to the hon. Minister again this year are the problems of the Indians in urban areas, especially here in Metro Toronto.

Last year I spoke about this problem, and I hope largely as a result of my remarks to the hon. Minister, two grants were later approved—presumably as Treasury warrants—one to the Central Neighbourhood House on Sherbourne Street here in Toronto, and the other to the Canadian Indian Centre of Toronto on Church Street—again in my riding.

At the time those grants were made, it was my clear understanding—and I certainly stuck my neck out for both of these groups—that these grants last year were both part of a two-year grant system to be continued this year in the same amount. While I would not swear an affidavit to it, I can remember a public meeting last year on Bloor Street to which the hon. Minister was very kind to come. I think it was entitled “Tory Night in Toronto”. I think I can produce some witnesses to the fact that the hon. Minister at that time, clearly and unequivocally, indicated to that group—and it was a public meeting—that these were grants to be made for a two-year period.

In any event, I opened the estimates, Mr. Chairman, and I am horrified, I am aghast, to note that under the head office vote there is no grant listed for either of these two centres. I am just wondering if the hon. Minister can reassure me, so that I can reassure these people, that their programmes which they are continuing this year and which is based on the concept that these grants from the province were going to continue this year, will be made to them this year.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member for St. George: As he knows, this was a matching grant with the federal government. He is quite right in that I have assured him we shall again match the same grant, this was to be for two years, that is true. That is why the grant is obtained by warrant, because I am not too sure if the federal government will give it or not, but if they do I can assure the hon. member that the organizations will receive the same grant.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: The only trouble with that, Mr. Chairman, is that my understanding is that the federal government is saying they will give the grant if the province will.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister did not say anything about matching the grant.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Was the hon. member there?

Mr. Sopha: No, but I know of 40 or 50 Indians who were going to move into Toronto, when they heard that.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that the federal government is now taking the position that they will make the grant if the province makes a grant. The hon. Minister now indicates that the province will make the grant if the federal government will make the grant. Perhaps he can remove all doubt in everybody's mind by indicating that the province will make the grant.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I can assure the hon. member that I will take the matter up with the hon. Minister of Health and Welfare in Ottawa.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: I thank the hon. Minister.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to come back—the reason I rose a few minutes ago—to the question that the hon. member for Niagara Falls had asked. The hon. Minister assured us that there was staff help available to get these plans under way and to get the county unit set up. Now my question to him is: is there staff help to initiate this process?

That is, are there staff members who are moving in the province, meeting with the smaller municipalities, and getting them organized on a county basis, selling them the idea that this makes sense, that specialization is possible this way and persuading them that this is good and getting the whole movement under way?

I think if there are staff doing this, this is good. If it is just a case of helping them after the initiation of the move, then we have not enough Mal Swarts perhaps in the province to get the initiation under way. We need this other business of the staff itself, at a provincial level, meeting with the municipalities, getting the county units set up. Is this happening?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I can assure my hon. friend that is what is happening. As a matter of fact, this evening and tomorrow there will be meetings in Welland, in Bruce and a couple of other counties, for that purpose. We are doing that, instructing and advising the people of the advantages and what might result from the whole thing. The moment the county council decides to go along with consolidation then we provide them with staff; that is we provide them with persons, from our permanent staff we have here, for six months or more if necessary to get them going. That is done regularly, as the hon. member suggested, and he is quite correct.

Mr. Thompson: On vote 1801, I would say I appreciate that the hon. Minister, in answer to a question I raised previously, amplifies that research is the cornerstone for his department. I think that was pretty well what he was suggesting. Some people put it another way, on which I will refrain from remarking.

The hon. Minister placed a great emphasis on research. He told me that he would do research and more research. Could the hon. Minister tell me where in the grants he has placed the emphasis? Could he tell me how much he is giving to research?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I have no specific item as such, because there are many departments doing research along with their regular work. I have had a research body in respect of the children's aid society which has completed its work now. Miss Touzel undertook that research the hon. member spoke about, which is terminated now. I hope I will be successful in having research done by some of the women that will be members of the proposed council. While I am speaking on this point, I would like to leave the impression that I was not only thinking of research on the problem of a woman as a mother and as a wife, but I was also thinking of her as a unit, if you want to call it, a social, economic unit with problems similar to those of a man.

Mr. Thompson: I do not want to belabour this point either, but I would say that, really, if there is to be emphasis on research, surely to goodness the hon. Minister should provide some financing to back up his faith in research; he should have some areas that he wants to study, instead of saying that they may come up again. I will not, but I could, go into a number of areas in this where there should be research projects, even on a broad basis. I am thinking of a book—which I am sure the hon. Minister has read — “Beyond the Welfare State” questioning how far we go in all this. I am thinking of a number of questions raised about welfare and its effects. I would hope that, with your enthusiasm, it has been an oversight, this lack of some grant for research. I would hope that you will give reconsideration to not only an emphasis by word on research, but an emphasis by financial grants.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman!

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, on vote 1801, item 11, I notice that you have a grant to the Canadian Welfare Council to the amount of $17,000. Could I ask the hon. Minister through you, Mr. Chairman, why the grant to the Canadian Welfare Council has been reduced from $18,624? I am quoting from page R8 No. 1 public accounts for 1963. I see that this grant in 1963 was $18,624. Now in view of the increased demand that we had to make on the Canadian Welfare Council, could the hon. Minister explain to me why the grant for this year has been reduced?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I would tell the hon. member for Ottawa East, I think you will find the amount was reduced last year and the amount of the Ontario Welfare Council was raised. We put them on the same level.

To give you a reason; the only reason I gave, as I recall last year, was that we raised the Ontario Welfare Council grant because we were working with them more closely possibly, than the other council. You might consider it was arbitrary, in a sense, but we felt at the time that they should receive the same amount instead of having the Ontario council lower than the other one.

I think the Canadian Welfare Council calculated it on a per 1,000 head basis, but we have left that and put them back on a basis of equality. In other words, we raised the one and lowered the other. In other words, I was using the same money to serve two groups of that description.

The reason I gave for raising the Ontario council was the fact that we had closer relations with them than the other. To give a very definite reason why the other one was put at the same amount is to say that I had only one certain amount of money, and to raise the one, I had to decrease the other one to even out the money.

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. Minister for his explanation. Now, I definitely do not suggest that the grant to the Ontario Welfare Council be reduced. I know the work that the Ontario Welfare Council is doing. But on the other hand, I think that in view of the additional expenditures that the Canadian Welfare Council estimates for this year, sir, that the hon. Minister could reconsider and, perhaps, adopt the method of determining the grant as suggested by the welfare council. It would give the Canadian Welfare Council possibly a few thousand dollars more.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. Minister one or two things about The Children's Institutions Act of 1962-63. The regulations of the Act suggest that there should be provision of such psychiatric privileges, including the services of consultation, as are from time to time deemed necessary by the physician for the institution. It makes it quite clear, in the four categories involved that when you are dealing with emotionally disturbed children there is a great amount of specialized treatment required.

Now the department's per diem payments range in the area of two dollars, three dollars and four dollars a day maximum. I am wondering whether the hon. Minister feels that is sufficient to undertake the kind of treatment the Act implies.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out, first of all, to my friend, the hon. member for Scarborough West, that the cases of the Children's Aid Society, as you know, are paid for 100 per cent. I realize what the hon. member says has merit, and we have been looking at that picture as late as this year. We hope to make an improvement on it. But the great amount of children's costs go on the per diem rate of the Children's Aid Society and they are paid 100 per cent.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, I am delighted to hear it, Mr. Chairman. I raise it because although a good part of the money goes to the Children's Aid Society, the per diem rates listed in the Act affect 44 other separate institutions dealing with children in various degrees of emotional disturbance. Well, having asked that point and got a partially optimistic reply, I shall dare to venture further.

What does the hon. Minister think about the situation in which parents who are deemed able to pay an amount by the provincial supervisor, and refuse to pay a specific amount, thereby disqualify their child from entry to an institution under this Act? Does the hon. Minister think that perhaps some alteration might be forthcoming whereby children could be brought within the scope of the Act even if their parents were negligent?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Before that is answered, Mr. Chairman, would my hon. friend have any specific case in mind?

Mr. S. Lewis: Frankly, no.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, I understand that is also research. These regulations are being looked at now, as we mentioned a moment ago. I do not know how far it can be gone into, but I am sure this also is being looked into at present. That is why I was asking you if you had any particular case, because it is so much easier to deal with if you do, and make it a matter of research into what should be done. You see, if we have a particular example to show, we can maybe obtain better results by looking at a specific case. If you do have one, I would appreciate having it.

Mr. S. Lewis: I suspect one could be found. What little I know about The Department of Public Welfare, Mr. Chairman, has taught me that vast numbers of people who are deemed ineligible for assistance of one kind or another, fall precisely at the subsistence level. They are not totally indigent. They are the people who might be able to pay a fraction of the cost, and they are thereby dismissed by various municipal welfare offices.

However, I am delighted to hear that the Act is being overhauled, and will be interested to see the changes in the regulations.

Could I ask another question of the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, which relates to the housing for elderly people? I am sorry I was not able to get it in earlier. I wondered whether there is any specific co-ordination between The Department of Public Welfare, The Department of Municipal Affairs and The Department of Economics and Development in the construction of such units?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, with respect to housing I must tell the hon. member, through you, that as far as the department is concerned, it is strictly an outright grant of $500 that is made to any group who will form a unit to erect housing for this particular group you speak about. I understand this year, The Department of Economics and Development is entering a programme with the city and with the federal government. That I cannot explain to you. I would not dare in case I might lead you astray, but I am sure the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, when he has his estimates, will be able to explain that. I do not know if this will swallow up what I am doing, or if it will be in co-operation with this. This is being discussed at the present moment.

Mr. Thompson: I am thinking of co-ordination in connection with departments. Surely there is quite a close relationship just in the matter of housing. I raised the question previously. I got down to the particulars of a woman who had not adequate housing. Her children were ill to a large extent because of the housing problem. She had a child who is macrocephalic and had to go to the sick children's hospital. At the moment we are trying to get a home for her and the other children. I have been writing letters to the mayor of Toronto; writing letters all over the place. There is no adequate low-cost housing for large families in Toronto. This is part of the picture with respect to the hon. Minister's department.

Now, sir, I would like to ask, not just on the housing question, but on all of these situations, is there a co-ordinated committee that gets together to look at the large picture? If so, who is it made up of and how many times does it meet?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I cannot assure the hon. member that there is a committee, but I can assure him there are consultations regularly about those matters between the different arms of government. That is how I was able to speak about this other thing, because we are consulted on that and compare notes and see what we can do about that particular housing.

You will appreciate, with me, that the main concern I had was for elderly persons' housing and not housing in general which is what the hon. member is speaking about. Does the hon. member have in mind the case of a large family? That is another thing altogether. But I was really mentioning housing for the elderly.

There is no committee of which I know, but I assure the hon. member there are consultations regularly between not only the Ministers themselves, but also the staff. Generally speaking, this staff is the education, economics and welfare and health specialists.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, I think if there is constant consultation, perhaps it might be even better. It may be more flexible than if there is rigidity. It does seem to me there is such interrelationship.

I would like to ask this question, and I am thinking of the hard-core family groups getting welfare: Is there an emphasis on the children in trying to provide educational opportunities for them? I remember, in some instance in the past, asking whether there was some kind of an incentive, some kind of bursary given to children whose parents were on welfare and who could thus go to the university.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: In what sense does the hon. member mean—is this for people receiving welfare from the municipality, for instance? Is there any incentive for sending them to university by giving them bursaries?

Mr. Thompson: No, I am thinking this, sir. I have noticed a study was done, I think, by the Atkinson Foundation which showed that in poor economic areas there is often poor teaching, which meant recurring cases of lack of opportunity for young people. If the hon. Minister will excuse my mind jumping away to another example, I am thinking of a problem group which we have out in the Kootenays—I am moving away out to B.C. I am thinking of the Doukhobors and of the situation where—I am not sure if this was successful either, or whether it is the approach that should be taken, but I raise it to the hon. Minister. Where you have a group which, because of a number of factors, causes problems in recurring generations, you try to concentrate on the children and provide them with opportunities of education. I am wondering, where there was a recurring situation of hard-core welfare cases whether there can be any kind of concentration on the children while still respecting the sanctity of the family?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: In the relief field as such—and particularly I am talking of mothers' allowance—we do naturally have something to promote the idea of having less drop-outs. I do not know of any programme we would have in respect of promoting attendance at school. It is an interesting question and might be worth looking into; I do not know.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Chairman, under this vote—section No. 9, administration of northern units—I would like very much to discuss general welfare administration through the regional branches in the north. I am wondering whether I should do it on this vote or wait for general welfare assistance. This will take some time, and I do not want to be cut off at six o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Might as well have it now, yes.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Well, may I say, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member has said he is going to be some time discussing this particular subject, and I imagine he does not want to start into it now.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, obviously we are going to go on with these estimates on some other occasion.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, with the indulgence of the House, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. The report of The Department of Travel and Publicity.

2. The report of The Department of Public Records and Archives for the province of Ontario for the year 1963.

And, in the absence of the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Auld), on his behalf,

3. The annual report of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission for the period ending December 31, 1963.

I may say that the hon. members of the House will find copies of this report in their mail box; they were put in this afternoon, I believe.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will proceed with the estimates of The Department of Travel and Publicity.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 19, 1964

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome to the Legislature today, in the east and west galleries, students from Mill Street Senior Public School, Leamington; and in the east gallery, members of the Progressive-Conservative Ladies Association of Belleville and district.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin), from the standing committee on agriculture, presented the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill No. 8, An Act to amend The Plant Diseases Act;

Bill No. 82, An Act to amend The Milk Industry Act;

Bill No. 83, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act; Bill No. 91, An Act to amend The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE ONTARIO FOOD TERMINAL ACT

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Food Terminal Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE POLICE ACT

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Police Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, this is a series of amendments to

The Police Act to define more particularly the powers of the Ontario Police Commission, and to give to it certain additional powers, particularly with respect to determining the adequacy of policing and the designation of areas under The Police Act where municipalities are required to have their own police force.

It provides, as in The Firefighters Act or The Fire Departments Act, during certain periods, for negotiation with a time limit to ensure that, as quickly as possible, there may be a determination of the rights of the police with respect to their contracts.

It provides for the issuance of commissions to officers of the Ontario Provincial Police force and, in that manner, brings them into line with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Force. It also provides for the control and the direction of the Ontario Provincial Police force in a manner similar to that now used by the federal government with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

THE LAW SOCIETY ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Law Society Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this is mainly an administrative Act. It provides that retired justices of the Supreme Court of Ontario, the Exchequer Court of Canada, be no longer ex-officio benchers. The Law Society has pointed out that a great many judges now retired have returned to private practice, and it is essential that the governing body of the society be properly elected.

It also provides for certain administrative changes with respect to the position of benchers, or the members of the governing body of the society, concerning payment of dues. They have been in a special position; this Act removes them from that and puts them in the same position as any member of the Law Society.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): In that respect.

Hon. Mr. Cass: In that respect. It provides also for certain administrative details with respect to compensation fund administration charges and the printing of reports.

THE JUVENILE AND FAMILY COURTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Juvenile and Family Courts Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: This bill, Mr. Speaker, provides for the elimination of the title of deputy judge in the juvenile and family courts.

It provides that the judge will now be known as "senior judge," and when there is more than one judge there may be an associate senior judge.

THE INSURANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: This bill, Mr. Speaker, can be divided into two parts. The first part consists of several amendments which have to do with taking the real estate brokers, and the collection agencies and others, out of The Department of Insurance and placing them under The Department of the Attorney General. There is provision made also, for the collection of statistical information in the case of insurers for fire, property and sprinkler damage; it is in the same terms as provisions for automobile insurers.

It also provides for the issuance by the superintendent, or the approval by the superintendent, of a form of certificate of automobile insurance which may be consistently used throughout all those jurisdictions which adopt it. It is the first step, Mr. Speaker, towards having one certificate evidencing automobile insurance which will be accepted in all jurisdictions. In concert with The Department of Transport, a great deal of progress has been made and we think the time to give this authority is now.

THE COLLECTION AGENCIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Collection Agencies Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this bill will put the administration of this Act under the director of registrations branch of The Department of the Attorney General; it is in line with the other amendments previously or now being introduced by me to transfer these enforcement areas from The Department of Insurance to The Department of the Attorney General.

The bill also makes certain provisions governing licensing, investigations and enforcement standards in the above-mentioned Act.

THE MORTGAGE BROKERS REGISTRATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this bill as well as the one I am about to introduce, are the same as the amended Collection Agencies Act. They provide for the transfer of duties and authorities from The Department of Insurance to The Department of the Attorney General, and provide the same series of administrative and semi-judicial actions with respect to hearings.

THE REAL ESTATE AND BUSINESS BROKERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this too is a bill transferring the real estate and business brokers licensing and disciplining from The Department of Insurance to The Department of the Attorney General.

THE MORTGAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Mortgages Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, basically this bill provides that no mortgagor may lose his equity under the power of sale contained in a mortgage without notice. At the present time it is quite possible, if default continues for a certain length of time, for a mortgagor to lose his equity under the power of sale in a mortgage, without being given notice so that he could try to refinance his deal. This provides that, in every case, the mortgagor will not be able now to contract out of this. This applies in every case, and notice must be given. The notice may be given after ten days of default. Before the power can be exercised, 35 more days must elapse, during which time the mortgagor will have an opportunity of refinancing or paying up the arrears.

THE SHORT FORMS OF MORTGAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Short Forms of Mortgages Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this is complementary to The Mortgages Act and makes provision for the changes in the forms authorized by the statute.

THE WAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Wages Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, this bill has for its purpose to remove the existing confusion and abuses arising in the granting and enforcement of wage assignments and wage attachments. Procedures governing the implementation of wage assignments are provided to preserve attachment remedies and to make wage assignments more effective.

THE USED CAR DEALERS ACT, 1964

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for the registration, supervision and control of used car dealers and salesmen.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, I can do no better at this juncture than read the explanatory note attached to this bill:

The bill provides for the registration and control of used car dealers and salesmen and contains provisions for investigations similar to those now existing for mortgage brokers, collection agencies and real estate brokers.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, before we get into orders of the day I wonder if the hon.

Attorney General could advise us if all these bills will be going to committee. There is a lot of new and important legislation here and I think the committee should have a look at all of them.

Hon. Mr. Cass: I think they would all go to committee, Mr. Speaker, except perhaps The Police Act which might better be discussed in committee of the whole House.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to make a few remarks which are basically to allay the apprehension that seems to have arisen concerning the matter of drilling for gas or oil in Lake Huron and Lake St. Clair.

The government does not contemplate any change in the present prohibition of such drilling. Over the last three years we have had an established policy not to issue any licences or to permit any drilling and this policy continues in effect.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I beg the indulgence of the House to introduce to the hon. members a famous, if I may say so, resident and citizen of the province of Ontario, a man who has been a servant of the people in this Legislature and in the House of Commons and in the foreign service of our country. Of course, I am referring to the Honourable George Alexander Drew.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, there are a few men in the House who sat here during Mr. Drew's time, one of whom, of course, is the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver). I would just say that Mr. Drew sat in this Legislature from 1939 until 1948. During that time he led Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition from 1939 until 1943 and he was Prime Minister from 1943 until 1948. Thus he knows both sides of this chamber and this is something that is not known to some of us on this side.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not mean that in any facetious way. I sometimes think—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: But Mr. Drew entered the House of Commons in 1948 and was the leader of the Opposition there from 1949 to 1956. He became High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom in 1957 and from that last position he has just retired.

I think I can speak for all of us here when I say "Welcome", to him on his return to take up residence in Ontario again.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would of course like to join with the hon. Prime Minister in welcoming back to these familiar haunts, our friend the hon. Mr. Drew. The hon. Prime Minister has correctly stated that Mr. Drew had experience in this Legislature on both sides of the wide carpet. In the early days, he sat just about in the seat I sit in on this side of the House and he piloted the Opposition through very difficult times for it, in days when the numbers were small but their enthusiasm seemed to go beyond the actual numbers that it had in the House.

He finally defeated the government in 1943. I shall always think in my own mind that the cause of that defeat was as much a comedy of errors on our part as it was any capabilities that my hon. friend may have been endowed with. But once having assumed the office of Prime Minister, he moved over naturally to the other side of the House.

He was always a keen debater, a fervent debater, one who never pulled any punches and did not seem to mind too much how many were handed out in his direction.

I was thinking as I was sitting here that the techniques employed by the hon. Mr. Drew as Prime Minister and by my hon. friend are as far apart as the poles and history alone will record which technique will be the better. At the moment they look to be about on a par.

I would say to the hon. Mr. Drew that we welcome him back to this Chamber. We have the feeling in extending that welcome that he is but paying us a visit. It may not be that he intends to re-enter the active political arena. I think perhaps we would welcome his intrusion into the field at the present time if he so desired, but we welcome him today in any event as a visitor, one who has played a very large part in the deliberations of this assembly and in the government of the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present the second annual report of the Ontario Police Commission.

Mr. Speaker, with your leave, I am submitting to this House the report of the Ontario Police Commission on organized crime. The Ontario Police Commission is an independent body responsible to this Legislature through the Attorney General. The report has not been censored or altered in any way by any person but is presented in its entirety as submitted to me by the commission.

However, that is not to say that this government is not concerned about the disclosure of sources of information, and the names of individuals. The hon. members and others who have received copies of the report will recognize the great difficulty which would face the commission in making such a report without disclosing the sources of information and the names. Indeed, this may, in some opinions, be essential. It is our hope, therefore, that the responsible persons who have copies of this forthright report will recognize that harm and embarrassment might be caused by the injudicious publication of the whole or any part of the report. I most earnestly ask the co-operation of all in ensuring that this necessarily frank disclosure is not abused.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. Prime Minister, is this report going to be debated in the House; is it going to be put on the order paper in such a way that it will come up for debate at some future time?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I really have not given that much consideration. But it is a report to this Legislature, and if there is to be a debate on it, if it is considered there are things that need to be debated here, I will list it on the order paper as an item of business and we can carry out the debate in the way we have other reports.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly support the representations of the hon. leader of the Opposition that the tidiest way to deal with this would be a debate on it as an item on the order paper.

But, Mr. Speaker, I rose primarily to direct a question to the hon. Attorney General. I have not had a chance to glance through anything other than the index at this point but I am deeply puzzled as to what exactly he means when he says that he hopes that everybody who reads this will treat it with responsibility and judiciousness with regard to names in it. If copies of this have gone to the press, everybody is then going to become his own self-appointed censor. Surely anything in this report is available to anybody who wants to read it, and therefore, what is the significance of suggesting we should be judicious about using names that are in it?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the hon. member for York South could better answer himself after he has had the opportunity of perusing the contents of the report.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present the eighth annual report of the Ontario Water Resources Commission for 1963.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 41st order, the House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TOURISM AND INFORMATION

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Chairman, before going into the detailed plans and estimates of this department, I would like to take a moment to pay tribute to my predecessor in this office, Mr. Bryan Cathcart. Mr. Cathcart's retirement last August as a Minister of the Crown and as member for Lambton West marked the end of 18 years of service in this Legislature.

Both as a private member and as a Minister of the Crown, he worked long and diligently for his constituents and for the province of Ontario. It is largely through his efforts as Minister of Travel and Publicity for the past eight years that I am able today to present a report reflecting both past successes and the promise of an exciting future.

As I am sure you are aware, Mr. Chairman, Ontario has long been a pioneer in the field of travel in Canada. It was Ontario which first established a department to deal directly with the tourist industry, to encourage and promote travel within the province. Other jurisdictions watched our success in this field and one by one they followed suit. Through the years, this province gained an excellent reputation for its work with the tourist industry. Other provinces were able to emulate our successes while being able to avoid the pitfalls into which we, as the experimenter and pioneer, inevitably were led from time to time.

The tourist industry, as you well know, sir, is a highly competitive one. It is not enough simply to match your competitors. You must stay ahead of them if you intend to continue to increase your share of the truly tremendous benefits of the tourist industry. We in the department find that other jurisdictions, following in our footsteps have now in many cases caught up with the leader. If we stand still, we will be overtaken. We must move ahead at an accelerated rate.

In the seven months I have been Minister of this department, a great deal of time and effort has gone into assessing its role and determining what course of action must be taken for future years. There are two distinct possibilities. Firstly, aside from our work in the advertising and publicity fields, the department can continue to act only as a regulatory body; or secondly, it can provide a programme of positive leadership for the industry.

Let us study the first possibility, namely, that of functioning as a regulatory body. This, in essence, means the department would exist in a primarily negative function—following the leadership of the private operators and ensuring only that they meet certain minimum standards contained within the Acts administered by the department.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this approach is no longer anywhere near sufficient. If we are to meet the needs of the 1960s, a new outlook must be adopted. I think it is obvious that the travel industry of today is vastly changed from what it was 20, or even ten, years ago. We, sir, are faced with a great increase in the amount of leisure time available to people. This, of course, is coupled with the fact we have a rapidly expanding population, particularly in our urban areas.

These two factors, plus an increase in the amount of money available for spending on travel, have brought about a tremendous demand for recreational facilities. All of these factors—more people, with more money, and more time, demanding more facilities—are leading to what I think can be termed a crisis in recreation and travel. It is a crisis which can be solved only when this department meets the need for positive leadership in the tourist industry.

Perhaps I can underscore the size of this crisis if I take just a moment or two to tell you exactly what the tourist industry means to the province of Ontario. In past years, you have been accustomed to hearing that tourism was a $1-billion-dollar-a-year industry in Ontario. Those concerned frankly admitted this was really little more than an educated guess. Now, through the use of available statistics and our own research branch, we have arrived at what we believe to be a far more accurate figure.

We know that last year American and foreign spending on travel in Ontario totalled $350 million; and, incidentally, that is 60 per cent of the total of such tourist spending for all of Canada. This $350 million represents approximately 25 per cent of all tourist spending in Ontario. Another five per cent—or approximately $70 million—is spent by visitors from other provinces. The remaining 70 per cent—a total of $980 million—is spent by Ontario residents.

This, Mr. Chairman, means that total tourist spending in Ontario is $1.4 billion. To put it another way, $1,400 million. That, I think all hon. members will agree, is a lot of money. It means that the travel industry is as big, if not a bigger influence in the provincial economy than either agriculture or mining. I believe hon. members can see why I believe that what I have to say today merits the closest attention of all hon. members.

Why, then, if Ontario tourist spending totalled $1.4 billion, do I say there is a crisis in the industry? I say there is a crisis because we know the competition from other jurisdictions will get tougher. We know that this level of spending has been achieved as much by good luck as good planning, in the years we were feeling our way forward in a strange industry. We also know that while the amount of leisure money available to the people has grown immensely, the percentage of that money actually spent on travel has declined.

Here, I think, is proof that the tourist industry is not selling itself strongly enough. It simply is not meeting the challenge of competition with other industries in every sphere of the economy. Why? Because to a large extent there has been a lack of strong central leadership within the industry. This is precisely why the role of this department must change. We are now in a position to provide this positive leadership. And we intend to do so.

As was indicated in the Speech from the Throne, this Legislature has been asked to approve a change in name for this department. The decision to designate it The Department of Tourism and Information was taken to give added emphasis to the new scope and vitality of the department. The entire programme of reorganizing and strengthening this department was undertaken to provide it with the means to continue to assert its leadership in the tourist industry.

This reorganization, based on a study by the organizations and methods branch of The Department of the Provincial Treasurer is now virtually complete, Mr. Chairman. This was started just about a year ago. We are finishing up an overhaul of the work methods of the department and have instituted a self-help plan which will enable us to train, more fully, our own staff. In short, we are now ready to assume our new role, to launch a strong attack on the problems of the tourist industry, and to develop a programme of planning, co-ordination, education and promotion.

Basically speaking, the department's new outlook is contained in four broad areas: first, promotion and advertising; second, supplying of detailed information to individuals and counselling of tourists and potential tourists; third, planning, regulation and guidance; and fourth, research.

I would now like to take a few minutes, Mr. Chairman, to deal separately with our plans for each of these broad areas. The field of promotion and advertising is one probably most apparent to the general public. I would suggest it is one of the major keys of our new programme, in that it embraces not only promotion of the province's attractions but also the education of the public. And, without a public awareness of the vital need of Ontario for an expanding tourist industry, the rest of our programme would, of course, be futile.

In the field of advertising, we already have taken the important step of placing our planning on a 15-month basis. We hope in the near future to be able to extend this planning as far as two years in advance, leaving, of course, working room for day-to-day contingencies which may arise.

This long-range advertising planning, in addition to giving the department a chance to set an orderly pattern of development, will also give us an opportunity to co-operate even further with the private sector of the tourist industry.

We will be in a position, for instance, to supply these long-term plans to the regional councils and other bodies in the industry, so they can work with the department on a co-ordinated and efficient advertising campaign in the potential markets. This is a system which has been adopted successfully by other jurisdictions. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. members have noted, in particular, the impact that is generated for the state of Florida by the linking of its general advertising in newspapers and magazines with individual hotels and resorts.

We know a similar success will accrue to Ontario under this plan. Direct advertising has a great many benefits. But even greater returns, in terms of the expenditures involved, can come from the field of publicity.

Here, too, the reorganization of the department has opened the door for a concentrated new effort. In the past, because of a lack of efficient and qualified staff, we have been unable adequately to follow up the extremely good relations this department has had with the press and travel writers in Canada, the United States, and indeed, in Europe. With the expanded role of our publicity branch, the department now will be able to do much more in the way of stories, photographic coverage and general publicity.

In the allied field of tourist information and counselling, the department is adopting a vigorous new attitude. Already begun is a complete overhaul of our tourist publications. I firmly believe that the general aspects of tourist promotion are handled more than adequately by paid advertising and publicity, and that the publication of certain literature of a similar general nature is, to a great extent, duplication.

Our new policy has assigned the department's information branch what I might call the role of direct sales. In other words, the role of the branch's literature will be to provide specific information designed to meet the needs of individual tourists.

As one example of this, I would like to cite the publication, "Ski Scope" which I think is the finest publication of its nature in North America and is one of those in the group placed on hon. members' desks this afternoon. Much more emphasis is to be placed on the field of travel counselling. It is our plan to be able to provide detailed information and aid to anyone requiring it. This service will be, in effect, personalized to provide individual attention to individual problems.

The regulatory branch of the department, and the one responsible for overall planning assistance and co-ordination of many private sectors of the industry, is the tourist industry development branch. Its duties are far more extensive than simply enforcing the provisions of the Acts concerning this department's activities. We have, in conjunction with the civil service commission, undertaken a programme to increase the already high standards of our field workers in this branch, in line with a shift in the emphasis of their work, placing more stress on the duties of counselling, educating and promoting.

By no means does this mean that we will not insist on high standards for tourist facilities in the province. But I am convinced that the best way to ensure these standards is not to act as policemen, but to produce concrete evidence that a good operator can get a better return on his investment than a poor operator.

Another important aspect of this branch's operations is connected with regional tourist councils—a field which I may say, Mr. Chairman, is one in which a great deal of work yet remains to be done. As the hon. members know, this department previously has adopted a programme of providing grants to regional tourist councils to assist them in advertising, promotion and development programmes. The thinking behind this is simple and sound. We feel that it is the department's duty to promote Ontario as a whole, and that the various regions are best equipped to develop and promote the attractions of their own immediate areas. Last year, 22 such grants were given out—that is 22 of a potential of 31—but a disappointingly few of the areas qualified for the full amount of the grants.

We feel this is partially due to the inability of the regional councils to obtain clerical or administrative services to assist in promoting activities within the region. We realize such services are necessary and a change has been made in the legislation so that a portion of the grants will be payable to a maximum of $500 for such administrative costs.

One of our major achievements in the past year has been the establishment of a travel research branch in the department, the first of its kind in any jurisdiction in Canada. We are proud that Ontario has once again led the way. Reduced to the simplest terms, the duties of this branch will be to discover the exact nature of the tourist market, to find means of exploiting this market through new programmes, and to measure the success of these programmes after they have been instituted. It will take the guesswork out of our planning and allow us to present a fully co-ordinated plan of leadership to the industry.

We plan to tackle the immense problems resulting from the lack of consistent statistical data in many phases of the tourist industry. This year we will be undertaking revised community and regional studies in Atikokan, Elliot Lake and the Muskoka region. We will conduct inventories to determine what we have in the way of recreational and tourist resources and what should be done to further develop them.

We plan to survey our convention facilities and be in a position to supply information to the tourist and convention operators and to our municipalities, and to organizations and individuals who are involved in convention planning. Working in co-operation with a proposed advisory body of tourist operators, tourist association executives and other tourist experts, we are going to investigate the possibility of collecting information directly from the operators themselves. We are planning to introduce a pilot survey of domestic travel patterns in Metro Toronto in 1964 to give us the first information we have had on travel patterns and expenditures. If this survey is successful, I hope to come back and ask for additional funds to carry out an Ontario travel survey in the future.

Just before leaving the subject of research, I would like to say that we in the department have been disappointed at the lack of action at the federal level in this field. We feel that if we hope to have a successful centennial year, we must have the information now or in the immediate future, not in 1967.

I have just mentioned the year 1967 for a very special reason. We feel that 1967 is a natural target year for all our present planning. Not only will the World's Fair at Montreal attract tens of thousands of people from the U.S. and overseas, but Canadians themselves will have the added stimulus of the centenary year to encourage them to travel about Canada. Thus, inter-provincial travel must become an even more important part of our planning. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, already senior officials of the department and I have met with my counterpart in Quebec and his senior officials under the auspices of the tourist industry committee of the Ontario Economic Council. A conference on tourist communications was held in Quebec City. Participating, in addition to officials of these departments, were executives from the communications media of both Ontario and Quebec. In addition, I am looking forward to meeting officials in other parts of Canada, particularly Manitoba.

It may be of interest, Mr. Chairman, to note that the Canadian Tourist Association also plans to do a significant amount of work in this field in the coming years. I have discussed this matter with the president of that organization and I again state here in this House that my department will co-operate to the fullest to do everything possible to stimulate interprovincial tourism.

As a first step in this programme, the department already has begun publication of some of its literature in the French language to better acquaint the large French-speaking audience of Quebec with our attractions. We are also working in certain other languages in conjunction with the ethnic press.

Recently, in an article in the Indianapolis Star, the writer described a motor vacation trip through Ontario last summer. Of great surprise to him were the opinions of several motel operators who told him that a large part of Ontario's domestic travel boom was created by the thousands of new Canadians who have located in our province. This came as no surprise to the people of my department, sir. We have long known that these new residents, consumed with a desire to see more of our huge and magnificent province—the province in which they have chosen to live—have contributed greatly to the tourist industry of Ontario.

In past years, as hon. members are aware, this department has carried out, as best it could within its financial limits, a policy of advertising in the ethnic newspapers of Ontario. This year, we decided on a general expansion of this programme.

Again, working in co-operation with the tourist industry committee, meetings were held with editors of the ethnic press. So successful were these meetings that the editors asked for—and, of course, received—permission to set up among themselves a committee to advise the department on ways and means of stimulating travel among their readers. Through this programme we hope also to be able to attract many more travellers from Europe and the U.S. Here, once again, a programme is under way to print some of our publications in the various languages to provide information both to these new Canadians and to residents and friends of other lands.

In describing the new duties and plans of this department, a short while ago, I deliberately omitted one extremely important branch—the historical branch. I did so because I wanted to emphasize quite separately, the very large part it has to play in the development of the Ontario tourist industry.

Since becoming Minister of this department, I have constantly stressed the importance of developing special local attractions, then publicizing them to the utmost. One reason for doing so has been the knowledge, gained from our research, that the second greatest tourist lure in Ontario is that of our historic attractions. At a later point in the presentation of these estimates, hon. members will hear from the vice-chairman of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission, about the highly successful year again enjoyed at Upper Canada Village, Fort Henry and the commission parks and campsites. I am certain this situation holds true at the many other fine historical sites throughout Ontario.

This afternoon, Mr. Chairman, this House will be asked to approve the spending of $100,000 to launch a new project which I feel will be one of the finest historical restoration programmes in the history of this province. This summer, working in conjunction with the University of Western Ontario, we will commence the reconstruction of Fort Ste. Marie, near Midland, the first European settlement west of what is now Quebec City. Since the early 1940s, archaeological investigations of the site have been carried out by Mr. Kenneth Kidd of the Royal Ontario Museum and Dr. Wilfrid Jury of the University of Western Ontario.

From the extensive evidence uncovered by this work, as well as from the many references in contemporary Jesuit accounts, an accurate reconstruction can now be carried out. Visitors will then have visual evidence of one of the most significant historic sites in North America. Ste. Marie I is the first step of what is to be known as the Huronia project, Mr. Chairman.

When completed, this project will include the naval and military establishments at Penetanguishene, the museum at the site of the island where the schooner "Nancy" was sunk in the mouth of the Nottawasaga River in 1814, and other projects still being studied.

It is hoped that the Ste. Marie I project, which is estimated to cost just a shade over $1 million, will be completed by 1967. However, I would like to stress here that it is a separate project, and is not connected directly with this province's centenary programme. I do not think I need stress at this time the historical importance of Ste. Marie I. As headquarters for the Jesuit mission in what is now Ontario, it existed in the years 1639 to 1649 as the furthest outpost of European civilization in North America at that time.

Before leaving this topic, I would like to pay a brief tribute to the members of the Ontario Archaeological and Historic Sites Board, which reports to my department. Recently the chairman of this board, the highly respected Mr. William Cranston, was named as chairman of the Ontario Economic Council. Happily for us and for the board, he decided not to sever his connection with the board and has agreed to stay on as co-chairman, sharing the heavy work load with Professor Maurice Careless of the University of Toronto. Under their joint leadership, the board will carry on its studies and programmes, one of which already has seen the erection of 349 historical site markers at major points of historical interest throughout Ontario.

Indeed, last November, the first such marker to be placed outside Ontario was unveiled at Wolford Chapel in Devon, England, marking the final resting place of John Graves Simcoe, first Lieutenant-Governor of Upper Canada.

During the coming year, our provincial archives will place an increased emphasis on solving the problems connected with the disposal of the non-current, or seldom used, records of government agencies. A detailed inventory of each department's record holdings will be started, and plans again made for an improved programme of records management.

This programme is designed to prevent expensive operational space from being occupied by dormant records, at the same time ensuring that those of historical and administrative value are permanently preserved. The possibility of erecting or acquiring a central records depository will be considered. Seldom used but still essential records could be stored there without occupying primary space. At the same time, records possessing no further administrative use could be examined for historical significance, then either destroyed or transferred to the archives proper.

I should also like to mention briefly the work of our theatres branch. Throughout the years, the inspectors of this branch have worked quietly and efficiently to improve and maintain the standards of motion picture theatres throughout the province. The results of their work can be seen in the many fine new cinemas opened recently.

I should also like to pay tribute to the branch's board of film censors. Censorship will never be a popular necessity, but I do not think you will find another board of censors anywhere which shows the taste and discretion of that of the province of Ontario.

Twice this afternoon, I have mentioned projects undertaken by this department in co-operation with the tourist industry committee of the Ontario Economic Council. As I believe is well known, this committee travelled extensively throughout Ontario studying every facet of the tourist industry. To date, I have received several most helpful preliminary reports from this committee and some of these suggestions already have become department policy. Recently I was informed by the committee chairman, Mr. Cranston, that the final report is being prepared.

I am looking forward, sir, to what I am certain will be a comprehensive, enlightening and helpful study of the industry.

It is impossible in this short space of time to cover all details of the plans and programmes of this department. I felt, however, that rather than listen to a recital of facts and figures on what already has happened, the hon. members of this House would prefer to hear what we are planning and are determined to do in the immediate future.

To summarize, I would like to say that our immediate objectives are: One—to provide strong leadership to the tourist industry of Ontario and to reassert this province's leadership in that field; two—to launch a major public educational programme at every conceivable level; three—to work in close liaison with other departments in the whole field of recreation and development; four—to develop and operate a departmental structure designed to give assistance to the private sector of the industry; five—to establish concrete objectives and goals as targets for the industry as a whole. The latter, the establishment of solid aims and objectives, is particularly important.

Recently a U.S. survey showed that the rate of growth of travel during the past six years in the U.S. has approximated seven per cent per year. If this rate continues, and it is at this rate in Ontario, it will mean that travel for all purposes will double every ten years.

I would suggest, sir, that this more than anything demonstrates the remarkable growth potential in Canada and, in particular, in Ontario. There is absolutely no reason to doubt that the same type of growth has taken place in Canada as in the United States. In fact, I believe that the rate of growth experienced by Canadians has exceeded that of our friends in the United States.

Faced by this really fantastic potential, I believe we in Ontario must set a goal for ourselves in terms of tourist spending. We know that last year this totalled $1.4 billion. I would now like to suggest, sir, that we look to the target year of 1967 and to a projected revenue of $750 million from foreign and interprovincial tourism alone. Because we know that this represents approximately one quarter of total tourist spending, our overall goal in 1967 should be $3 billion, in total direct tourist expenditures.

I have no doubt that, through the concerted efforts of my department and the co-operation of the people of Ontario, the figure will be achieved, and possibly even surpassed.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that through these few remarks I have been able to give a clearer picture of the importance of the travel industry to the economy of Ontario, and some idea of our plans for the forthcoming years. It is vital that we, as the government of Ontario, do everything in our power to provide a cohesive leadership to this industry so that it might achieve its vast potential.

In closing, sir, I would like to thank the hon. members of this House for their patience and attention in the presentation of this report. And I trust that I shall have the support of all the hon. members in voting for the sums requested.

On vote 2101:

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in the debate on the estimates of The Department of Tourism and Information, I would first of all like to compliment the hon. Minister on his forthright approach to many of the problems which have beset this industry during his short tenure of office. I was most interested in hearing his verbal report today.

I am sure that his new approach, and the new approach of his department, are being made in the awareness that we must improve our tourist facilities; and our efforts must be intensified to direct people to our fair province.

Certainly it is my duty and the duty of the Opposition, to criticize aspects of the programmes which have gone on and are unsatisfactory; and many of the programmes for tourist development which are currently under way and need improvement. However, I do not wish these criticisms to be interpreted as a criticism of the new hon. Minister of this department—I refer to the cliché of the House. In due course of time, and in the fullness thereof, I am sure that he will come under personal criticism as to the manner in which he operates his department.

In my presentation on this department, I shall try generally to cover as many areas as possible directly concerned with the tourist industry. But I shall leave out any references to the role that this department plays as censor to the movies which are shown in our Ontario theatres.

The Department of Tourism and Information is intrinsically bound to several departments of our government—Lands and Forests, Highways, Economics, Health, Water Resources, plus various commissions and associations and authorities. And all the related efforts of these departments must be channelled into a broad programme if our tourist industry is going to continue to develop.

I shall try to develop my speech in context to this relationship with each succeeding department, as well as to those areas that are exclusively under the jurisdiction of this department. Today our visitor industry is described as a $1.5 billion industry and is one of the largest earners of foreign currency for both our province and country. Thus a continued expansion of this industry is vital to the economic stability and growth of our province. It is for this reason we, as responsible citizens of our province, must lend our every effort to aid in this development.

I would like to refer briefly to a phrase attributed, I believe to Mr. T. C. Clarke, who is now the director of the development branch of this department and I quote:

There are moments when I wonder whether any other industry of this magnitude could survive, much less prosper with so casual an outlook.

Today the hon. Minister mentioned good luck. I think that has played a part in our development also.

Certainly our province is confronted with much direct competition from all parts of the world—travel now, pay later to any country of the world. All these foreign countries, too, are looking for and attracting visitors, not only from us but from our major market, the United States.

I was very pleased when this government set up in 1962 the tourist industry committee through the economic council, to delve into this problem of how to help this floundering industry in our province. I had the privilege of helping draft three presentations to this committee and I would like to compliment the government on the selection of personnel to this committee. I believe one of the gentlemen was named today. I would hope that under the direction of our new hon. Minister, many of the recommendations of this committee will be put into practice, as he has suggested. And this is the first step in renewing the vigour of our tourist industry.

Returning to the economic aspects of this industry, I understand it returns approximately 15 cents from every earned dollar back to our government, and is certainly one department of our government that exceeds all others in net return to the economy, compared to money spent on the department. Even if all the money spent in tourist promotion by individuals and communities throughout our province were added to this total, we would still have a very healthy balance sheet.

During the past years, our border areas have developed as natural resort areas—or bedding areas as they are called—and have attracted countless visitors and summer residents. But many of these areas, through the passing of time, are now run down, and no longer offer the kind or type of accommodation that many of our visitors now desire. Possibly this still holds true in Muskoka and Haliburton areas, where the natural beauty, the natural facilities, have been attracting tourists. But as new areas in our province are being opened up, with modern facilities being erected, the areas that originally developed our province's tourist industry are being bypassed and are getting into poor economic shape.

I have pointed out the excellent return that this industry has made to the economy of our province. But we cannot afford just to open up new areas of development in the north, with which I am in full agreement. We must make every effort to extend our tourist season by creating or improving our visitor and convention facilities within a few hours' drive of our southern borders. Extending our season is the least expensive way of increasing our dollar volume in the tourist industry, as it requires very little additional capital.

I am sure that if you in this House had read accounts of the submissions to the tourist industry committee, you would have noted that there are very few resort hotels with planned programmes for the activities of guests along the southern borders of our province. I would call upon this government to help save these areas which have developed our tourist industry, by extending through some agency of the provincial government, great amounts of credit for the redevelopment of this accommodation industry in these blighted areas, and for the development of this industry as a whole throughout our province.

In the words of the submission to the economic council on tourism by the southwestern chambers of commerce:

We must provide the attractions or harness existing ones so that they will appeal to the tourists.

There certainly is very little point in spending large amounts of advertising on "Visit Ontario" if we do not first provide proper accommodation, and second, provide the attractions and amusements the visitors wish.

Now the former Minister of the department, on page 575 of last year's Hansard, stated that it was the job of this department only to promote Ontario, not to build establishments. Certainly, I agree that the province should not enter into direct competition with private enterprise in this field. However, the province does have a responsibility to develop attractions of historic and general interest in various parts of our province, as I was pleased to hear the new hon. Minister mention today.

I would hope that these things would be done, keeping in mind that our own people should visit all parts of our own province and that traffic patterns will flow in all directions and not just northward as is the case on most summer weekends.

I realize that the department has no accurate track of the number of visitors coming from other provinces or from the United States, visiting by way of neighbouring provinces, but certainly this travelling and the travelling within our own province is worth stimulating, as the hon. Minister stated earlier today. It is only by creating major attractions in all parts of our province that this will come about. We must endeavour to hold these visitors to our province in any given area, just a little longer, and thus add to the gross tourist revenue.

It is essential that people going into this industry are well trained in understanding what are the needs of the tourists, and then go ahead and plan with sufficient financial backing. I think this aspect is most important, along with providing a wide variety of attractions and services with alternatives that meet every desire, especially as our people seek wider diversion, with greater selectivity, during our lives of increasing leisure.

This, I charge, is the responsibility of this province: to increase the numbers of pupils attending our courses in hotel and restaurant management and cooking schools, to help develop an atmosphere in each area of our province that is contiguous to the immediate area, and most important, to create an agency, whereby those qualified to expand this development in our province, can borrow the money to create these attractions and facilities.

Turning from this broad aspect of economic development of our tourist industry, I would just briefly like to reiterate comments that have been heard from time to time from various officials, and earlier this year were made by the hon. Minister of this department. I, too, have made such statements and I think they all agree that they only apply to a small segment of this tourist industry. The statement is:

Operators of tourist establishments are not outside international rates of exchange. Do not overcharge our visitors and be sure to give them the exchange on their money. The difference in the rate of exchange is one of our main attractions to visitors at this time.

There is simply one point about overcharging that I would like to make again, and again this possibly applies to only a small segment of the industry. Often hotel and motels will adjust room rates, within a matter of minutes, to levels of whatever the traffic will bear.

This does not encourage visitors to return to these establishments. In this province we do have an Innkeepers Act, a Licensing Act, and I would recommend to this government that amendments should be made to the Act—so that in every hotel and motel room rates for that room will be listed—whether they show different rates for in season and off season, but so long as they are posted. In this manner, our visitors will not be gouged by unreasonably high rates on holiday weekends or during the summer period; and at the same time, our hotels and motels will be less likely to have price wars during the off season.

Printed rates for the various seasons of the year, related to the services offered, and accommodation by our hotels and motels, will win stability for this section of our visitors' industry.

I would just like to take a moment to read an item from the Toronto Daily Star of the first part of this year. It is entitled:

TOURISTS NOT FOR FLEEING

Earlier in this century if American summer visitors came up here to look at us, fish our waters and rent our cottages, we put them up somehow, took their money and thought it rather funny they bothered to come for something we thought was very ordinary. Well, times have changed. Canadian revenue from tourists last year amounted to $600 million.

We want tourists, yet now our lake waters are becoming polluted and unattractive. The fish are scarce. Going to Canada is no longer an adventure to Americans, who can just as readily take off for Morocco or Fiji.

Our want of tourists is not matched by our willingness to provide well for their wants. In too many cases we still act like louts or cheats towards them.

Accommodation and service have improved but much that we still offer is tawdry by good European and American standards. Food in some resort areas can be unbelievably junky. Their restaurants are insipid copy-cats of American, with their Kentucky fried chicken, New England clam chowder and Idaho potatoes.

This weekend, James Auld, Ontario Minister of Travel and Publicity, bravely chided hotel and motel operators about some bumpkin practices, for instance, short-changing Americans on the exchange rate; juggling room rates daily as high as the road traffic will bear. That sort of thing should cease and high standards of accommodation, cleanliness and service should be imposed through licensing of all who cater to tourists.

A deeper problem is facing the industry. The pollution of lakes and rivers by motor oils from boats, rubbish from cottages, septic tanks or lack of them, and of course through increasing population. From the Rideau system, through the Kawartha to Muskoka, this has become a serious defect.

Fish cannot survive in gasoline and people do not want to swim through scum. It is a problem the new Department of Energy and Resources Management should tackle with energy and sound regulation.

Turning briefly to another aspect of tourism, there is the matter of highways and the roles they play in the development of this industry. I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) is not present.

Certainly we all agree that we want broad, first-class highways leading to our existing and potential tourist areas. However, there is one serious aspect of these new super-highways which again must be drawn to the attention of this government. This is the fact that these new roads are now bypassing any of the previously developed tourist areas of this province.

I had previously mentioned the economic problems. However, our highways department can help alleviate this condition through a proper signing programme of both major and secondary roads in our province. There are indications that this programme is being started in areas of our province, and I would hope that this trend will continue to all parts of our province.

Along Highway 401, assisted by the fuel companies operating service centres, the government in co-operation with regional tourist councils, with which I will deal shortly, has attempted to provide a programme of tourist information centres to direct travellers, not only to other parts of our province, but more directly into the immediate areas of these service centres. Possibly it is unfair to criticize at this time the success, or more truly the lack of success, of this programme to date, as it was in operation for only a short period of time last year.

However, this has placed a great financial burden on the participating regional tourist councils of the province, a burden which possibly should have been shouldered by the province itself. The philosophy of this programme is excellent, not only to direct our visitors to other parts of the province, but to get the visiting traffic off the highways into the adjacent areas and thus hold these visitors longer in our province.

However, I will be very surprised if, in the practical application of this programme, it is successful, either from this standpoint or from an economic viewpoint. I will watch with great interest, next summer, the activities and success of these facilities.

Worthy, too, of mention in the area of highways, is the suggested programme of naming our scenic and historic routes rather than merely calling them by number. I believe this was suggested in the House last year by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon).

As a further thought in developing our tourist industry, I would like to draw to the attention of this House, a system of signing which is used on the turnpikes to the south of us where, at their interchanges for communities, they indicate the total number of rooms of accommodation available in the area. Possibly this is a worthwhile suggestion, and these facts could be incorporated on a trial basis on the strip maps of Highway 401 and its numbered interchanges.

In mentioning highway strip maps, these same maps could apply to the variously named scenic and historic routes. I was most impressed by these strip maps in the province of New Brunswick and found them most useful and interesting. They not only indicated the mileage between the communities but they also show the points of interest and scenic importance, and gave a concisely written description. I would hope that this department would give this suggestion some consideration in the near future.

I would now like to turn briefly to The Department of Lands and Forests and point out some of its functions in relation to our tourist industry. Certainly we are all aware that if it were not for lakes, forests, rivers and the natural beauty of our province, and the wonderful hunting and fishing that we enjoy, in all probability we would not have a tourist industry. There are several areas in respect to Lands and Forests about which I would like to deal.

First is the problem regarding provincial parks, and I would like to state that these are major attractions to our province. Many operators feel they have gone into direct subsidized competition with private enterprise, especially in relation to camping facilities. Possibly this is true in some instances, and this department should keep in mind to guard against this. In the broad outlook, the parks have done much to foster the tourist industry.

There is also the problem of commercialization at the entrance of these parks, and I would hope that in the future the kind and content of these establishments can be controlled by proper zoning regulations in order that the scenic beauty of these parks is not spoiled.

Further to the comments which were indicated in the committee meeting yesterday, regarding zoning in the opening up of new lakes in our province, and having designated commercial and resort areas, I think this is very worthwhile.

Coming from the most southerly part of this province, I have often felt like criticizing The Department of Lands and Forests for obtaining countless acres in the north for provincial parks and none or very few in the southern part of our province. We, in the southern parts of the province, located within a few hours' drive of the great bulk of the population of both Ontario and the United States, have long been crying for more provincial parks to help stimulate our decaying tourist industry. Indications are now present that this government is at long last heeding these requests and that no longer will our shorelines be bought up by individuals squeezing out the general public. This southern area is the area where provincial parks can be most successful financially to the government, and of practical leisure-time benefit to the great masses of our own population and as a stimulus to the visitor industry of these areas. More provincial parks in southern Ontario could aid in the tremendous stimulation of the tourist industry of this province.

The second area in which The Department of Lands and Forests is involved, as well as The Department of Public Works, in relation to The Department of Tourism and Information, is in the area of development of small craft harbours or marinas in our province. I am aware of the survey of existing and potential marina installation sites that The Department of Lands and Forests conducted this past year and the limited amount of work that is carried out by the provincial Department of Public Works. I would like to point out to this House that we have been missing a large portion of this segment of the tourist business in this province because of our inadequate and infrequent marina facilities.

At one time in the Lake Huron area we were the leaders in this field. In the area of Ohio from Cleveland all along the lakeshore and rivers to Port Huron, Michigan, is the second largest concentration of power boats in the world. These craft are only a few hours' cruising time from many points in Ontario and many of the owners are looking for new ports of call and facilities for extended visits. I would suggest to this government that if we are to capture these marine visitors to our province we must provide the marinas, dockage, parks, and overnight facilities at strategic locations along the shores of our Great Lakes and in our other waterways and lakes within the province.

I would further suggest that this development could be financed at nominal cost to this government by the retention of taxes now being rebated to users of marine fuels. I believe that this system has been used in the state of Michigan and other jurisdictions, and the funds so provided have accounted for the rapid development of their many fine marina installations. The influx of these marine visitors to our province would be a new group of visitors that we have hardly received in the past and a new and greater source of tourist revenue for our province.

The third area of The Department of Lands and Forests with which I would like to deal in relationship to our tourist industry, is in the matter of regulations concerning hunting and fishing in our province. As mentioned previously, the fine hunting and fishing in our province is a prime factor in the development of the tourist industry of our province. However, with the urban sprawl, pollution of the lakes and rivers, and removal of undercover and marsh lands, especially in southern Ontario, fishing in the lakes and streams has become poor and our waters have become too polluted even for safe bathing in many areas, and our natural game has disappeared. Certainly pollution of our waters is a major deterrent to keeping or redeveloping our tourist industry in many parts of our province. I only hope that the work that our water resources commission has undertaken will be completed quickly and effectively.

In regard to hunting in our province, which could be a fantastic aid to the tourist industry by extending our season well into the fall—if only we had sufficient game for our own hunters as well as for visitors—a new programme of strict predator control would be one of the greatest assets to our visitor industry. Is it not economic sense for us to eliminate predators to our game as much as possible? Let this game flourish and increase and then sell our own hunters and many visitors licences to hunt off this abundance of game and get back to the natural balance. This type of programme is very aptly pointed out in the small state of Michigan. There, because I believe there are no wolves, more deer are shot in a few counties in one season than in the whole of this great province of Ontario. These hunters are part and parcel of the tourist industry of our province.

The same situation holds true in regard to game birds in our southern counties. Hunting for geese, ducks and pheasants once drew thousands of visitors to this area to the economic benefit of the farmer, the merchant and the whole area. Planned predator control and the redevelopment of woodlots and marshes must be undertaken if this segment of our tourist industry is to be retained. The Department of Lands and Forests plays a very important role in relation to The Department of Tourism and Information.

Two last suggestions in this area of my thoughts. I would hope that this department would include promotion of our several national parks as a supplement to the promotion of our own provincial parks. One final comment is in regard to the announcement earlier this session that The Department of Tourism and Information is opening offices in several key locations in the United States, which locations I believe are mostly more than one day's travel from our borders. I would suggest that these offices be equipped with non-resident hunting and fishing licences, as a form of insurance that these people will come on to Ontario and not be lured by attractive areas in their own country.

Certainly I expect some of our licence issuers will object to this proposal but I do feel that many visitors do wish almost a package deal. They do not want to chase around for hours on end during their visit to our province trying to buy a fishing or hunting licence. This fact I can document as I can show you an advertisement in a United States telephone directory advertising Ontario fishing and hunting licences. I arranged and purchased one of these through an American source this year.

I would suggest that a policy of issuing these licences be tried at these new Ontario government travel offices in these cities that are located more than a day's drive from our border, and just see what the results would be in encouraging more visitors to our province.

One last department that plays a very important role in the development and the retention of our tourist industry is our Department of Health. Previously I have mentioned the fact of pollution of our waters, which is an aspect of the health of our people and that of our visitors. But there is one overriding health factor which must be taken into consideration in our overall programme of development of the tourist industry. We must improve our standards for serving our visitors, especially in the cleanliness of our food and accommodation and service station facilities.

The Department of Tourism does have inspectors visiting hotels, motels, parks and campsites. The Department of Labour inspectors call on certain restaurants and service stations on behalf of the staffs. The industrial hygiene branch, which handles public health administration of The Department of Health, crisscrosses some of these same facilities.

In some areas, county or local health units do an effective job of inspection, but in many cases the conditions under which food is prepared and served and the condition of washrooms in both restaurants and service centres are of such a nature that I am sure that farmers would be loath to keep pigs in them. Fortunately these places are a small minority, but they are the places which give our whole province a poor image. Cleanliness in our public places is the least expensive and best advertisement our restaurants and service centres can have. I am certain that our travelling public seek and want service centres and restaurants, sir, which provide clean and sanitary facilities. I am sure, too, that the promotion of our province would be much simpler if the standards of these facilities were raised.

I would suggest that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) and the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity sit down together and discuss this problem, and give some study to the possibility of establishing licence grades for establishments based on the sanitary facilities of their kitchens and rest rooms. This system is employed in North Carolina and other jurisdictions; as a traveller, I have appreciated seeing these licences at the entrances to the various establishments so that I could determine at a glance what the facilities were in these strange establishments.

I would point out that I have stated nothing concerning the licensing in regard to the quality of food or the type of service, only the sanitary condition of the premises. Our best advertising in this province is to have clean facilities, to make our communities attractive, and to impress upon our visitors that they are welcome—and thus leave with them the desire to return another time.

In last year's Hansard on page 648, the then Minister of this department, Mr. Bryan Cathcart, pointed out that this department does require the full co-operation of other departments in this government. I hope I have brought forth this fact to the attention of the new hon. Minister, to the Ministers of other departments involved, and to the House as a whole.

However, before summing up my thoughts, there are a few areas within the jurisdiction of this department which should be criticized and offered suggestions. One is in regard to the programme for historic sites and museums. I feel, as do many other interested citizens, that this department does not go far enough, possibly because of lack of funds. Although certain historic sites are recognized by plaques, there should be an operative programme developed at these sites as quickly as possible. We cannot hold visitors in our province simply by erecting one of our very excellent historic sites' markers; but where possible, if buildings are still in existence, we should utilize them as museums or craft shops and have conducted tours. One has only to drive to Virginia, and any of the other jurisdictions in the United States, to see this type of programme being practised.

As the hon. Minister pointed out, the second most common reason why people travel is because of historic interest. Ontario abounds in history, and if we could develop these sites into an interesting and informative programme we could extend the duration of our tourist season and again attract a large new group of visitors to our province.

Many of our historic buildings have fallen into disrepair. Others have been torn down to make way for modern construction. I would call upon this department of the provincial government to initiate a programme to acquire these buildings and operate them as provincial historic sites.

One other area within the jurisdiction of this department which I feel deserves some criticism is that of the programme of regional tourist councils which was developed by an amendment to the Act in 1961. I could spend a great deal of the time of this House discussing the weaknesses of this programme of matching grants to regional tourist councils, but I shall take only a few moments to point out the most glaring faults of this programme as I see them.

First, in the matter of designated regions; several areas in our province, notably Norfolk county, Essex county, Muskoka and Haliburton areas, and others which have long been in the tourist promotion business, were entreated to take in larger areas in order that they could receive the $5,000 grant annually from the province, under certain stipulations. I would point this out specifically in the matter of Essex county, which has conducted a programme of tourist promotion for over 25 years, spending well over $150,000 in this period of time. Essex county, in order to qualify, had to join with Kent county, which never has had a county programme of tourist promotion. This area, as were other areas, was designated by the hon. Minister, through his powers, but I ask: What did he do in his own riding? He created a tourist area for the city of Sarnia and the county of Lambton alone. Most other areas of the province had to accept three or four counties to make up a regional tourist council, of which there are approximately 30 in this province. This spreads the $5,000 very thin.

The method of financing these organizations is one of the greatest juggling acts ever seen in this province—and I hate to use the word, but I think there has been more falsification of spending and raising monies to qualify for these grants than most of us can comprehend.

I would ask the hon. Minister: How many of these regional councils were able to qualify for the full grant on April 1, 1963, and how many have qualified to date this year? I would ask: How many of these councils are functioning effectively, especially in areas which did not have a previous active organization?

One other factor which deserves criticism is the lack of advance planning for programmes for these councils. Some councils took what I consider the right approach to carefully determine a plan for the development of attractions for their own regions, and spend their fund wisely on these projects. Other areas simply blew their initial $5,000 grants in printing brochures on their areas with little effort to develop attractions, and with little or no thought as to the distribution of these folders.

The department approved these expenditures, but I feel they should have given concrete suggestions in leadership as to how this money should have been spent. I would suggest that The Department of Tourism and Publicity re-examine this programme very carefully, and set up standards of procedure so that our taxpayers' money is not just handed out indiscriminately.

Certainly I am in agreement with regional planning and thinking; for in any given area we have individual businesses and local tourist committees promoting their own interests, and we have county groups working for their immediate area. Then, overriding these, between the county groups and the department, are the regional groups. But I would ask the hon. Minister of this department: Are the regional tourist groups the major authority below his department in tourist promotion, or are the regional development associations going to usurp these powers and create another overriding body involved in tourist promotion?

These regional development associations comprise areas almost similar to those of region tourist councils which are in line to receive grants up to $15,000 annually. I would like to quote from the latest edition of the Co-ordinator, the publication of the Regional Development Association: I will read briefly as follows: The item is titled:

TOURISM

Now is the time of year to start working on your next year's tourist literature. With this in mind we pass on a few ideas and queries given us for regional tourist promotion.

I hope that is just complementing the programme and not going to take over.

I would again ask the hon. Minister: Just which is the authoritative body in tourist promotion? My personal opinion is that these regional development agencies are bureaucracies seeking activities in every field in order to preserve their own existence. The original or avowed purpose of these was to encourage industry on a regional basis. This failed. Now, among other activities, they are butting into the tourist field. I would like the record set straight.

We cannot have duplication of programmes, and duplication of spending of public funds. I do hope that will be discussed further in The Department of Economics and Development.

In conclusion to my remarks I would like to restate remarks made by a new Minister. There is no such thing as automatic spending in the tourist industry. In this province we must have fair goals or objectives based on sound economic lines if our tourist industry is to survive and expand.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I would first like to congratulate the hon. Minister on the new position he has. I do notice though, by the estimates, that apart from the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission, he is going to have very little more money to spend than the former Minister had. If we are going to build the tourist industry in Ontario the way we feel that it must be built, I do not think that the department with all its discussions—I noticed the other day down in committee it was showing us all the new plans and what it is going to do—is going to be able to do that on less than $3 million, and this estimate here today is certainly less than $3 million. If it is really going to do the job that has to be done, it has got to have enough money there to do it.

Maybe the truest words that the hon. Minister spoke today were when he said, in talking about the tourist industry, that it was more good luck than good management, and I feel rightly so.

When we discuss the tourist industry of Ontario, generally we think of northern Ontario. This is where we feel that tourism is. But I would like to take a look at some of the other items in the tourist industry; I have some new proposals here at which I hope the hon. Minister will look, bearing in mind that I do not think the department should go into the tourist industry as far as building cottages and motels. But I do feel it has a real promotion job to do to put this type of accommodation where it is needed for the travelling public.

I would like to take a serious look at where the travelling public is in Ontario. We will discover it is in one area and that is the "golden horseshoe". Let us just take a look at the "golden horseshoe", as far as recreation is concerned. We start at Oshawa and go right around to the Falls, and the first place that we get any type of recreation is when we get to Niagara Falls. I can remember, going back 20 or 30 years ago, when we used to take a trip to the Falls. We used to go along the old Lakeshore Road, we would take old No. 8 highway down to Niagara Falls, and this was a scenic route at that time and you enjoyed that trip. We don't have that type of trip any more. If one goes along the old Lakeshore Road now there is nothing but potholes; take No. 8 highway down to the Falls, again there is nothing but potholes.

I was interested, Mr. Chairman, when the hon. Minister of Highways, the other day, said they were going to try to save an area down in eastern Ontario as a scenic route. This is one of the main things that we have to try to do in this part of Ontario—try to save some of the scenic routes that we had in the past. The travelling public today, travels Highway 401, and it is not a scenic route of any type no matter where you go along it until you get near the Quebec border.

I am wondering if the hon. Minister would take a serious look at going back to some of the things that were done in the past—and that is spelling out the scenic routes that we have along Highway 401. I am not thinking of the literature that has been put out, but I am thinking of nice, up-to-date little signs on the highways so that the people driving along will be able to see them, and will know there are certain places where they can pull off and take trips. I am thinking of things like the Caledon Hills—20 or 30 miles off that highway, where they could spend the day and see some of southern Ontario. The average person driving through now really does not realize there is any scenic area in southern Ontario because his main job is to go through on the highway.

I think also that the hon. Minister has a job to do in trying to convince industry that it must give the type of accommodation the tourist needs, and I am thinking again of Highway 401 and the amount of travel that is on there with the trailers we have today. Where, along that route, are you able to pull off with your trailer, able to hook it up, and spend the night in accommodation that you have with the set-up of your trailer? In the States there is a lot of this. The routes are set out, so that trailers can go in for the evening, rather than the occupants having to take a motel.

It must be realized that the tourist industry in Ontario is handicapped on the basis that our season is definitely short, therefore a lot of our motels perhaps have to charge more money in the summer than the same type of motel farther down in the States. We have to take a serious look at trying to convince these hotel and motel people and the tourist industry in the southern part of Ontario to try to get more into winter sports so that these hotel operators can carry on the year round.

Again in the "golden horseshoe" I would say that within a 50-mile radius there is an opportunity of all types of winter sports. The department is going to have to help promote these, convince the people in these areas that if they can do the job and put in the type of winter sports needed, they can get the tourist trade up here.

I also feel, Mr. Chairman, that there is another area which I think this department should look at. Down at the Sportsmen's Show they have souvenirs made in Canada. This is very good, but I am just wondering if they have ever taken a look at industrial tours. I am thinking of this on the basis of cities more than the small town. Take a city the size of Hamilton—it would be possible to arrange industrial tours, say, with the chamber of commerce there. This could be arranged not in July and August when we have our big tourist trade, but maybe earlier in the spring or later in the fall.

The average industry is only too happy to have people tour its plant. I know in Hamilton that Stelco, Procter and Gamble, and the electrical industry are quite willing to have tours at any time. I am wondering if it would be possible to convince the chamber of commerce to take a look at doing a job of having, say, two or three days in the spring or in the fall, set aside for industrial tours in that city and have the city put on a real programme to draw people into that area.

This is something that would certainly help the tourist industry a lot. It would bring money into areas and the main thing in the tourist industry is to get money into Ontario. It would bring money into areas where it is not coming at the present time. The average city, other than Toronto, where we have our Canadian National Exhibition, gets very little business out of the tourist trade any more. As I say, we have a wonderful highway system around Hamilton, but you could drive around the whole of Hamilton on our highways and you would not see a sign suggesting "Come in and visit our Rock garden" or "Come in and see the scenery we have in this area." It is the same with the Niagara peninsula. The days of the enjoyment of that are pretty well gone. We have to take a serious look at building the industry in southern Ontario as well as northern Ontario.

We have in our provincial parks a lot of nice campsites. These are being very well used, although the industry as a whole, is, I understand, putting quite a drive on to have the park sites raised up a little. But I do feel that this is another need and I hope the hon. Minister can convince the industry that it has to start to build more of the little summer homes again. The average family, when it gets the two weeks' holiday, likes to get away for a couple of weeks and rent a tourist cabin and supply its own meals, etc. This type of accommodation is getting scarce. You can get all the accommodation you want at $16 and $18 a day, but the average family cannot afford that. Another thing that this department can do along with industry; I think perhaps they can convince industry to do this: We have to bear in mind, in the tourist industry, that we still have to make a lot of our money from the citizens of Ontario, and in most industrial plants now they have a two-week shutdown. In the Hamilton area and in the Toronto area, most of them are somewhere between July 15 and August 15—in that four-week period there. At that time you can look in the papers and never see a cottage for rent; but you will be able to get cottages for rent in the first two weeks of July and the last two weeks of August. I am wondering if this department could not sit down with industry and try to convince them to spread their holidays over those two months, rather just over the four weeks. With children in mind, the holidays have to be pretty well within the eight weeks; but I think you would rather see our tourist industry have at least eight weeks of real business than just the four they have now.

I was interested in all the publications I had put on my desk today. I have two here I would like to discuss; and in discussing them I would like to say that the other Ministers in this department have spoken a lot about publicity they have had from the States, from the editors from down there who toured Ontario. They always remark what a wonderful job they felt they had done in going back to the States and promoting the tourist industry of Ontario.

I was interested in reading a piece in Life magazine, which was published last April. It is talking about the trans-Canada highway, and in it, it was spelling out the different provinces. It starts out with the eastern provinces and it names Newfoundland, Quebec and the Maritime provinces. Then it moves to the prairies and the first province in the prairies is Ontario. I do not know what type of publicity job we are doing in the States, but when a writer in a magazine like Life magazine does not know more about Ontario I feel perhaps we are not doing as good a job as we should.

I have here a magazine which I think all hon. members got. It is called Steel Flash, and is put out by the Steel Company of Canada. I would say that this will be read by a lot more people, the year round, than all of this other stuff will. I was quite interested in the centre-page spread. They are talking about the Quebec winter carnival being a top tourist attraction, which is very good. I am not arguing that it is not good. But I am wondering, along with industry, if we could not convince industry in their monthly publications—these are publications which most industries put out anyway—to promote our tourist trade a little more than is being done at the present time. It is not very often you see an article like this in one of these trade magazines. I think that that in itself could do a tremendous job.

In closing, there is one other question I would like to ask the hon. Minister. I understand his department is the one which issues licences to the tourists establishments. I am wondering if he has had to revoke any licences because of discrimination, or if he has had any complaints on discrimination because of colour, race, and so on, where licences have not been revoked?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, Mr. Chairman, may I just answer a couple of things very briefly before we get into the detailed votes. If the hon. member for Hamilton East will bear with me, I will try to have, this afternoon, information for him on licences rescinded, although to my knowledge I do not recall any having been suspended or cancelled due to any discrimination as far as customers are concerned. But I will check that; and if I am incorrect, I will give him the information shortly.

The hon. member for Essex South, Mr. Chairman, commented on a number of things—one matter having to do with credit, which is tied in with the seasonal aspect of what we have always considered the tourist business, July and August. Of course, there is federal legislation for small business loans and so on; and then, provincially, there is the Ontario Development Agency. The agency is presently dealing with some applications. I believe they have given one guarantee. But one of the things which my colleague, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall), has told me and which the agency people have told our people in the development branch, is that one of the problems the resort operators have had has been an accounting one.

I might put it another way. There have been a number of resort operators who have gone to the Ontario Development Agency; the agency in turn, as usual, has sent its people out to look at the operation and look at the books. After giving the operator a little assistance, a little advice in bookkeeping and in management, a great many of these operators have been able, with proper up-to-date records, to go to normal financing agencies, such as their banks, and get funds.

On the problem of the seasonal end of it, the hon. member mentioned about extending the season. This, of course, is one of our primary objectives; and as the hon. members will see this summer, Mr. Chairman, our main emphasis in advertising will be on spring and fall. By and large, very few places have had problems of accommodation in July and August. But in extending much past that, a great many of the resorts—and this applies particularly to the very large ones, most of which are quite old—find the cost of winterizing is quite substantial. Last fall it was fairly simple because we had a pretty mild fall, but to winterize for just a month or two, between insulation and heating and so on, can be quite a substantial cost.

We are hopeful that because of promotion which we are doing, and which the industry is doing, and the new facilities which are springing up in certain areas of the province for winter sports, there will be an improvement—that operators will see that people are coming in the winter time and will then be in a position to add the extra facilities and winterization. This, again, will be cumulative, and could be like a snowball; and we will be able to have pretty close to a year-round season.

The hon. member for Essex South mentioned about the posting of room rates. As he is probably aware, at the present time The Tourist Establishments Act, as well as The Innkeepers Act, both of which affect accommodation to some extent, require posting a maximum rate. Where we find the difficulty, of course, is that we have no authority, and I do not see how we could have, effectively, any authority to set the maximum rate. The operators, the few of them who do this and whose rates go up and down like yo-yos, depending on the time of the day and the traffic, post a maximum rate which they probably only charge once a week. The rest of the time they have a lower rate and then, when the time seems ripe, they get the unwary traveller.

We are looking at this. As a matter of fact, the officials of the department have been studying this for some time. It has been studied in other jurisdictions, because this is not a problem which only applies in our own province. Everybody would agree that an operator must be flexible in his own rates. What makes people mad is paying one rate if you check in at noon, and another rate of you have to check in at seven o'clock at night, or a rate on Tuesday different from Wednesday.

Just to speak briefly about the regional tourist councils, we are still not of the opinion they are all working perfectly as yet, as I mentioned in my previous remarks; but we do feel they are coming along and that, by and large, they are doing the job which they were set up to do.

This matter of jurisdiction between the regional councils and the development associations is a difficult one in certain areas, and I realize this. I know what, perhaps, my hon. friend may have in the back of his mind, which he perhaps did not mention today. We are starting a programme of what we hope will be joint meetings, between the area development associations and the regional tourist councils within each area, to try to work out a sort of a dividing line in tourist promotional activities. The tourist councils, of course, are only concerned in tourism; the development associations are in the whole field of commerce and development. Some of the latter, since their inception, have spent a good deal of their time on tourist promotion; others have spent very little, and have spent their time on industrial promotion. What we hope to do is to be able to work out dividing lines in these areas, with their agreement and co-operation, so there will not be duplication. They can then do a more effective job, jointly, in the spheres in which they can be most effective.

We do include information and promotion on the national parks in Ontario in our publications, and Highways do as well.

I will not now go into a couple of the matters which my hon. friend mentioned, which I think they would want us to look into and study. I am not in a position to say anything about them at the moment, but I can say that all the things which my hon. friend has mentioned will get pretty thorough consideration in the department, and with the other departments involved.

Again in connection with the grants to the regional tourist councils, I would hope my hon. friend would agree that it would be a mistake if we made our formula too rigid—as to what this money should be spent on within the association. By and large, we feel that the associations should be, and I think will be, with assistance from our own people in the department and other experts from the industry, in the best position to decide what they should use their money for.

The only restriction we have now, really, is that they must not use this for salaries for full-time personnel. We have, as I mentioned earlier in my remarks, made one slight concession in this regard, as a result of concern amongst the councils. We do allow a small amount as a matching grant for administrative services where they need secretarial assistance and mimeographing—that sort of thing.

When we get to the development vote, if my hon. friend would bear with me until then, I will give him the figures on how many of the associations received a full grant, and how many only a portion.

There were a couple of suggestions from my hon. friend from Hamilton East which I appreciate, and we will follow up. The question of editorial material in industrial publications, stories on vacation areas and so on, is one we will be following up. Some publications—as a matter of fact, it seems to me in the Imperial Oil Review there was a rather interesting Ontario travel story a while ago. I think the publications, by and large, are anxious to have this material, but we just have not been in a position to produce it for them—although, with the reorganization of the department, and the staff who are joining the department, I think we will be in a better position.

I might just tell the hon. members at the moment that we are very pleased that we have been able to attract the travel editor of the Toronto Daily Star. Alec Henderson will be starting with the department on April 2; one of the things which he and the people in his branch will be working on is the production of this kind of material for this kind of publication, as well as for the newspapers and so on.

I might just say that this matter of letting motorists who are travelling on Highway 401, and some of the other major highways of the province, know where the recreational areas are, is one which is being handled, I think reasonably well at the moment, by The Department of Highways' roads-to-recreation map. Certainly signs on the highway indicating recreational areas would be an improvement, and The Department of Highways has expanded its sign programme in this kind of thing in the last year or so. We are meeting with the Highways people on this from time to time.

We hope to be able to continue to improve this recreational signing programme although, as the hon. members will realize again, when you get into the matter of highway signs it can be a fairly broad problem; a question of precedence as to where you draw the line as to what is a recreational area and so on. It is not an easy problem to solve completely.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have commented on some of the matters which were brought up by my two hon. friends. Perhaps we could proceed with the detailed votes?

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, before proceeding with the votes, could I seek clarification from the hon. Minister on a couple of items?

In regard to extending the season, I am not particularly referring to the winter season; as the hon. member for Hamilton East pointed out, our peak season is two, four, possibly six weeks during the summer months, whereas in my particular locality in another two weeks we will be blossoming forth. The great multitude of people in this province, if there was a major attraction in this area, could come down and see vegetation in the ground, which cannot be seen anywhere for at least another 1,000 miles to the south. We do have a certain element coming in; the migration of the birds is drawing people in, early in the season, from New York state and so forth. The same thing holds true in the latter part of the season. It could broaden out into April and May, having facilities for those areas.

The other point is that the hon. Minister mentioned the Ontario Development Agency having received one applicant. I would just think this points up my thoughts that we need more training of people going into this industry; therefore they would be qualified to obtain these grants.

In regard to the posting of rates in motels, I think this should be looked into because I know of a number of motels which do not have rates posted in the interior of each room.

Hon. Mr. Auld: If my hon. friend will let us know where they are, we can deal with it very rapidly.

On the matter of the season, with reference to the hon. member for Hamilton East, I do not know this of my own knowledge but I am told—because I have inquired about the same thing myself—that one of the problems of this two-week period in the middle of July and the middle of August—actually the last week in July and the first week in August—has been that in those plants where approaches have been made by either tourist associations or by the department officially, or unofficially, in many cases the answer has been that, after a survey of the employees, this is the period they all want. I do not know how far one might go to change this, but I would think that the only effective way would be by promoting the other times of the year, and having interesting things to do or see—so that the majority of the workers in a plant would be amenable to going on holiday, one year, the last two weeks in June or the first two weeks in July.

July and August, of course, with those who have school-age children are pretty well the only months they can go.

In connection with regional grants, in 1962-63 ten of the 32 regional tourist councils received the full grant, and 12 a partial grant. In 1963-64 to date—of course, we do not have the final figures—14 have received a full grant and 12 a partial grant. The remainder have received nothing. Whether this is because they have had no expenditure or whether they just have not applied yet, I cannot say.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, some days ago the hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Robarts) referred to the centennial year and also the bridge at Sault Ste. Marie. He said we could expect a great influx of tourists from now on and certainly during that 1967 year. I was, unfortunately, not able to be here during the estimates of The Department of Highways—I had to stay in my riding because of the great tragedy we had there last weekend. But looking in the proposed work I find the original trans-Canada highway is still in the same position it was before; there is no work from Mattawa west or east to Pembroke. Last year there was a great amount of criticism. The Upper Ottawa Valley Association pointed out that some of the oil companies were telling their people not to travel that route, so I suggest that you urge the hon. Minister of Highways that if he wants to have the tourists come down that way even in 1967 he had better do something about it.

It also would be appreciated if the hon. Minister would urge the hon. Prime Minister of this province and the Cabinet to do something about the archaic liquor laws of our province. I have certain reservations myself about local option but I certainly think that in order to increase the tourist industry there has to be some change. I was glad to notice at the meeting—again I was unable to be there—when the tourist operators were here, that they spoke of off-package sales at licensed premises, and then the sale of wines and such on Sunday, and things of that nature.

However, in order to bring in the tourists, particularly the American tourists and the tourists from the great province of Quebec who have not got the archaic liquor laws that we have here in the province of Ontario, we should do something about it. I noticed in the press a statement that it was unlikely that there would be any change in the Act presented to this session. Since there is time, as we will be back after Easter, I urge the hon. Minister to see if he can induce the hon. Prime Minister of this province to begin now to change that situation because we are all interested in tourist promotion. I want to assure these people down south that not only have we a wonderful tourist country in the spring and summer time, but also in the winter, so there is no problem about our area.

Repeating again, highways play a wonderful part in the development of tourism and so does the added attraction of spirits, so will the hon. Minister urge the members of the Cabinet and the hon. Prime Minister to change these outdated laws if possible this session?

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, I want to ask from a constitutional point of view whether we may legally vote $4,585,000 to a department that does not yet exist. According to the estimates, sir, these monies are being voted to The Department of Tourism and Information. Are we getting ourselves into any difficulty from which we cannot extricate ourselves? I would fear that after we vote this $4.5 million that some citizen of the province may sue the hon. Minister to pay it back personally.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I might mention to my hon. friend from Sudbury that I do not prepare the estimates in the printed form but I do not think he need worry. The Minister, if he finds that someone is likely to sue him, is likely to come in and ask for some sort of a change.

Mr. Chairman: It is my understanding, sir, that these estimates are for the year commencing April 1, 1964, so that probably by that time the department will be known under the name of The Department of Tourism and Information.

Mr. Sopha: It may be the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) and I have not made up our minds whether each of us personally is going to vote for this bill yet.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, to what extent is there co-operation between this department and other departments of government?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, since I have been Minister, we have worked jointly with a number of other departments. We have not had occasion to work with all of them but the co-operation which we have had has been excellent.

Mr. Newman: Then I would assume the hon. Minister has spoken to The Department of Highways, to the hon. Minister in charge of that department, and he must have convinced him to complete Highway 401. I asked this of the previous Minister four times and he said there would be the utmost co-operation. Certainly there is no evidence of that co-operation.

The next department is The Department of Transport. We had discussed for years the idea of a slogan on licence plates. Last year the hon. Minister was firmly convinced that one should be included and it is recorded in Hansard that he thought that in 1965 we would have a slogan. There is probably no better and no cheaper way of publicizing the province than by means of a licence plate, and a colourful licence plate.

In the debates on the estimates of The Department of Transport, the hon. Minister answered in the negative and said that the purpose of the licence plate was solely so that it could be readily identified. He was not interested at all in any kind of slogan.

He mentioned the fact that the numbers would be too small and there would not be room on the plate. Yet our neighbours to the north, to the west and to the south of us in the state of Michigan have increased the lettering on their plate; the slogan has been changed from Water Wonderland to Water Winter Wonderland. They evidently find room. They are not disturbed that the numbers will not be able to be read. The number of cars that travel in that state is far greater than the number in the province of Ontario.

I know that the hon. Minister is convinced that we need the slogan on the licence plates but my sole purpose in mentioning this is so that he, in his discussions with members of the Treasury board, could convince them that in the very near future we should have some type of slogan on the plate and that the plate be much more colourful and more representative of the province of Ontario.

Mr. L. M. Hodgson (Scarborough East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment for a moment, if I might, on the discussion of a licence-plate slogan. I do not want to give the impression here that I am for or against them. But I would like to say this, that many of the states in the United States use slogans. We have, from New York, the Empire State; from Kentucky, I believe we have the Blue Grass State; from Florida we have the Sunshine State. I would not care, Mr. Chairman, what slogan Florida put on its plate; I know that is the land of sunshine. It would not matter what slogan the state of New York put on its plate; you know that is the state of the Empire State Building and the centre of commerce in the United States. The Kentucky people, regardless of the slogan on their plate, are known for their land of horses and blue grass.

I would say that most people in the nine provinces of Canada other than Ontario and most people in the United States have an impression of this province. Regardless of the slogan we put on our plate it will not change their impression of this province. The Department of Tourism and Information and other departments of our government are constantly making the North American continent and the rest of the world aware of our province, the advantages we have here and the many things that attract people to Ontario and create our society and our appearance to the rest of the world. I think if we were to put something on the licence plate, it would not change the opinion of anybody and their opinions would be the same of this province, so that I feel, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Sopha: Would you go for a hippopotamus?

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): No, nor a picture of you.

Mr. L. M. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest, before we continue this discussion of slogans on licence plates, that the hon. members in the Opposition give it a lot more thought.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Ask the hon. Minister; he was for it last year.

Mr. L. M. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I was not answering for the hon. Minister.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I am most surprised to hear the comment of the hon. member because the chambers of commerce, the joint chambers of the province of Ontario, have been recommending this now for well over 15 years.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, if I might say, this is one matter I have not discussed with the hon. Minister of Transport yet—that is the present Minister (Mr. Haskett)—but I will be glad to discuss it with him.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Minister could have discussed it with himself last year.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, we know how jealous The Department of Highways is about the signing which appears on their property, and I would draw the attention of the House to the signs which the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity evidently has received permission to put up. As you drive along you are informed that you are now entering the south-central-north tourist area, or some other such useful piece of information, and I would ask the hon. Minister to comment on the use of those signs. I would further suggest that at least there should be, on those signs, a reference to where the nearest tourist information post might be.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The signs to which my hon. friend from Brant referred are ones which designate the edges of the various 32 tourist regions and are put there if the region so requests it, and if the two adjoining regions, as sometimes they have not, can agree where the boundary is. This is an informative sign similar to, for instance, the historic sites signs The Department of Highways put up. Since they are not commercial in any way, in directing people to any specific resort in an area, they are within the regulations of The Department of Highways. Does that answer my hon. friend's question?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, the hon. Minister refers to them as informative signs and they are in a sense—if that is the sort of information one might be interested in—but I do not feel that these signs say anything to tourists of any value at all. If the signs are going to be put up, perhaps the department or the association which authorizes the signs should use a little imagination and put something on them which would be of some use.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, they tie in with this and other publications, but this one particularly, which indicates the 32 vacation regions in the province and gives information about what is in them.

Mr. Nixon: The tourist information centres are indicated on those maps as well?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Oh, yes.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, I see. I would also like to ask the hon. Minister about the report of his department which we received in our mail this morning: Is this in its final form?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No. It will be printed when it has a sessional paper number, and it will be distributed in booklet form, properly printed.

Mr. Nixon: I must say, Mr. Chairman, that I was quite pleased to get it in this form. It is quite readable and would have served the purpose for our discussions here today, if we had had an opportunity to read it. I often feel that the elaborate presentation of the report of the department, and there are getting to be a large number of them in the government now, is quite a serious drain on the taxpayer. So often these reports are stashed away after being referred to briefly, or consigned to the wastebasket. I should think the report, in its form at the present time, is most adequate, and I would recommend that the hon. Minister take no further step to improve it.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, while we are on this matter of signs, my hon.

friend from Hamilton East raised the question of designations along the highway which might indicate certain tourist areas. We had some of the problems in connection therewith outlined by the hon. Minister, and I think that what he said made some degree of good sense.

I would like to direct the attention of the hon. Minister to a problem of which he must be aware. The other day I asked the hon. Minister of Highways regarding the location of the new Highway 401 east of Gananoque. He pointed out that the present road did not make good sense from the point of view of a limited access highway. Also he pointed out, at that time, that the road along the St. Lawrence Valley was one of the few roads in southern Ontario with this kind of scenic beauty, and therefore that it should be preserved.

I had some contact with an organization which has been formed in connection with the Seaway Valley. I have in my hands some of their literature, and some of their representations to The Department of Highways, but this does concern the hon. Minister today because it has to do with this whole matter of tourists and the designation of the Seaway Valley.

The request has been made that, at the east and west end of the Seaway Valley, signs should be installed large enough and significant enough to invite the tourist to use the scenic route which the hon. Minister of Highways indicated was so important the other day. On the Seaway Valley, if I may quote from a letter from Mr. R. Eadie the executive secretary, Seaway Valley travel committee, "Relevant thoughts on Highway 401", he says:

The Seaway Valley regional tourist council or, as it is locally known, the Seaway Valley travel council, has for many months past been endeavouring to obtain permission for the erection of a 16 foot by 40 foot sign west of the junction of Highway 2, inviting motorists to take the scenic route along Highway 2 which passes through our communities. Properly directed to Highway 2, the tourist continues the scenic route, he enjoys from the Ivy Lea Bridge, or Gananoque. He is brought in contact with the many attractions the valley has to offer and, consequently, may spend from two to three days at least in the area, leaving an estimated $60 to $90, instead of nothing.

That is, if directed into this valley where there are good accommodations and great scenic beauty.

The letter goes on:

If the tourist services industry in this valley is to continue to improve its standards, if we expect to influence private investment and new facilities and especially new attractions, we must—it says in the report—lead the tourist off the highway and into the byways to see the attraction.

We concede the principle that our Ontario highways should not be cluttered with billboards; we quite understand that. To open them to all kinds of commercial advertising would be a grave mistake. But we contend that our request for two signs at least, one at each end of the Seaway Valley, approximately 80 miles apart, perhaps more than that, advertising the area as a package tourist mecca, are not in the normal commercial category, deserve special consideration, and would not necessarily be interpreted as relaxing restrictions on commercial billboards.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, with all respect to the hon. member for Yorkview, and he is very able in all his presentations, I would suggest in your interest, Mr. Chairman, that this is not following the vote. We are talking on 2101; and to get this vote through the House I think we should stick to the vote we are talking about and suggest we hear his remarks later.

Mr. Young: I might say, Mr. Chairman, in reply to that point of order, that I was waiting until a later vote in order to raise this matter; but since it was raised by the hon. member for Brant I concluded, because you had allowed it, that it was the proper place to raise it. So I forthwith went ahead.

Mr. Chairman: Order! I would rule that in the first vote, vote 2101, because the Minister's salary is included therein, this vote is considered to include matters of policy and so there is more latitude in that first vote than any other vote. Perhaps too much latitude has been allowed in that particular vote, and discussion came in concerning the policy in regard to the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission, which perhaps should be discussed under another vote, so I would suggest that you conclude your remarks but make them brief.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, very quickly, I simply want to say that there seems to be some sense to this point of view which has been presented by the group promoting the Seaway Valley. I know that the hon. Minister is very interested in this particular region for obvious reasons, and I would think that some sort of arrangement might be worked out with The Department of Highways so that this kind of sign could be erected. It would not be a general sign but only used on rare and specific occasions to direct tourists to these specific areas of great scenic beauty where they might very well spend some days. I would like to know whether the hon. Minister has any advice in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I think technically we are perhaps not in order in discussing highway signs or highway regulations in this present estimate.

As the hon. member knows, I am now speaking as the member for Leeds rather than the Minister, because the member for Leeds is very interested in the problem my hon. friend has mentioned. We have been discussing this sign problem both at the ministerial level and among the officials of the two departments. Some changes have been made which I think will certainly be of assistance to the tourist industry. Whether we will ever resolve all the problems having to do with highway signs to everybody's satisfaction I do not know, but I think that we are making progress and I hope we are going to make some further progress.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, on vote 2101: One year ago the hon. Prime Minister appointed a committee to look into the economic ills of the Windsor area. The committee submitted its final report on November 15, and I understand in the report one of the recommendations is that the community that asked for the report be considered very highly as a tourist area. Has the hon. Minister's department seen that report? Has it studied the report? Has it any suggestions to make concerning that report?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I would say simply that up until now it has never been the policy for this department to promote any specific area of the province to the exclusion of others. In other words, the department's job primarily is to promote all of Ontario. Through the regional councils which we set up in 1961 and the assistance given to them financially, this is considered to be their job. I would think as far as the Windsor region is concerned—and it has in the Essex-Kent region, particularly the Essex county association which is a very old one in terms of tourist promotion, a very effective agency in that group—it would be able to do a particularly good job in this field.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister still did not answer the question. You know, the Windsor area is apparently going to have to depend on tourism and conventions in an attempt to overcome some of the economic defects that it suffers from. Has the hon. Minister seen the report himself?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am informed that the particular recommendation that my hon. friend mentions has not been studied by our department, as yet.

Mr. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Vote 2101 agreed to.

On vote 2102:

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, on vote 2102, I wonder if the hon. Minister might give us an up-to-date picture of the reorganization of his department which received considerable publicity last year. What is the new division of branches? Who are the new heads, and how many of the former heads are back with the department and in what capacities?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for York South was not at the tourist committee meeting a week ago when we went over the organization.

Reporting to the Minister directly are the archaeological and historic sites board, the theatres branch, and of course the deputy Minister and the Ontario - St. Lawrence Development Commission, as far as policy is concerned. Reporting to the Minister through the deputy Minister are the new travel research branch, and the director is Mr. D. R. Richmond; the archives division or the department of public records and archives, from which as my hon. friend knows the Archivist of Ontario reports to the Minister but the administrative part of the department of public records and archives is part of The Department of Travel and Publicity at the moment; the tourist industry development branch, and I just might say that the director of that, Mr. T. C. Clarke, has been taking his own advice—he is not with us this afternoon because he, I think, is marching up and down a room outside a maternity ward, so I hope there will not be too many questions about his branch this afternoon.

The advertising branch, the directorship of which is vacant at the moment although there are competitions going on in this field; the tourist promotion and information branch, again for which there is an in-service competition and about which we understand a decision should reach us next week from the civil service commission; the publicity branch is directed by Mr. C. McDonald, and the administrative services branch, Mr. E. H. Johnston.

Mr. MacDonald: How many former branch heads are still with the department, and in what capacities?

Hon. Mr. Auld: All former branch heads are presently with the department. The former branch heads are in the same level of position that they were in previously as far as salary, but their branches were changed in the reorganization and their positions as heads of the new branches were not confirmed. In other words, they remained with the branch but there is a new senior position which has not yet been filled in these two cases. There are three—Mr. Hogarth, Mr. McHattie and Mr. Venn—who are all still with the department.

Mr. MacDonald: Finally, Mr. Chairman, in this connection, I have always been a bit mystified as to the exact relationship of the provincial archivist. Has not the provincial archivist traditionally been virtually in the position of a deputy Minister vis-à-vis the Minister, and does this still continue?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, the deputy provincial archivist is appointed by order-in-council as a deputy Minister would be. The department of public records and archives as far as I know, and I am far from an expert on this, has never had a deputy Minister. The senior civil servant has been the Archivist of Ontario, who is at the present time Mr. McOuat. He succeeded Dr. Spragge, I think the change was effective August 1963.

Vote 2102 agreed to.

On vote 2103:

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on this vote 2103, first I would like to commend the hon. Minister on his department obtaining the services of Mr. Colin McDonald—I have had direct contact over the years with Mr. McDonald—and the hon. Minister's submission of the sum of $48,500 here in publicity grants for editors, writers and visitors from the States. I think this is a fine peace of promotion, Mr. Minister, but in support of my hon. colleague, insofar as the outmoded liquor laws in this province are concerned, it is a standing joke among the 50 or 60 visiting editors to this country.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Why do they keep coming back then?

Mr. Sargent: You can pay their way back, first class, and they are all wonderful gentlemen and we are glad to have them. But it is a bit of hypocrisy on the part of the government to have, as the hon. Minister knows, 4,000 or 5,000 motel resorts in this great province of ours, all trying to stay in business with the freak laws the government continues to countenance. I think it behooves this department to take positive action on the part of these people who are trying to stay in business and give the Americans what they want when you bring them to this country. We have flogged this point many times before and I imagine the hon. Prime Minister is too good a politician to make a statement for the next few years, but I suggest to you that we are all laughing at you with the Americans, and wondering why you have not got the sense to do what you think is right.

Mr. Minister, on these beautiful submissions you have presented to us at X thousands of dollars of cost, I commend you for the quality of the work. In all seriousness, I think that there is a lot of duplication and a lot of fat here for the agencies and whoever you place this material with, but you will notice that all the contents of these, Mr. Chairman, are built around our beaches, our water resources, our beautiful lakes and our holiday resorts.

Mr. Chairman: Order! We are on 2103 and I believe you were referring to publications, which are in 2104. Order, please!

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, on this item to do with the editors' tour, which the hon. member just mentioned. Really, I cannot join in the laughter he talked about there. It has been my pleasure to meet with these editors for a great number of years, I guess as long as they have been coming over here. I have met them all, I have been with them and I have yet—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I cannot hear.

Mr. Cowling: Just a minute, we are talking on 2103. Sit down, relax.

Interjections by hon. members.

Some hon. members: We cannot hear you.

Mr. Cowling: Is this on? Shall I say that all over again, Mr. Chairman?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cowling: They are on the wavelength? Okay. I thought I would just straighten out the new hon. member Mr. Chairman, that these editors from the States are not laughing at the Ontario liquor laws. As a matter of fact, they are overwhelmed with the hospitality provided by the hon. Minister and his department, and by the province of Ontario. I wanted to make that perfectly clear, Mr. Chairman. I have talked with dozens of these editors who have been on the tours, and never once have I heard anyone say anything about our liquor laws in the province of Ontario. They have nothing but the greatest compliments to make.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Speaking to a point of order, or perhaps I should speak to the vote I was on?

Mr. Cowling: Wait a minute! No, no, I am sorry, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: What is your point of order?

Mr. Sargent: The point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that the hon. member is so wrong. It is a standing joke—

Mr. Chairman: This is not a point of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, the only point of order is they wanted bourbon instead of the rye here.

Mr. Chairman: Order! These are not the liquor estimates. Order! Order!

The member, if he will complete his remarks, should be certain he is referring to the newspaper editors—not the liquor question. Liquor, as related to these editors, and so on, may be one part of it, but I would suggest we keep to the subject of the estimates as shown in vote 2103.

Mr. Cowling: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will certainly abide by your ruling.

I was dealing with 2103, item 5—Ontario tours for editors, writers, and photographers, and special promotion.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): What has that got to do with liquor?

Mr. Cowling: Well, not anything, except that we did enjoy a sociable drink with the editors when they were here. I guess that is how it came up.

I just wanted to say, Mr. Chairman, that these people are thrilled with the tours. I think the department is to be congratulated for these tours. I think the result of their newspaper work, on their return to their respective areas, telling about the wonders of our great province here, brings thousands of additional tourists into the province. It is something I want to compliment the hon. Minister for; and as far as the sideplay by the hon. members is concerned, it really does not mean anything; because these people know what they want, they know a good thing when they see one, and they are just waiting to come back, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for High Park—which vote are we on, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: On vote 2103.

Mr. Sargent: All right. I am speaking to the brochure on publicity, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: That is not covered on 2103. Order!

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I submit I have a right to speak on this vote.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2104 includes publications. We are on vote 2103, which does not include publications.

Vote 2103 carried?

Mr. Sargent: You cannot do that.

Mr. Chairman: You are not speaking on 2103.

Mr. Sargent: I was trying to make the hon. Minister get things moving and I want to speak on this.

Mr. Chairman: It is on 2104 you were trying to speak, instead of 2103.

Mr. Sargent: 2103.

Mr. Chairman: I have explained—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I am very new in this House and I would like to see some order in the House when I am on my feet.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order! When you are on your feet you can speak to the order the same as anyone else.

Vote 2104 includes the publications and on vote 2104 you can speak on publications. We are now speaking on 2103. Unless someone speaks to 2103, we will declare it carried. I am not saying you cannot speak on publications on 2104, which is the proper vote for that subject.

Mr. Troy: I am speaking on 2103, Mr. Chairman. I am speaking on the Ontario tours of editors.

Mr. Chairman: Good.

Mr. Troy: While the hon. member for Grey North mentioned the liquor laws, and the hon. member for High Park spoke about them, the editors did not have to worry because there were receptions for them everywhere. Those were not the ones to which the hon. member for Grey North referred.

In regard to the Ontario tours, sir, I suggest that in the department, when they are arranging their tours they always include the riding of Nipissing. I had the pleasure of being with them last year, and I saw them here in Toronto—they had been in a great number of places, in Ottawa, in the St. Lawrence Parks Commission, in the city of Toronto and all; and all of them remarked how they enjoyed the area of northern Ontario. It was so different from their own homeland and their own home states.

I suggest to the hon. Minister that, when his department is arranging its tours, it includes the district of Nipissing and its primeval beauty. I know, too, as was pointed out by the hon. member for High Park that in their own newspapers they paint the glories of Canada, because I have heard many times the editor of the San Marcos paper in Texas tell of how he just went into rhapsodies over the beauty of Ontario.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Did the hon. member ever investigate the Texas liquor laws?

Mr. Troy: Well, they must be big.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Vote 2103 agreed to.

Some hon. members: No, no!

Mr. Chairman: If the member is referring to publications again, he will do that in 2104.

On vote 2104:

An hon. member: We have no closures here.

Mr. Chairman: I gave the member the opportunity but he would not keep in order, so 2103 is now carried and we are on 2104.

An hon. member: Oh, no, you cannot do that.

Mr. F. B. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Your exaggerated remarks, even assuming that they had a basis in fact, were only directed against one hon. member. You cannot rule a vote carried because, in your judgment, one hon. member does not subscribe to your theory of what is the practical disposition of this case. Surely there is something wrong—

Mr. Chairman: I would agree, sir, but on the other hand the other members were simply rising to support the one member who was out of order. They were not proceeding with the question itself. The member was rising in defence of the member for Grey North. If the member for Windsor-Walker-ville wishes to speak on 2103, he has the opportunity.

On vote 2103:

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, has the department analyzed the results of the editors' tours, because in looking over the statistics as presented to us by the hon. Minister, apparently the only states with any substantial numbers of tourists who take advantage of our tourist reception centres are Illinois, Michigan, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania—our bordering states? None of the others have any substantial number of tourists coming in.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): What about Minnesota?

Mr. Newman: Not at all, not in the least. I am taking the statistics as presented by the hon. Minister himself. Minnesota is away down the line. Leading the list is Michigan, coming second is New York, third is Ohio, fourth is Pennsylvania and fifth is Illinois, and Minnesota is away down there about twelfth.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is not very far down out of 48 states, is it?

An hon. member: It all depends on how far you want to go down.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman. All we can do is report what happened. I do not really know how I can explain to the hon. member why the people who came in, came from the places they did. The report simply indicates that these are the states from which the largest number of people who came in for travel information, came.

Mr. Newman: I would say to the hon. Minister I would like his advertising to be concentrated in, and his editors to come from, the areas that are most advantageous to us. Apparently the five states that I have mentioned provided more tourists than did any of the other states, and possibly the hon. Minister should be concentrating his efforts in those states.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think, Mr. Chairman, if I might put it this way, that the largest tourist population that we have is within roughly a day's drive of our border points. This is about 45 million or 50 million people in the United States. We expect that the largest number of visitors will come from there since 98 per cent of all visitors come by automobile. We direct our major efforts in advertising promotion to those areas, both by newspaper, which is fairly simple, and by magazine which is a little more difficult. Not all magazines that we feel we should use in the United States have regional editions, and it is obviously very costly to advertise on a nation-wide basis when your major market is only a portion of it.

As far as the U.S. editors' tours are concerned, however, we have editors from all states, although the majority come from the bordering areas. One editor may come from a paper in Texas, but there are probably five who come from papers in each of Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Pennsylvania and New York, and perhaps some of the New England states.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Chairman, on vote 2103, in connection with the U.S. editors' tour, I believe these editors are all editors of weekly papers. Is that not correct?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No. I do not have the breakdown in front of me of those who have been in the tour in recent years. While I think perhaps the majority may be from weekly or bi-weekly, there are daily editors as well.

Mr. Paterson: The point I would like to make is that while they are here in Ontario, we host them in a first-class manner. But in the placing of the hon. Minister's advertising which comes up under the next item, it all goes into the dailies and periodicals and not into the weekly papers.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is not quite correct, Mr. Chairman. The newspaper advertising in the U.S. area is confined to dailies simply because we are advised—and I think this is correct—you get better coverage for your advertising dollar. On the other hand, we supply editorial material and we get excellent support from the editors of both the dailies and the weeklies and bi-weeklies whether we advertise in them or not.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2103 agreed to.

On vote 2104:

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Chairman, on 2104, I wanted to make some remarks. I think I am in order on this vote. One thing about us fellows from Grey county is that we are going to have our say—we hope. We hope that we can be in order but whether we are or not, we are going to try. But on this vote I am sure that what I have in mind comes quite within the vote 2104.

In that vote, the hon. Minister is asking for almost $1 million for advertising. This, I am sure he will agree, is the strong right arm that he employs—and properly so—to lure tourists into Ontario from the United States and from other provinces and from wherever we might gain tourists.

When you start advertising in the magazines and in the papers of the United States, I am sure the hon. Minister will agree with me that it is not clear sailing. You are up against pretty stiff competition, not only from other provinces in Canada but from other states in the union. There are a lot of jurisdictions that are out after the tourist dollar these days. We who would like to enjoy the privileges of being in a tourist camp in northern Ontario, have to make up our minds as to where we want to go basically on the sort of advertising that we see in the papers and in the magazines.

For a moment, if I might, I would like to be a United States citizen and to assume that in some way I have acquired—I have not any idea how I could do it, but assume that I have acquired—sufficient capital so that I feel my family could enjoy a holiday in Ontario or in some other part of Canada. I start looking in the United States magazines and newspapers to see what the different places have to offer. For instance, I find New Brunswick, which I think is an excellent advertisement. I am sure my hon. friend has seen it. On the baggage which the incoming chap is supposed to take with him you see a map of the province of New Brunswick and you see outstanding scenes that are depicted in good colour relating the life in New Brunswick and the things that the tourist can expect to find if he comes to that province.

When I look through the magazine further, I find that from the province of Quebec is what I think is an excellent advertisement in anyone's opinion. There is excellent colouring, and the language that describes the scenes that are depicted is moderate but enthusiastic. You can tell that they want you to come but they do not use slapstick methods. They use the well-accepted standards of telling the people of the United States that they are welcome in Quebec and it is a very dignified approach, it seems to me.

One then sees Alberta, which shows the valley of the Ten Peaks and the Banff National Park, with the caption that "You must see it to believe it." That, I would say again, is an advertisement that would attract the tourists from the United States to come to the province of Alberta. What they say about the province is written very well. It is written very conservatively, if you want to use that term for a moment; it is written with the idea in mind that they who want to travel from the United States to some place in Canada would be likely to choose Alberta because of the picture and because of the language employed to describe that picture.

I am sure that the hon. Minister will agree that in the United States itself we have very active competition for the tourist dollar. The state I have in my mind of course, as the hon. Minister will recognize, is the state of Colorado. Now there is an excellent advertisement that describes for the mind's eye the things that can be seen in Colorado, if you go there to spend your tourist dollar.

Remember, I am still a citizen of the United States wanting to find a place to spend my holidays. I have a sort of idea that I would like to come to Ontario, so I look through the magazines until I find advertising that describes what is available in the province of Ontario and I find three advertisements that I want to discuss for a moment.

Here we have one where the man is paddling in an anaemic and bilious-looking canoe. The colouring on the canoe is indescribable. Really, I do not know how far they can get off from a natural colour. Two-thirds of the canoe has a sort of dirty red colour and the last third, if it ever was coloured, has now been washed off and so the canoe is really a bilious canoe. There is no question about that.

Go into the landscape that is behind the canoe and this would really capture the attention of anyone who wanted to find a place to go to spend his vacation. Here you have that pale blue background. I suppose it is supposed to be the Tory background, I do not know. If you look at it carefully you will see that there is no skyline at all—there is no sky, there is nothing but water. You know, Columbus had a hard time years ago. Columbus set out and all he could see for days was water, but he did have the sky above it and eventually he found land. This poor chap is indeed in worse circumstances than Columbus was. There is no sky. There is no evidence of land. He is a forlorn figure on this sea of blue and I would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that you and I being practical people would hesitate to come to Ontario just because we saw that in a United States magazine. I think we would be almost afraid to come if we saw that in the picture section of the magazine. Under the picture is the caption. This, too, is good. It says: "Ontario is very big." That surely is improvisation that will be readily gobbled up by the people who want to come to Ontario. "Ontario is very big." Then in smaller letters under that, it says: "Bigger than Texas even."

So help me, Mary. We are not advertising Texas surely. The only distinction in this advertisement that meets the eye of the would-be chap coming into Ontario for a rest and a holiday is that in the comparison between Ontario and Texas. It is decreed by an Ontario writer that Ontario has the edge, just the edge, but in so setting out the fact that we are bigger than Texas, we are advertising Texas. And then it goes on to read—you know, the fellow who comes as a tourist not only looks at the picture but he reads how the picture is described—and this one starts off: "How about that?" That means bigger than Texas. "How about that?" Canadians making noises like Texans.

That will draw the people into this country, I am sure, by the thousands. But it goes on. There is one place here that I wanted to read. They tell us about the lakes in Ontario. I thought this stood out as an example of our desire and our ability to draw people unto us for a holiday and for leisure time. It says of the lakes:

They come in all shapes and sizes. Some are rocky and deep, others are shallow and sandy and dandy for the kids.

The point I want to make, of course, is that they come in all shapes and sizes. That will be a revelation not only to the would-be tourist, but to every person in this House, every member of this Legislature. We had the idea, I am sure, that every lake was the same size and the same shape, and to suggest to the American people that we have lakes that are different in size, different in depth—my, that should draw them to this country.

I have two or three more things to say that will be equally interesting. The second one is this one. You know this one, Mr. Chairman? This is the picture of a tree on the edge of the yellow sea. The water is yellow, a dirty yellow, but yellow nevertheless, and the tree is clinging perilously to the slopes of that yellow sea and one can visualize in his mind, I am sure, that all but this tree have gone. There had been others in the past that had been weaker and had fallen by the wayside but this one clings tenaciously to life—so tenaciously that it is bent almost double into the yellow sea. Just the one left and it cannot survive.

A United States tourist looking at this picture, I think, would say to himself, "If we want to enjoy shade beneath this tree, we had better hurry because its life is not only in danger, but its days are numbered, and so we had better hurry if we want to get there." That is the second one.

The most important one, and the one I want to deal with for a moment, is the third one. In this one, all colour is gone; nothing but a gray mist. You cannot see a thing but a boat, if you look closely, and a chap fishing. He is out in the great unknown. I hope he makes port. I hope he gets back to shore, but there is no indication in the picture that there is any shore. But here is the thing that I want to bring to the attention of the House. We say this, from your department, Mr. Minister, in the third paragraph of the descriptive words that follow underneath this picture:

We are a neighbourly bunch up here and we would dearly like to have you fish with us this year. Why not fill in the coupon that we have included? We will send you back all the details that you will need to plan the damndest fishing trip you ever had.

Imagine, I do not know whether that is parliamentary even in this House, Mr. Chairman, but that is what it says. "We will send you back all the details that you will need to plan the damndest fishing trip you ever had." Now they tell me that an examination of the dictionary would indicate that the damndest fishing you ever had means that you do not get any good fishing at all—there is none. But I do not think that is the thought that is meant to be conveyed by this.

On the bottom of this, underneath the crest of Ontario, is the thing that the chap sends in when he is interested in coming to the province of Ontario. I mean he has been persuaded by that. Yes, he has seen it, he has been conquered, and he says we will go to Ontario. And so he fills in this thing at the bottom. This, Mr. Prime Minister, if you have never heard this, will impress you.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I am listening. I have not heard this before.

Mr. Oliver: It says this: "Dear Gang." Gang! That is the hon. Minister and his cohorts. "Dear Gang."

An hon. member: The happy gang.

Mr. Oliver: "We have found you out and we are coming. Dear gang! Saw your ad fellows, and I am intrigued. How about sending me along your fishing information? I am anxious to plan the damndest fishing trip that I ever had." Then as a postscript, it says: "I am very big on Ontario." What in the world that means I would not know. He has never been there presumably, but from a distance he says he is very big on Ontario. But he says, "I am anxious to plan the damndest fishing trip I have ever had."

Seriously, and I say this seriously, Mr. Chairman, I have never known advertising to go out—supposed to be from the department here in Toronto—to the United States to lure people into this great province, that was so devoid of a real appeal as these ads that I have just discussed this afternoon. I suggest to the hon. Minister this, and I say it most seriously, that I suppose we will get tourists this year, but I would say without reservation that if we get them, it will be in spite of these ads rather than because of them.

I want to know from the hon. Minister as we proceed in this, some of the facts. I want to give full credit to those who are responsible for these creations that I have discussed these last few moments, and I want the hon. Minister to tell me what agency placed this advertising. I want to know what official has the responsibility of dealing with the agency and with approving finally all the media, copy and art work before it is released for publication. I want to know what has been the cost of these ads to the people of the province of Ontario. I want to know also, did the department supply the photographs that are in these pictures? I almost hope that my hon. friend says no. But if they did not supply the photographs then how much did the agency charge for the photographs as an extra charge?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I must say that my hon. friend took a long time to get around to what he wanted to ask about, but I would just tell him this, that the ad must be effective because it is the first time I recall in nine years that anybody discussed the advertising programme, and one of the purposes, of course, of advertising, is to attract the attention of people.

My hon. friend carried on for some few moments about ads in other jurisdictions. I am not familiar with all of them, but from looking at them here, it is pretty hard to tell which one is which. I would suggest to him that perhaps while I am not familiar with the exact ad from which he was reading—and I would appreciate it if he would send them over here—those who are looking in travel magazines certainly would have had their attention drawn by the ads to which he referred, if I might say so, disparagingly.

I cannot give my hon. friend all the information asked for. The two agencies which I presume prepared these ads would be James Lovick and McConnell Eastman. I could not say the cost of them until we obtain from the agency the cost of the space rates in these media. The official responsible would be the acting director of the branch at the time, I would presume, but I want to check that before I give it to my hon. friend officially.

I am curious to see the other ad. The photographs, I am informed, were not taken by my department, but I would be interested in seeing the other ad he has because I think he will find if he looks at them again that they all look pretty much the same.

Quite aside from any comments he might have, I must say I enjoyed the remarks of the hon. leader of the Opposition. I had rather an idea when he started as to what he was leading up to and it was rather interesting to see how long it would take before he got there. I must say I do not see much difference between Colorado and Alberta, or the others. I thank my hon. friend for sending these over. As I say, I rather think that ours stand out and the response we have had this afternoon is excellent proof of this.

As I started to say, I think the early indications of the response we are going to have from this programme show that we are going to have more inquiries than we have had heretofore, and in the final analysis I think this is the proof of any programme, Mr. Chairman.

I will get for my hon. friend the actual details of the questions he asks; I apologize for not having them at the moment but the official who might have them here, as I say, is involved in a rather important errand this afternoon. We will try to have this tomorrow.

Mr. Oliver: Did the hon. Minister say these pictures were from his own department?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, I am informed they are not.

Mr. Oliver: They are not?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No.

Mr. Oliver: That is a help anyway.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, we are speaking, I understand, to vote 2104. We have a joint budget there of several million dollars for consideration. In most large business concerns, as the hon. Minister knows, large agencies are asked to bid or to show cause why they should get the contract. In other words, big agencies put on highly competitive programmes to sell Lever Brothers or Imperial Oil on the right to handle their contract. I would suggest in this budget here, where the agency receiving this contract would get in effect $170,000 net per year to produce such falderol as the hon. leader of the Opposition has shown today, that it is an insult to our intelligence to ask the taxpayers to go for this, because as the hon. Minister agreed in his reply to the hon. leader of the Opposition—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, could I just interrupt my hon. friend—did he say $170,000?

Mr. Sargent: I figured 15 and two, Mr. Chairman, yes.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I was just wondering how he could reach that figure because the media advertising total is $490,000.

Mr. Sargent: Joint publication and advertising, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The publications are not done through an agency, Mr. Chairman. Most of the publications produced by the department are done directly by the department through the Queen's Printer.

Mr. Sargent: Then, we are talking about $70,000. I doubt if there are many publication ads not prepared through an agency. I cannot understand, if this true, and we are kind of mixed up here in my general instructions, what they are asking for an ad for The Department of Highways in the current issue for February, 1964, of Civic Administration. Here is the ad. I want to ask the hon. Minister if he paid for this ad? Did his department pay for the ad? The DHO did not pay for it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, without seeing the ad itself, I could not say, but if it is an ad which has The Department of Highways name on it—

Mr. Sargent: It certainly has.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —and was placed by The Department of Highways, it would be out of its budget.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that allotting this contract, and I would not suggest it was allotted with any political thought in mind to an agency, is like giving them a blank cheque for a performance like this today. In this regard, the Chairman will probably correct me, but we have in our presentations here, great areas of water. In submitting this—Mr. Chairman, you will rule on this, please—if you tell people through a publication that we have all these beautiful beaches in Ontario and we have an emergency situation insofar as our water levels are concerned—if the Chairman will not allow me to discuss it under this section, what section in Tourism and Information would he suggest I discuss it under? Until the Chairman rules me out of order I will continue on the need for someone to take a hand—

Mr. Chairman: Order! I did not rule you out of order in discussing publications on vote 2104 where you are now privileged to discuss them, but I did rule you out of order in discussing them on 2103.

Mr. Sargent: That gives me a very wide field and I thank you for allowing me to continue. It is a serious situation, Mr. Chairman, that the beaches in Lake Huron and Georgian Bay—

Mr. J. R. Knox (Lambton West): We looked after them earlier today.

Mr. Sargent: I must apologize, I was not in the House if they were, Mr. Chairman. But I think it is a focal point in tourism to have our beaches in the state that they could be in. I will close this off briefly by saying to the hon. Minister that this is a problem confronting tourists. We are negating the industrial aspect of this, Mr. Minister, the fact that our lake levels are down to the lowest they have been in 100 years. I think that someone in this province, whether it is your department, Mr. Minister, or the policy of the government, will have to say to Ottawa that this problem must be corrected.

I will go further than that, it goes back to the water resources, to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). It would seem to be logical that lower lake levels also mean a great lowering of the entire water table of underground rivers, streams and reservoirs that currently service our farms and communities. Last summer the drought was felt badly in many southwestern Ontario areas, as you know. You put through special legislation for it.

But these pictures show water at a high level, Mr. Chairman, and taking this thing to its final conclusion, when we see these ads that the hon. leader of the Opposition has submitted to you, for drawing people here,

I think it is stretching it very far. It is a bit of misrepresentation to show these beautiful lakes when we do not have facilities to get to them in thousands. I submit that all joking aside, someone in this province, and I suggest to the hon. Minister it might be a good starting point in his department, is going to have to say to Ottawa, that it must close these drains in Sarnia and put up dams that will put our water levels back to what they should be, because it is affecting shipping. In Collingwood they cannot launch their boats. In Owen Sound, the ships cannot get into our harbour, because of the low lake level. You have been very patient, Mr. Chairman, but someone will have to make a stand and I suggest to the hon. Minister and the hon. Prime Minister that they take a stand immediately to direct Ottawa to give us some sort of help in this regard. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2104 agreed to.

On vote 2105:

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I have a series of points on 2105. Shall we continue until 6 o'clock?

Mr. Chairman, I would wish the departments, when they put out any of their publications, that they have them proofread a little more carefully than they do. I can specifically refer to four different errors on three different publications and one of them could be most embarrassing.

For example, in the publication, Coming Events in Ontario, it lists under January to November, 1964: June 29 to July 2, the International Freedom Festival in Windsor. It could not be international if it did not include July 4. This is a slight on our American friends because this is a joint effort on the part of Windsor and Detroit-Canada and the U.S.—and it is a July 1-July 4 affair.

Another in there is September 5 and 7, Windsor-Detroit Firefighters' Field Day. There is no Detroit at all involved in this. It is the Windsor Firefighters' Field Day, and Agricultural Fair. Then there are several others that have come in the Travel News. I will not bother reading them at all, but someone in that department should be a little more careful. I have five different errors in here. It should be proofread by someone.

Now I wanted to get onto a different phase of—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I might just comment on my hon. friend's question about errors.

Unfortunately, errors do creep in because these things are done by people, but the coming events information which the department publishes is published by and large, and I think almost entirely, based on the information sent in to us by various groups, chambers of commerce, organizations, fraternal organizations and so on.

There are two complaints which we receive. One is that sometimes the information is inaccurate. I cannot tell my hon. friend at the moment about the two items which he mentioned, whether that is our error or the error of those sending in the information, but we certainly try, and I think with success, to be accurate.

The other point of course is that occasionally information is late reaching us and we are unable to publish it. Consequently, we are in the process of changing our system a bit so that instead of going ahead about six or seven months in the publications, we will perhaps have three a year instead of one or two, and have a later closing date for the receipt of information to try to keep the information more current and as full as possible.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, on that same point too, I think that the events for a whole year are a little too much to list. I think if it came through for just a month, it would be far more satisfactory, and then if there was some mistake you could correct it in a following issue.

The next point is concerning tourist promotion. I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister to consider the use of a caravan or a trailer fully equipped with a motion picture projector and anything that would be necessary to visibly portray Ontario, and to take this trailer, or trailers if necessary, throughout the bordering states in the U.S. in an effort to sell this province. Today we have to go to the people rather than have them come to us, and I think if we had such a trailer parked, let us say, for one day in Cleveland in one of the parks, the following day we could follow through and go into, probably Toledo, and the day after that we might go into South Bend. By covering states that are fairly close to the U.S. border, we could substantially increase the number of tourists that would be attracted into Ontario.

On the second suggestion, I would like the department to consider a greater use of border cities. I will refer to Niagara Falls, New York, Buffalo and Detroit. Conventions are held in these larger municipalities and if The Department of Tourism and Information would only see to it that one of its staff officers attended these conventions, or had a display booth at the conventions, you could attract a sizeable number of tourists. I know the hon. Minister this year did co-operate on one such venture with Detroit at the Cobo Hall and I have heard numerous very complimentary comments concerning that. I think if it was good once, it would probably be good if emulated more than one time.

I can understand that this may be little costly and as a result the hon. Minister may have to draw back and not expand the programme to the extent that he would like to. But I think the idea of taking advantage of conventions that are held in these larger centres, especially when they are border towns, has some merit. Likewise, the use of a trailer or a caravan that could park in any one of the parks in the large U.S. centres and in the evening show motion pictures to the residents, portraying just exactly what this province Ontario has to offer them.

It is very, very surprising to go simply 200 miles south of Windsor into Cincinnati and find the people there know absolutely nothing—I should not say “nothing,” but very little concerning what we have north of their border. I would sincerely hope that the hon. Minister will keep these two suggestions in mind and attempt, after some fashion, to implement them. I think they are worthwhile.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, just very briefly. I am informed that the matter of a trailer, suggested by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, has been discussed in the department previously. I have not had an opportunity to find out why the decision was reached. I can undertake to tell him that we will look into this again.

As far as supplying attendants at conventions is concerned, as the hon. members I think are aware, the department exhibits and displays at the major sportsmen's shows, which we have found to be very effective. And whenever possible, and when we have the staff available, we are happy to have them go to places in the U.S. and take part, either as representative of Ontario where Ontario people are attending, or on behalf of the tourist industry to promote the province. I can assure him that when we are able to expand, and as we are able to expand this programme, we will.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, one other item on this. I would suggest that the department should put, or have published in newspapers, weekend tours which could be taken by an individual. Maybe they do. But I look back at my own area; within 12 hours' drive of my community, 90 million people reside; within five hours' drive there are 50 million who could be enticed; within one hour's drive there are four million people who could be encouraged to cross that border. If weekend tours were published in the local newspapers—it might have to be an American newspaper—you could encourage those tourists to come in and, say, spend a Saturday and a Sunday making a circle tour—through Windsor, down as far as Niagara Falls maybe, crossing the border there, and circling back by way of the American side; or maybe going only as far as London, up into Sarnia and back home.

For another suggestion, too, I would recommend greater advertising concerning hostels, because not everyone has the financial wherewithal to travel by car. We would be benefiting our younger people, and educating them at the same time, if we gave a little more publicity to encourage hostel travelling by the younger generation.

The third is that the department should probably assist communities in new types of ventures. I am specifically referring to the smelt fishing season in the Lake Erie area. When the smelt do run it is nothing unusual to see 10,000 fishermen lined up, one next to the other—they are practically shoulder to shoulder all along the beaches at Point Pelée. It is a sight which, unless you see it, you will not believe at all. It is a thing which could be made into a fairly substantial and interesting tourist attraction, for not only the Ontario residents, but also for the individual across the border.

For the last suggestion, I think our ads should stress that the American dollar is $1.08 in Canada, that the American travelling here now has an eight per cent advantage over the Canadian.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, we will be glad to look at the hon. member's suggestions. In connection with the last one, this is being done, and will be in subsequent ads. One of the problems though, as far as both newspapers and magazines are concerned, particularly magazines, is the long lead time between the time copy has to be submitted and the publication is on the newsstands.

In the past, the mention of the exchange rate was not made in these media. We are, in effect, taking a calculated risk in case somebody decides to change this rate. We would then be having ads appearing which were inaccurate. But we decided that this was worthwhile because it is a very great attraction.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister make some comment on the weekend tours?

Hon. Mr. Auld: We now publish booklets and pamphlets giving suggested tours for both weekend, week, and two-week periods. One of the things we propose to be doing through the publicity branch, in other words, with editorial support, is the provision of more articles on suggested motor trips, both weekend and longer, to the daily and weekly papers in the surrounding areas, something along the lines that the Toronto Telegram has done very successfully in recent years—you know, in the fall, suggested tours to see the colours; and in the spring, to see the buds in the Niagara peninsula; and around Ottawa the tulips, and so on. This kind of material is supplied to media from our publicity branch with, perhaps, photographs and cut-lines and so on.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Minister, I mean a little more than actually what you have suggested. The Detroit Free Press carries a tour which you can take every weekend. You may leave the city of Detroit, and maybe go up to Port Huron, cross at Sarnia and then come back to Windsor. The following week you might go up to the Straits of Mackinac and back. They have one each week. I do not think it is a paid ad; I think the nature editors put them in on their own. But I would say that they are supplied by the travel and publicity department of the state of Michigan. I think a thing like this does have a lot of merit, especially as far as attracting our American tourists over is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I was not quite clear. That is what we plan to be able to do. I do not know if it will be every week or not, it will depend on staff and other commitments, but this kind of material will be prepared in the publicity branch and distributed to the media.

Vote 2105 agreed to.

On vote 2106:

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister: Does he not think there is a great duplication of effort by the various tourists' organizations in the province of Ontario? I am thinking of my own area in particular, where there are numerous organizations in the county of Bruce. These organizations are cemented together by a Bruce county organization, and then we have the Georgian Bay Development Association, which also tries to help out with tourist industry. Then we have a regional development association, and I have heard several of the secretaries of the local organizations say that, in their opinion, there is a great overlapping of tourist organizations attempting to get business in their various localities. I have a feeling that this happens in other parts of Ontario, too, and I would be anxious to hear the hon. Minister's comments.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, without going into the whole province, I think it is true that in some areas there may be more organizations involved in some facet or other of the tourist industry than perhaps is necessary.

It is rather difficult, of course, inasmuch as this department has no control over people who want to form any sort of an organization. It is rather difficult to—

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, as an example, the regional associations were started just lately. This government also started the development associations, and I agree with this but it seems to me that perhaps these regional associations are not doing any good other than financing—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, perhaps my hon. friend stepped out for a few minutes. I spoke about this a little earlier on, this afternoon. We are getting the two groups together to attempt to set out between them some sort of a division line and share responsibility. The area development associations have a much broader basis than the regional tourist councils. The area development associations are concerned with all kinds of development—particularly industrial development. The tourist councils are only concerned about the tourist industry itself, and in a smaller area.

Generally speaking, the areas have been set up to conform geographically to the same kind of attractions, or the same series of attractions and common interests. In this connection, I am sure that there have been occasions when there might have been duplications which could have, or should have, been avoided. As I mentioned earlier, we have a project, in a sense, scheduled for April in Peterborough to get the two groups together to work out, we hope, a dividing line so that they can work together and be even more effective than either group could be singly.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, what is the regional tourist council of the James Bay frontier?

Hon. Mr. Auld: What was the first part?

Mr. Troy: Who makes up the regional council of the James Bay frontier?

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner).

Mr. Troy: Does the grant go to the Ontario Northland Railway?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend is concerned about the area, it is shown in one of the folders on his desk—

Mr. Troy: No, no, I just want to know who—

Hon. Mr. Auld: Who the—

Mr. Troy: Yes, the personnel of the regional council.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that I have not the names of the officers of the association with me. As I recall, the president is Mr. Peter Hughes of Cochrane. He is president of that association. If my hon. friend wants a list of all the members—

Mr. Troy: No. He is a long way away from James Bay.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Troy: Mr. Hughes is a long, long way from James Bay.

One more question, sir. Does the Nipissing regional council get any grant from—I do not notice the district of Nipissing—it is not mentioned in the public accounts. I could not find it, sir.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The council—

Mr. Troy: The regional council.

Hon. Mr. Auld: For 1963-64 it has applied for and received $5,000.

Mr. Troy: Did it get any the year before; in 1962-63?

Hon. Mr. Auld: According to records which I have, it received the maximum grant of $5,000 in fiscal 1961-62. It received nothing in 1962-63 and it has received the maximum in 1963-64.

Mr. Troy: Could it not apply in 1962-63?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am informed it did not apply.

Mr. Troy: There is something wrong with it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have two points on this vote that I would like to raise. I am in your hands. It will take five minutes or so, or do you wish to call it a day?

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will go to the order paper. There are some second readings and bills in committee, some bills that I would like to clear in order that they will get Royal Assent before we adjourn for Easter. We will also resume the Budget debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.00 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 20, 1964

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome to the Legislature today, in the east gallery, students from William Tredway Public School, Scarborough; and, later on, in the west gallery, students from John G. Althouse Public School, Islington.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order which I think is of extreme importance.

I have never, in my 38 years in the Legislature, witnessed the concern and the anger the people of the province have expressed over the introduction of the police bill last night.

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment. I would remind the leader of the Opposition that we are only on motions at the present time. Perhaps the point of order raised would be better taken a little later when we get through the routine proceedings?

Mr. Oliver: You will give me the first opportunity, will you not?

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wanted to make a statement—

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order again, I was speaking to a point of order, which you asked me to delay until the proper opportunity arose in the proceedings of the House. I will bow to your ruling—

Mr. Speaker: With all deference to the leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Oliver: —but surely I can continue that point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I understand a point of order can be raised at any time, with perhaps the exception of during the routine proceedings.

Regarding a statement before the orders of the day, I should have knowledge of it. The Prime Minister has given me notice that he wants to make a statement before the orders of the day. The leader of the Opposition has not given me any notice of making a statement before the orders of the day. There is just that little difference between a point of order and a statement before the orders of the day.

Mr. Oliver: Yes, there is this very vital difference, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you will appreciate. A point of order has precedence over a statement, and on that point of order I want to continue and say this to the House—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): What is the point of order?

Mr. Oliver: It is a point of order. I am stating the point of order. Listen! You are usually more patient than you seem to be this morning.

The point of order is this: I am asking the hon. Prime Minister, as a person and as an individual and as the Prime Minister of this province, to remove from the order paper the iniquitous legislation which was introduced last night and which is an affront to the rights of every individual in this province. For decades and for centuries, Mr. Speaker, we have—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would like to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would—

Mr. Oliver: —given as a safeguard for individuals, and in one fell swoop this legislation wipes out all these safeguards. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister withdraw this legislation from the order paper, or dissolve the House for a general election.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

With all due deference to the leader of the Opposition, I do not think that he is speaking to a point of order.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): There could not be anything more important than—

Mr. Speaker: Order! If the Prime Minister wants to speak to the supposed point of order, he may do so; or he may speak to the statement that he wished to make before the orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I feel that the hon. leader of the Opposition has accomplished his purpose, and I will not speak to what is obviously not a point of order at all. But I will make the statement I had proposed to make, and of which I gave you notice, sir, that I would make before the orders of the day.

Of course, the statement that I make concerns the provisions of the bill amending The Police Act, which was given first reading yesterday. I felt that I should speak to the House because I have been questioned by the press, and I have made statements to them which I think should be made at the earliest opportunity to the Legislature.

I told the press, Mr. Speaker, that I, personally, would not tolerate any legislation which infringes upon or jeopardizes the personal rights and freedom of an individual.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Now, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! I am not going to have any more of this shouting across the floor. If the members opposite want to ask the Prime Minister a question when he is making a statement, they may rise and do so; but I do not want direct shouting across the floor, in a chorus.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I will just repeat that I have already told the press that I, personally, would not tolerate any legislation which infringes upon or jeopardizes the basic, fundamental, personal rights and freedoms of the individuals of this province. I also told the press that this legislation, if it does jeopardize or infringe these rights, will be changed.

I can assure the House before any further action is taken on this bill it will be completely re-examined in the light of what I have just said.

I might say, sir, that I consider that I am, in expressing this personal opinion, expressing a feeling which will be shared by all the hon. members of this Legislature, regardless of party affiliation.

I might say, in connection with crime detection and the whole matter of crime in the province, we have had various bodies looking at it in the last two or three years; and the whole problem of crime, in my opinion, has got somewhat out of perspective. However, we did not feel perhaps, in submitting the police report yesterday in full, that this was necessarily a good thing. On the other hand, we knew full well that if we were to suppress any part of it we would be criticized for so doing.

This comes about in an attempt to give us the means by which we can get at the problem of crime, its detection, its control, and its suppression in this province. This must be the paramount interest of the government. Perhaps, when this legislation was brought forward, it was directed at control of crime. If it has these side effects—of course, as I have said, they are completely repugnant to me; and I think they are completely repugnant to all of us—we will have to attempt to find another way of dealing with the problem of crime.

I believe a question has been filed here. Frankly, this legislation will go to committee and I would like to see it most thoroughly discussed there. I would like to see every facet of it examined, and I would like the public and the hon. members of this House to understand the real problem we face—the problem of controlling the criminal element in our population and, at the same time, preserving for the individual, the rights, the privileges he has by law and by custom. These are the two elements involved, and we must find a way to do both these things, to accomplish both these purposes. This legislation, I hope, will receive the very closest scrutiny and investigation, in order that we may devise the best means possible of accomplishing our aims.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Speaker, may I make an observation or two in respect of the statement of the hon. Prime Minister? I would think that is in order, even under a strict interpretation of the rules.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt if it is in order, but I will allow the member—

Mr. Oliver: Within the shadow of your doubts, may I just say a word or so? We have witnessed, this morning, quite a spectacle on the government benches. We have my hon.

friend saying, and I believe him, that he will not stand for anything which is offensive to a person in respect to his liberties before the law.

On the other side of him, yesterday, the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass), who is absent on purpose, perhaps, this morning—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: He is keeping an engagement which he has had for some time, in the Royal York Hotel. I think he will be here later on this morning.

Mr. Oliver: Well, at least, he is absent. Yesterday he introduced a bill which openly does the things with which the hon. Prime Minister says he will not be associated with. Was this bill caucused? Is this Cabinet solidarity? Do you agree on the bill? What kind of legislation are we getting from this government? I ask my hon. friend to be of one mind. His right hand does not know what his left hand is doing over there.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

I am sorry, I think perhaps that before the orders of the day we have now gone far enough with this particular statement.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, with deference, you permitted the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. Prime Minister to make a statement. If the rules—

Mr. Speaker: I will permit the member to ask a question of the Prime Minister on the subject. Is that the member's wish?

Mr. MacDonald: I have no question to ask. I want to make a brief comment in keeping with the privileges that have been extended to the other two parties.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection, if the hon. member would like—

Mr. Speaker: I must say that it is really not in accordance with the rules of the House, but since we have stretched the rules a little bit this morning, I will allow the member a few minutes.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I shall not abuse the privilege you have given me. I just want to say two or three things.

One, the spectacle we have seen on the government side in the last day or so is a pretty unseemly one and it is obvious that the government itself, at least at this hour, recognizes it.

The second, and equally important point, is that I hope we are not going to play politics with this issue. While I agree that it is desperately serious that the basic rights of individuals should be threatened in the fashion that they were, there is another threat that is almost as great. As the Royal commission says, there is another government in operation in this province and it is the government of organized crime. I hope that the government will pursue with continued vigour an alternative, and an acceptable proposition as, obviously, what they have presented is not acceptable.

So the initial onus is on them to come up with an acceptable proposition as to how we can cope with the frustrations that we have experienced in the last year or so, in both court and Royal commission, in trying to get at the facts.

Let us not lose sight of this almost equally important problem; because in the long run, it is a threat to the welfare of the community. I am just a little saddened by the willingness to play politics on the part of some people who a year ago were desperately disturbed with organized crime and now have forgotten about it completely.

Mr. Singer: What utter nonsense!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary) begs leave to present to the House the following reports:

1. Annual report of the Lakehead College of Arts, Science and Technology, June 1, 1962 to May 31, 1963.
2. Annual report of the Teachers' Superannuation Commission for the year ending October 31, 1963.
3. Report of the Minister of Education for the calendar year, 1963.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Attorney General) begs leave to present to the House the annual report of the Commissioner of the Ontario Provincial Police from January 1, 1963 to December 31, 1963.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE ONTARIO MUNICIPAL BOARD ACT

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves second reading of Bill No. 80, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Board Act.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a short explanation of the purpose of this bill is attached in the explanatory notes. The new subsections are to make it clear that The Public Service Act and The Public Service Superannuation Act apply to the members of the Ontario Municipal Board.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MUNICIPAL WORKS ASSISTANCE ACT, 1963

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 81, An Act to amend The Municipal Works Assistance Act, 1963.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION ACT

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education) moves second reading of Bill No. 85, An Act to amend The Department of Education Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE RESIDENTIAL AND FARM SCHOOL TAX ASSISTANCE GRANTS ACT, 1960-61

Hon. Mr. Davis moves second reading of Bill No. 86, An Act to repeal The Residential and Farm School Tax Assistance Grants Act, 1960-61.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SEPARATE SCHOOLS ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves second reading of Bill No. 87, An Act to amend The Separate Schools Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SECONDARY SCHOOLS AND BOARDS OF EDUCATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves second reading of Bill No. 88, An Act to amend The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE SCHOOLS ADMINISTRATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves second reading of Bill No. 89, An Act to amend The Schools Administration Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves second reading of Bill No. 90, An Act to amend The Public Schools Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CORPORATIONS TAX ACT

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer) moves second reading of Bill No. 92, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE INCOME TAX ACT, 1961-62

Hon. Mr. Allan moves second reading of Bill No. 93, An Act to amend The Income Tax Act, 1961-62.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE HOSPITALS TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. Allan moves second reading of Bill No. 94, An Act to amend The Hospitals Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member want to speak to the bill?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one or two comments in the nature of raising some questions that can be discussed either now or at a later time.

As I understand the general purpose of the bill, it is to reduce the so-called hospital tax, which is in effect an amusement tax, a tax on amusements. Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the hon. Provincial Treasurer is in a position to give any assurance to the House that any benefits that accrue from this reduction of taxes accrue to the consumer, to the user of the services; or will it become incorporated into a higher admission charge for the benefit of the person who is providing the services?

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I may say that it is very difficult to make a definite statement in this regard. In many instances the benefit will accrue to the person who pays the admission; in some others it may not. That is a frank statement.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE GASOLINE HANDLING ACT

Hon. Mr. Allan moves second reading of Bill No. 95, An Act to amend The Gasoline Handling Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PHARMACY ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health) moves second reading of Bill No. 96, An Act to amend The Pharmacy Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO NORTHLAND TRANSPORTATION COMMISSION ACT

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy Resources) moves second reading of Bill No. 97, An Act to amend The Ontario Northland Transportation Commission Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF LONDON

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park), in the absence of Mr. J. H. White (London South), moves second reading of Bill No. Pr13, An Act respecting the city of London.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

TOWN OF THOROLD

Mr. Cowling, in the absence of Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland), moves second reading of Bill No. Pr16, An Act respecting the town of Thorold.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF TORONTO

Mr. Cowling moves second reading of Bill No. Pr17, An Act respecting the city of Toronto.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF OTTAWA

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Russell) moves second reading of Bill No. Pr19, An Act respecting the city of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

TOWNSHIP OF TORONTO

Mr. A. A. Mackenzie (York North) moves second reading of Bill No. Pr34, An Act respecting the township of Toronto.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The 26th order: committee of the whole House; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

THE INDUSTRIAL SAFETY ACT, 1964

House in committee on Bill No. 3, The Industrial Safety Act, 1964.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, before section seven is carried, I would like again to raise a protest with the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) and with the government as to the apparent inadequacy of their plans for inspection.

I am not going to go over what we discussed in committee of supply, but it appears from the information given there that the government has in mind only a very modest increase in the inspection staff which will be charged with the responsibility of assuring compliance with this Act, if and when it is passed. I am going to make it plain, to the government and to the hon. Minister that they should reconsider their plans in that connection.

Section seven is really the key to the whole bill. The bill is fine, in most respects at any rate, as it stands. It looks very good; but I am submitting to the government that unless there is adequate inspection it is little more than a piece of window dressing. I think we have found that by experience with The Construction Safety Act, which as a piece of legislation, as words printed on a piece of paper, looks fine, but in actual experience has had little if any effect in reducing construction accidents.

I am submitting to the government that this bill under their present plans will be in exactly the same category. It will look fine on paper, it will be a nice piece of window dressing; but unless something more is done in exercising the powers conferred under section seven of the bill, it will be largely window dressing and will not make any significant difference in the accident situation in the province.

I would say that the old Factory Shop and Office Building Act, out of date as it was in many respects, adequately enforced, would be far better than this new up-to-date bill inadequately enforced. I think this is the sort of situation with which we are faced.

Before this bill completes its full progress through this House, I would again appeal to the government to reconsider its plans as far as the implementation of section seven is concerned.

Sections 7 to 9, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 10:

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, on section 10, has the hon. Minister taken into consideration recommendations as submitted to him by industry?

In my own local community the suggestion by one of the industries was that in section 10(1) if "any person" means an employee of the employer, we can foresee many potential abuses. If the section were to be amended to imply that "any person" was a person in responsible charge, a member of supervision or of company management, then this organization's objections would be clear. Has this been taken into consideration?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Of what organization is the hon. member speaking?

Mr. Newman: This is the Hiram Walker Limited.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: First, legislation which involves inspections, as the hon. member for Woodbine has pointed out today and on other occasions, can only be efficient if the intentions of the Act are properly carried out. Now, on the point this hon. member raises—he is speaking with reference to section 10—there are situations where the intentions of the Act can only be carried out for the protection of those in the work forces of this province, if power exists to take appropriate action on the spot. This is the first year of this bill, of this revision, and I would think that we will all have to take a look at the general intentions of this legislation and assume that there are some bona fides within the department itself. During our debate on the estimates, we went into this question of intention of inspectors and the need for accident prevention and so on. These matters were thoroughly debated at that time.

As I said on that occasion, and I will repeat it now, I think this has in mind the intent, and what is trying to be established. And, bearing in mind the reasonableness of it, we will require at least, certainly, this coming year to see how this section operates. I have pointed out before, with respect to legislation which is reviewed or revamped or updated, however you might wish to describe it, that in the application of that kind of legislation with reference to its suitability—(a) its application and (b) its suitability with respect to the times in which we live—we must not approach these amendments with any great degree of adamancy until a period of at least a year has gone by to see how the section works out.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I have no quarrel with the hon. Minister. Were I on the committee on labour I would have presented this to him at the time the bill was discussed in that committee; but I thought it would be only proper to bring it up on the floor of the House now.

Sections 10 to 17, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 18:

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, in section 18, likewise from the same organization, their comments are that no provision is being made for appeal in the act of revocation on the part of the Minister. They feel, sir, that machinery for the right of appeal should be included. Would the hon. Minister care to comment on that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This has been discussed at committee.

Sections 18 to 21, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 22:

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I was two pages ahead of you when I got up before. It is section 22 to which I would like to make some reference. Unfortunately, I am not a member of the standing committee which reviewed this bill and I have to rely on hearsay as to what happened in the committee. But, as I understand it, either under this section or some related section, the question was raised in the committee as to a method of protecting an employee—who, for good and sufficient reason, refuses to work on a machine which is unsafe—in the event that he is disciplined by his employer for the refusal.

The information I have, as to the position the hon. Minister took in the committee, was that he would look into this matter. It would appear that, if he has looked into it, he has not come up with any answer to the problem; or, alternatively, he does not consider the problem is urgent enough to require any special treatment. I would suggest to him that there is a real problem here. It will be an offence under section 22 for any person to use or operate a machine, device or thing, in or about an industrial establishment, in an unsafe manner or a manner which does not comply with the regulations. It is also an offence, or will be an offence, for a person to operate or use a machine or other device which he has reasonable cause to believe is unsafe.

I think that is a sound provision. I do not think anyone, either an employer—let me put it this way, I do not think an employer should require an employee to operate a machine he considers to be unsafe; and I do not think the employee should operate it. I also do not think an employee should operate a machine in an unsafe manner. But what if his boss tells him he must operate the machine, or he must operate it in a certain way, and if he does not, he will be fired? As far as I can see, he has no redress.

Admittedly, there is a certain problem here; an employee could refuse to operate a machine for no good reason. But if he refuses to operate a machine, and if he can show that he had good reason for refusing to operate it—or alternatively, that he had good reason for refusing to operate it in a certain way that was dangerous—then I think there should be some specific protection for him. He should have some reasonably simple remedy. Otherwise, he will find himself in the unenviable position, where he is not only endangering himself and perhaps others, but he has, I think it is, Hobson's choice that he can either break the law or be fired.

I do not know what further consideration the hon. Minister gave to this matter, but I believe it is a valid point and one on which it would be desirable to take some action.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, Mr. Chairman, the point raised by the hon. member is, frankly, one which I think is well taken—the point that there is an area here of reasonableness, or otherwise. It is in that definitive nature of the interpretation of reasonableness that the problem will probably lie, if it does. We know that most people are reasonable and responsible people; accordingly, we are really directing our attention, in many of these matters, to the minority where the trouble areas may exist.

At the committee, this matter was raised and was discussed. I undertook at the committee to apply myself, and to give my own personal attention, to the operation of this section; because it is not our intention to give the right to a supervisor, or management side employee, to arbitrarily exercise his discretion in a way that is unfair and not according to the Act. Nor, on the other hand, is it our intention in the department, and I would think in the House, to stand by and see an unreasonable interpretation applied by an employee—both examples on both sides acting in an arbitrary way.

I can see no other solution to this situation than to go ahead and direct our attention to this very problem; then, against our experience during the coming year, such amendments, in more specific form if needed, will be advanced. But, in the meantime, I will give this particular section my personal attention.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, may I ask another question of the hon. Minister? He is a lawyer—I realize it is not his function, in his ministerial capacity, to interpret the law but may I inquire of him what remedy—as the bill now stands, assuming it becomes law—an employee would have who, for good and sufficient reason, refused to work and was fired? I quite agree with the hon. Minister that this is ultimately a matter of reasonableness; and if an employee refuses to accept an order, then it will be incumbent upon him to demonstrate somehow or other, that he had sufficient reason for refusing to accept it.

But let us assume that he has sufficient reason, that he could demonstrate to a reasonable person that he had sufficient reason, what can he do if he is fired? Does he have to take action in court for wrongful dismissal?

As I understand such actions, the courts rarely, if ever, order reinstatement. They simply award certain damages to the worker, whereas under certain other laws where employees are wrongfully dismissed, it is specifically provided that there can be a remedy of reinstatement in employment, which is found more satisfactory. I had hoped there might be some such remedy available here too and that an employee might be able to take his case somewhere other than to court, which is a more difficult proceeding for the average worker.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I thought it was patent from the remarks and observations which I made that remedial action would be taken within the department.

Let us just look at this for a moment, Mr. Chairman. The Department of Labour exists for the benefit and for the useful assistance for and to both employees and employers. Now it is in that function and in that position I think we have to get the department established, and maintain it in that position.

In a situation like this, for instance, it might be said: "Well, a collective bargaining agreement exists, so a grievance can be filed." I do not think that is the solution. I think that an immediate Department of Labour step should be taken, and I have not referred to the situation where no collective bargaining agreement exists.

I think that the department inspectors should be there, and on complaint move right in and say that machine is unsafe or that machine is safe, and endeavour to use their good offices in approaching or securing—how shall I say it?—a rapprochement between the parties and settle the matter.

Failing that, the department would then take some steps with respect to the machinery itself.

We are very much concerned with this matter and it is not my view that the matter should be let go. I think the remedial processes which are available to both employers and those in the working force of this province should be well established and understood as emanating from a good Department of Labour.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is no point in pursuing this matter indefinitely and I think the hon. Minister's answer covers the problem up to a point.

I take it from what he said, that if an employee found himself in that situation his first remedy would be to phone The Department of Labour and lodge a complaint. They would dispatch an inspector who would look into the matter and perhaps get it settled.

But the department would have no power to order the reinstatement of the employee if in fact he was fired. If the employer turned out to be recalcitrant all they could do would be to take legal action against him for operating a dangerous machine or a machine in a dangerous way. I can see that the hon. Minister's position is that he wants to try the section out and see how it works, so I suppose we will not change his approach now. However, perhaps next year—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This might be a good time to just record some views with respect to the ultimate question of reinstatement. It is not my function as the Minister to get into the theories of the law in this debate, but just let us look at it this way, that we in the department feel there are certain ways of achieving a just result, dictated by common sense, in the interests of both parties. I replied on that in the first instance.

Now in the ultimate case, where you cannot achieve that, then we look to see if there is an unfair labour practice, whether sufficient notice of termination of employment has been given and so on. We are now dealing with the minority, with the small group of irresponsible people, whichever side it is on, and quite frankly I do not have very much sympathy for any of those in that irresponsible segment to which the hon. member makes reference.

I am trying to give my views on this, because we have debated this matter before and I think the subject, the general area, is fundamental to the successful operation of our department.

On the question of reinstatement, however, we could debate this ad infinitum. If the parties are really at loggerheads, then they are in the extreme position where, if I was the workman, I would not want to work in a place where I was not wanted. You get into some areas as to the desirability of such a step, quite apart from it being a right.

These are matters of which I make mention and to which I refer because I want the hon. members to know we are cognizant of some of the problems that exist. But where a wrong has been done and the ultimate remedy is not available, the hon. members can believe that I will apply myself, and the department will apply itself, to see that the man is not done wrong by it, if there is such a phrase.

Bill No. 3 reported.

THE INDUSTRIAL STANDARDS ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 5, An Act to amend The Industrial Standards Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I am having a little difficulty getting orientated to this bill since it is an amending bill. I am not quite sure if I am now under the right section to raise the matter I had in mind.

Several hon. members of the Legislature no doubt have recently received representations from master plumbers or employers in the home repair division of the plumbing industry.

It would appear to me, having read the card that one of them sent to me that they are under a misapprehension; but in order that I may reply adequately to them, I would like to ask the hon. Minister about it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What section are we on now?

Mr. Bryden: On four.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I think it probably comes under section six.

Mr. Bryden: Oh! I will wait.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Let this carry to six?

Mr. Bryden: I will assure the hon. Minister I will not raise it again under six, if he wants to deal with it now.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Let us go through the regular sequence.

Sections 4 and 5 agreed to.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, carrying on from where I was a moment ago. The objection expressed in the form letter I got is that the effect of the amendments to The Industrial Standards Act may be that wage rates that now apply in the construction phase of the industry, may be automatically applied to the repair phase of the industry as well. That is not my understanding of the law, as it previously existed or as it will now exist.

My understanding is that it is necessary to designate an industry in a zone, to have a conference in the industry in the zone, and to arrive at a schedule which is ultimately approved. This has always been the case and, as far as that procedure is concerned, my understanding is that it is not changed. I would like to have the hon. Minister's comments on this if possible.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with the matter which is raised in this sense. I have had communications from the author and the instigator of the printed post card, who has distributed them and had them mailed to various hon. members of the House, and I am also in receipt of copies of letters from various hon. members who have received letters from this same individual—all of the letters being in the same terms. Our department has been in touch with his organization but has not been able to reach the head of the firm, through illness.

The situation is this: In our opinion, the intention of this amended bill is to give us a little more leeway than heretofore. In other words, the proposed bill will give an easier opportunity of varying, shall we say, designated industries or areas to meet the needs of 1964—specialization, or whatever it may be—therefore I cannot take into account the points which have been advanced, because I do not think the man who is involved, and his organization, understand it.

The interpretation, Mr. Chairman, of the hon. member for Woodbine is correct. This situation will be in a better position to be dealt with now, than it was under the old Act.

Sections 6 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 9:

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, in regard to the proposed new section 14, which will be enacted by section 9 of this bill. It is provided in sub-section one of that proposed new section, that where a magistrate finds there has been default of payment and convicts for failure to pay the prescribed wages, he may order the employer to pay the director—as an additional penalty, it is stated—the full amount of the wages found to be unpaid to the employee under the schedule. Then, and I come to the part of the sub-section in which I am interested, it is stated:

The director in his discretion may direct that the whole or a part of such wages be either forfeited to the Crown or paid to the employee or employees entitled thereto.

I am in favour of the general procedure set forth in section 14; that, if a magistrate convicts, he will order unpaid wages to be paid to the director. But it seems to me that the discretion given to the director here, as it is worded at any rate, is a little broad.

I would say that the director should, without question pay the money to the employee or employees entitled thereto. If he is unable to locate one or more of those employees, and his inability continues for a matter of two or three years, then I would think that it would be appropriate for the money to go to the Crown. It has to go somewhere, but I do not see why he should, on the face of it, have any option in the matter. This money belongs to the employees concerned and I think it should be handed over to them, unless a situation arises where the director cannot locate them, and where that inability to locate continues for a substantial period of time.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, the situation is this, and it may be taken by the hon. members of the House and the public from my statement now, as to what our intention is. It is our intention that in every bona-fide case, the wages to be paid direct shall go to the employee under the Act.

The hon. member for Woodbine has raised the question of an inability to locate someone. That would be one situation. But that is not the one, the real situation, which was in our minds when this section was drafted. It involves cases where collusion exists between both the employer and the employee; and while it may seem somewhat strange for this to be a reason, I think that I will have made my point when I point out that this was the inspiring reason for the wording of the Act as it is presented.

Again, I would think, and of course it will be understood, that if collusion exists, and the employee was a wrongdoer as well the employer—and we do not want the employer to get away, or be relieved of his obligation to pay that money—then the employee is not entitled to benefit, because in the law, as it is described, he does not come before any of us with clean hands. Hence the forfeiture provision.

I think that this is a section we might very well note, for a year hence, to review, in the light of the remarks made by the hon. member and myself today.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think that a rather dangerous principle is creeping into the law at this point, in light of the explanation the hon. Minister has just given. If that factor is in the mind of the department, as well as the factor of inability to locate, then it seems to me that the director may find himself in the position of being a sort of judge of the conduct of the employee.

My experience in administration of labour legislation—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, that could not exist, because this section only applies to the directive, as I understand it, of the court.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, but this is a case where only an employer is on trial in the court. The employer has been charged with the offence of failing to pay the prescribed wage. He is convicted, and then the court may issue an order that he must pay the unpaid wages to the director. The employee has not been in court at all. He has not been charged with anything under this section and yet the director could, in his discretion, decide that the employee also was culpable, and therefore would be penalized in the sense that he would not receive the wages to which, under the law, he is entitled.

I would suggest—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Do you not agree that the element involving human nature itself, and the weaknesses and strengths of individuals, runs through all legislation? This is not a new principle.

As a matter of fact, the Sergeant-at-Arms might let the sword slip and cause some damage. Should we take his sword away from him now? Well, hardly! And this applies to the operation of life, and, indeed, our civilization.

The principle that is being objected to is not a new one. It exists in The Minimum Wage Act, for instance. It has existed for some years. So this is not a new principle. I think the key to the problem is the explanation which I have given as to the intent of the legislation.

Mr. Bryden: I do not quite grasp the analogy of the Sergeant-at-Arms. Sorry!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is the fallacies of human nature that the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, I suppose if all human beings were perfect we would not have to have a Legislature or any laws, but I am also still concerned about the kind of principles we have in our laws. The Minimum Wage Act as a whole has not been subject to review by this Legislature for a long time and I do not believe that any section that incorporates the principles enunciated here has been before this House recently—certainly not while I have been here. If it is in The Minimum Wage Act, I think it is wrong in The Minimum Wage Act, just as I think it is wrong here.

The problem of collusion, admittedly, is a problem, although in my opinion not too serious a problem. I would say that if an employee, acting entirely as a free agent, was in collusion with an employer to defeat the purposes of the law, he should be subject to penalty in the same way as the employer. I believe this is so under the Act as it now stands. But I think if he is going to be found guilty of an offence of that kind it should be by a court. But here the director has a discretion. I am not casting any reflections on any individual as director, I am just talking about the principle of the director having discretion to decide that an employee was in collusion with the employer and therefore to deprive him of the wages which would be rightfully due to him.

I may say that in my experience with the administration of labour legislation—which admittedly took place a good many years ago, but I suspect human nature is much the same now as it was then—there rarely is collusion between an employer and an employee in the true sense. An employee, in an unorganized plant at any rate, is definitely in an inferior bargaining position. He may knowingly accept a lower wage than the law requires, but only under duress, so to speak, only because his job is at stake. He knows he will be fired if he does not accept it and so therefore he is, shall we say, bullied into a breach of the law.

I would say that an employee in that position should not be penalized by failing to get the wages for which the law calls. I do not think that the director should be in a position to make a judgment in a matter of that kind, as to whether or not he freely conspired with the employer to defeat the purpose of the Act. I think it should be assumed that he did not freely conspire, that if he did accept a lower than a lawful wage it was either through ignorance or under duress; therefore he should be entitled to receive the lawful wage unless the contrary is proved in a court of law.

I do not think that the Minister should have this discretion. I object to this principle. In a small way I would say it has—and I admit it is a small way—it has the same objectionable feature as the bill introduced into the House yesterday, which has been objected to so strenuously. It gives to a director, an administrative official, a power to adjudicate; and I do not think he should have that power.

I think he should have to pay the money over to the employee, and if he feels that it would be a grave miscarriage of justice to do it, then I think he should take action against the employee in a court, the same way as he would against the employer. Only on that basis, only on a conviction, should he have any authority to withhold from the employee money which, under the law, is payable to the employee.

The hon. Minister is taking the position, on the various pieces of legislation he is bringing in, that he wants to try them out for a while; but I would like to see him rephrase this clause right now. I am not going to move an amendment. I do not have the words anyway. If I did, I would probably move it.

I think there is a bad principle involved. There may not be any abuse for many years to come, but some time in the future some person may suffer as a result of this. I do not think we should pass laws that would permit such a possibility, even in an individual case.

There is another matter relating to section nine. This is quite a large section because it re-enacts several sections of the old Act. The portion I wish to refer to now is the proposed new section 16 of the Act which prohibits an employer from discharging or threatening to discharge or discriminating against an employee for exercising certain rights or carrying out certain duties under the Act.

This, of course, is a sound principle. It appears in other statutes, including The Minimum Wage Act, and I have no doubt it might have been in the old legislation in some form or other. The reason I am calling attention to it is that it does not provide a satisfactory procedure for a remedy. The only procedure would be for an employee to go to court to take action in the courts for damages against the employer for wrongful dismissal, or whatever the technical terminology may be.

Mr. Chairman, it has been found time after time in the administration of labour legislation that that is not an adequate procedure. In The Labour Relations Act we worked out a totally new procedure—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But a moment ago the hon. member was saying he did not want the speedy procedure, that he wanted things to be taken out of the director's hands and put into the court's hands. Now he is saying that the courts are not the right place.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think we should deal with each specific matter on its merits. I do not think that speed is the matter I am particularly concerned about, although that can be a problem. I think the effectiveness of the procedure in each case is what we should be concerned about.

It has been demonstrated in the administration of law relating to labour relations that for an employee to go to court to seek a remedy for wrongful dismissal when he has exercised his rights to a freedom of association has been totally ineffective; and in every jurisdiction in this country special procedures have been worked out. The same is true of the Ontario Human Rights Code. We have special procedures to protect people who may be wrongfully dismissed or otherwise discriminated against.

There is no special procedure here and I suggest to the hon. Minister that the problem is exactly the same. I would suggest that he should put into this bill the procedure as it is now in The Labour Relations Act or the human rights code. Under that procedure an employee can lodge a complaint, then the Minister can set up a commission of inquiry and the commission of inquiry can make a recommendation to him. He can then make an order, which is enforceable in the courts, on the basis of that recommendation, and the order may, among other things, require reinstatement of the employee.

I suggest that a simple way of doing this would be simply to provide that the procedure to be followed is that which is already set forth in the human rights code; or, alternatively, just take the clauses out of the human rights code and put them in here. But I suggest to the hon. Minister that the section, as it now stands, will be a dead letter since a magistrate's court has been found totally inadequate as an instrument for dealing with this particular type of violation of the law.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Chairman, if I may, in the absence of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts), suggest that it must be some correction in the phraseology or the grammar. I have not The Crown Timber Act available at the moment to compare it. If we read all of paragraph 2, we are cutting out the sentence:

If the cutting of the timber in respect of which a licence is granted is not completed during the term of the licence—and putting in its place, in lieu thereof:

Where a licence has been granted under subsection 2 and the cutting of the timber authorized by the licence was not completed before the licence expired—by striking out further in the third line, it would appear that it is to provide, you might say, an automatic renewal for a licence which has been granted for a definite term; and if the timber has not been all cut, the licence holder would have the opportunity of continuing to complete the cutting under that licence.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. R. A. Eagleson (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks made to this House on Friday, March 13, I mentioned that unless Ontario lawyers took it upon themselves to involve themselves in the legal aid plan, as presently constituted, in the same manner as those lawyers in York North, then the legal aid plan requires revision. I further indicated that, in my opinion, Ontario lawyers would not take such a stand as the York North lawyers and, as such, the whole programme must be re-examined.

I referred, at that time, to the New York city legal aid society, and also to the English system of legal aid. Under the English system, you will recall, the government guarantees up to 85 per cent of the cost of civil legal aid and up to 100 per cent of the cost of criminal legal aid. An area committee considers the applications of each accused person and decides how much the accused can afford to contribute to his own defense. I would now like to refer to what is known as the "public defender" system.

It was first introduced in 1911 in certain United States jurisdictions, and involves the appointment of an official who acts as the counterpart, or the opposite number, of a Crown attorney or district attorney. The system is generally financed by the county or the state, and this individual and his department undertake the defence of those accused who cannot afford counsel.

Such a system is presently in operation in Cook County, Illinois. In that particular jurisdiction the public defender has a staff of some 12 lawyers, four office workers and four investigators. These people, among them, undertake the defence of indigent persons. The restrictions in that particular public defender system are: that only those charged with felonies are eligible; and the accused can only make use of the public defender system if the particular accused person has his problems with criminal legal aid rather than with civil legal aid. In other words, only those persons indicted for offences can take advantage of the public defender system.

There are four major reasons why Ontario should adopt a system similar to that presently in operation in England. First, it includes both criminal and civil legal aid. Second, it provides for the notification of every person as to his rights and the availability of legal aid to him. Third, the government pays the fee. Fourth, the court appoints the lawyers. The fact that persons are made aware of their rights is perhaps the most important aspect of the English system.

Most accused persons in Ontario find themselves before the courts for the first time, and often have not the foggiest notion of their rights or of the availability of legal aid. In certain instances, lawyers in Toronto have been known to attend at the cells in City Hall and indicate to accused persons that they can resolve their problems as long as the person approached retains that particular lawyer. Their words, in effect, are: "We will look after the magistrate, we will look after the police, we will look after everyone as long as you retain this particular person."

Further, certain other lawyers have been known to demand fees from an accused person who is eligible for legal aid. An information sheet setting out all the rights of the accused, and the availability of legal aid, would put an end to these disgusting techniques practised by certain unscrupulous lawyers right here in this city.

The civil rights of the individual would be better protected if a system similar to the English one was adopted. Some magistrates in our province are treating unrepresented accused persons in a grossly unfair manner. A good illustration of what is going on in our courts can be taken from what recently occurred in a Toronto magistrate's court.

At that time the magistrate indicated to certain persons, who were accused of an offence in violation of The Liquor Control Act, that the fines on that particular morning would be the sum of $10, and he solicited pleas of guilty on that basis. Then, when certain of these accused persons indicated that they were not inclined to plead guilty, he indicated to them, after a conversation with the Crown attorney, that the bail would be set at the sum of $15, in cash. So here was an accused person faced with a quandary: "What do I do? Do I plead guilty and pay $10, or do I plead not guilty and leave $15 here?" This has to be removed.

Many unrepresented persons plead guilty to offences, even though they are completely uncertain as to their legal rights. Police officers often mention to accused persons that it will be much easier and much less expensive to plead guilty to the charges with which they are faced.

It is only after a conviction has been registered that the accused person seems to realize the problem with which he is faced. He then goes to a lawyer, and at that stage, the only remedy is that of appeal and this constitutes even more expense.

This concludes my remarks on the legal aid system and I would now like to discuss certain other matters that deal with the protection of our civil liberties.

Different groups have been organized to protect these liberties, but even more guidance must come from lawyers themselves because they are most familiar with the statutes that guarantee and protect these rights. As was pointed out recently in an editorial in the Toronto Daily Star, and I quote:

The whole society, business, unions, ethnic minorities, religious groups, must provide the financial backing but the initial must come from lawyers, from the key men in the Canadian and the Ontario Bar Associations, from professors of law, from the young and socially minded lawyers. All of these must provide the drive, the legal skills and especially the ability to recognize cases in which basic rights are in peril.

One way to ensure that civil liberties would be protected to one degree, would be that legislation should be introduced that would allow costs to a successful applicant in a criminal appeal. As the law presently stands, an appeal is often prohibitive and it is often less expensive for a convicted person to pay the fine than to retain a lawyer to undertake an appeal.

Another matter that should be looked into with a great deal of thought at this time is the matter of bail in our province. As the law presently stands, an indigent accused often finds himself languishing in jail, whereas a person who has been more successful or is fortunate enough to have friends to raise the bail, finds himself free. We have on occasion had accused persons in different jails in our province for weeks and even months. When they do appear before the courts, and often are ultimately acquitted, they find themselves free.

But free to go back to what? Oftentimes they have no job to which to go back. They have no funds because they have not been able to work in the meantime. They often have no home. Whereas as I indicated previously, the person with some degree of wealth who can raise bail is faced with none of these problems.

It has become obvious to most lawyers in Toronto that certain of our cohorts have chosen to prey on desperate accused persons who are unable to raise sufficient cash bail. These individuals provide the bail at usurious rates and legislation must be introduced that will stop this scurrilous practice.

Another aspect of bail that might be changed, particularly in Metropolitan Toronto, is in the situation where bail is required when a person is accused of a driving offence or a minor offence. As it is presently adopted, in Metropolitan Toronto at any rate, a person is taken into custody by the police officer in charge. Bail is generally set at the sum of $200 cash. The accused person is allowed the one phone call to which the police officer entitles him. He makes his call, and perhaps if the wife or relative of the accused is not home, he finds himself languishing in jail.

On a weekend it is even worse, because if the accused cannot raise the bail, then he must stay overnight, often for two nights, in that particular jail; namely, the Don jail that is the subject of every grand jury report that I can remember in York county.

This Don jail situation must be changed to the degree that a person can go to jail and be treated with respect, because accused persons are not convicted persons. This is something that must be remembered by our society and by our government.

There is no reason, to my way of thinking Mr. Speaker, that an accused person, for a certain driving offence and lesser offences, cannot be sent home, in a cab perhaps, after the alleged offence and have the opportunity to spend the night in his own home and openly be summoned for the offence. I know that this is common practice in certain other areas, but Metropolitan Toronto chooses to ignore it.

I would suggest that our government move to ensure that, if possible, if it can be worked out, that the accused person should be allowed the right to be summoned for a minor offence when the availability is there under the statutes.

I sincerely trust, Mr. Speaker, that some of the suggestions I have made will receive the same response as certain comments I made in my participation in the Throne Speech debate on inter-faith adoption. I have been advised by The Department of Public Welfare that the department is quite content to leave all matters pertaining to the adoption of the children in the hands of the children's aid society.

The Metropolitan Toronto Children's Aid Society recently announced that they would not object to inter-faith adoptions or to adoptions by agnostics. It would be gratifying, Mr. Speaker, if every other society in this province were to follow this forward step taken by Metro Toronto. But certain society directors have already indicated that they are dissatisfied with the Metropolitan Toronto proposal and feel disinclined to adopt it.

In order to ensure that adopting parents will not be discriminated against because of their religious beliefs, I feel that once and for all the department should send a directive to each of the societies pointing out that religion and race are not the dominant factors in adoption, but that the welfare of the child is of paramount importance.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read a letter addressed to the editor of the Globe and Mail which was published recently. It was from Mr. Benjamin Schlesinger, PhD., Assistant Professor, School of Social Work,

University of Toronto. It is as follows and I quote:

It is very heartening that the Metropolitan Toronto Children's Aid Society has changed its policy to allow atheists and Jewish applicants to adopt children in need of a home. We must all congratulate the board executives and social workers of this agency which is the largest private child welfare agency in North America. It is about time that our community realizes that what is at stake in adoptions, is the welfare of the child and not theological arguments and outdated regulations which have deprived many of our Canadian children of a warm, sympathetic and kind home.

I might just interject at this point, it will be of utmost importance and I am sure it will impress itself on my hon. friends to the right, and I quote again:

The province of Ontario is in the forefront of child welfare programmes in North America. In 1962 we had 14,401 children in care of 55 children's aid societies of our province. We spent $8,222,419 for direct care of these children. In the same year 5,103 children were adopted, of whom 3,971 were placed by our children's aid societies. The illegitimacy rate in our province is about 5,800 births per year.

We all hope that this important decision made by courageous and forward looking citizens of our community will be followed by all the other 54 societies in our province, including the societies which primarily deal with Catholic families and children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak today on the subject of a bill introduced and read for the first time in the House of Commons on Tuesday, March 17, which bill is entitled and I quote: "An Act to establish a comprehensive programme of old age pensions in Canada payable to contributors and survivors."

I am moved to speak, sir, not because of technicalities but because, as a Canadian citizen, I am deeply concerned with and disturbed by many aspects of this proposed legislation.

Not the least of these is that the federal government purports to call this bill the Canada pension plan, knowing full well that it is not a Canada plan, not a national plan, Quebec having given notice that it will not participate in the federal plan but will undertake a pension scheme of its own.

I say that this is of importance not only to the hon. members of the House of Commons, but also to the hon. members of this House, for it brings us all to the point where we, as members of the Legislature of the province of Ontario, must face the question as to whether this province should participate in the pension plan proposed by the federal government or whether Ontario should have a plan of its own.

It seems to me that this problem must now be met head on by this House and by the people of Ontario. It is obvious from a statement made by the Rt. hon. Mr. Pearson and his associates that the federal government intends to put its pension Act into effect at the earliest possible moment. It intends to bring this into effect even though the province of Quebec has stated clearly that it will not participate in the scheme. It intends to proceed with this bill even though it has done little more than pay lip service to the various provincial governments in ascertaining and giving effect to their views or their questions raised on the matters of administration, operation and other major problems arising out of their Act.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in considering the question of what is best for the people of Ontario in the matter of pension plans, there are certain issues which must be considered. The first of these issues is the matter of the right of Ontario, as opposed to the right of the federal government, to enact old age pension laws under The British North America Act.

In order for Ontario to go along with the federal Act, the federal plan, and I do not call it the Canada pension plan for, as I have said, it is not a Canada pension plan so long as Quebec does not participate. In order for Ontario to participate in the federal plan, it will be necessary for this province to give up all its rights to enact laws relating to pensions, the right to retain the capital monies paid into the pension fund, and the right of all the people of the province of Ontario to have the maximum benefit from the ability to control and invest these monies within the province of Ontario.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: May I have it at the end from the hon. member, Mr. Speaker?

In the end it will be necessary for Ontario to decide whether it should give up these constitutional rights, which the Fathers of Confederation very wisely determined should be left in the hands of the provinces. This question must be answered by this Legislature, not by the Parliament of Canada. I suggest to all of us that this responsibility is ours alone.

The second issue which must be considered is this: What are the comparative economic results for the people of Ontario if Quebec stays out of the federal plan and Ontario stays in? The result, sir, would be that the Quebec government will retain, for its own purposes, 100 per cent of the pension monies paid to it by the people of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, I understand that in 30 years' time the Quebec government will thus have accumulated some $8 billion, all of which would be invested by Quebec within the province of Quebec. This vast sum of money will be available to that province for the development of services such as hospitals, roads, schools and all those things which are constantly demanded in this House and which we, in this province, cannot hope to deal with without adequate and sufficient funds.

We have seen Quebec's position, but what of Ontario under the federal plan? We in this province have been offered by Ottawa, on a take-it-or-leave-it basis, only 50 per cent of the monies which would accumulate in their hands out of Ontario. In other words, on a comparative basis, the money available to Ontario for investment in its own future and in its own services, so urgently needed, would be one-half of that available to the people of the province of Quebec. Have we in this House, sir, any right to put the people of the province of Ontario in such an inequitable position? I say to this House, and I say to the government of Ontario, that we do not.

Mr. Speaker, the people of this province want, and are entitled to, a comprehensive programme of old age pensions payable to contributors and survivors. Furthermore, I am convinced that the people of Ontario are going to have such a plan whether it is the creation of the federal government or the work of us in this House. Let there be no mistake, sir, about my belief in this regard.

It is also my view that the government of Ontario, with its experience and background in the administration of funds and commissions, with its closeness to the people of this province, and with the great trust which the people of Ontario have in it, is in a position to provide for our people a programme of old age pensions which can be far superior to the proposed federal plan.

Mr. Speaker, I have raised certain questions and issues which, it seems to me, are important in determining whether Ontario should take the same position as Quebec—that is, opt out and operate its own plan—or whether it should go into the federal plan. In my view, sir, if Quebec stays out we must stay out. If Quebec goes in Ontario should go in.

I take this position for the following reasons. The first, sir, is that, with Quebec opting out and thereby able to retain and invest for its own purposes all the capital monies paid into its pension treasury, the people of Ontario would be at a drastic economic disadvantage in comparison to the people of Quebec. That is to say, the people of Ontario would be less than the economic equals of the residents of the province of Quebec, at a time when economic equality seems to be the goal, and a very proper one, of the province of Quebec.

Second, sir, in comparison to the federal plan, Ontario can provide at least equal, if not better, pension and survivor benefits.

Third, in comparison to a federal plan, an Ontario pension scheme could be better administered, for the simple reason that the vast experience of our own government, which is so much closer to the people, is such that the administration and operation of the scheme would, in fact, be substantially better.

Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Bryden: That is not what this government has done.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: I am presenting my own speech, I would say to the hon. member who has interrupted. Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to continue?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: I propose to continue in any case.

The final reason why I consider that if Quebec stays out the Ontario government must produce and operate its own pension scheme is this, and it is perhaps the most significant reason of all: We have heard a great many speeches by Mr. Pearson in connection with Canadian unity, in connection with co-operative federalism, and in connection with biculturalism, bilingualism and Confederation.

Mr. Pearson's words on the subject of unity have always been very moving, and I believe he means what he says. However, sir, it is most disturbing to me, and I am sure it is most disturbing to all other Canadians concerned with the living problem of keeping Canada together, that this legislation now put forward by the federal government, which is its first major social legislation, is an Act which will do more to destroy Confederation, will do more to further the cause of separatism, will do more to split Canada, than any other event which has occurred since 1867.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Oh, poppycock!

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Even Diefenbaker does not agree with that.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: I am making my own speech, I may say to the hon. members in Opposition.

Mr. R. A. Eagleson (Lakeshore): I like it.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: I do not care about speeches in other Houses. I am making it to the hon. members of this House, and to no one else in this country.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Singer: Let the press take note.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: The result of the proposed action of the federal government, if carried out, is clear. It will violate the principle that the essence of social security—and I think some of my hon. friends opposite will agree with this—on a national basis, is an equality of burden and an equality of benefit for all citizens. This federal Act will produce two kinds of Canadians. There will be the residents of the province of Quebec who, being outside the Canada pension plan, will enjoy different pension benefits and different burdens to a resident in any other part of Canada. On the other hand, there will be the Canadians who reside in all the rest of Canada.

This Act of the federal government will create the Quebec-Canadian and the other Canadian. It will cause an enormous economic cleavage and, in my opinion, sir, will be an irreversible step in the economic partitioning of our relation.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this kind of partition is exactly what the Fathers of Confederation intended to prevent. I believe that Ontario, and indeed every province in Canada, must seriously question whether it will go into the Canada pension plan without Quebec. If the government at Ottawa can convince the government of the province of Quebec that it should come into the Canada pension plan—and I stress, Mr. Speaker, that it is the obligation of the federal government alone to bring in Quebec—and if all other provinces are prepared to come in, then it will become in fact a Canada pension plan. Otherwise, Mr. Speaker, in the interests of the people of Ontario, and indeed in the interests of the people of Canada, and the unity of this nation, I urge the government of Ontario to institute its own plan; and most significantly, sir, its own plan and a new plan establishing a comprehensive programme of old age pensions providing benefits thereunder at least equal to those provided by the proposed federal Act.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, like every hon. member I would like to congratulate you on your position and on the impartiality which you show.

I would say, sir, that as I think of your position I think of the centuries of struggle that have taken place in order that we can have the freedom of Parliament today. I think, sir, of the men who believe strongly in the rights of the individual.

I go back, sir, to such struggle, about which indeed every child in Ontario knows—the fight in order that in our British system we could have such things as the Magna Carta; the great struggle of men strong with conviction, in order to provide this cornerstone which now is handed down to us. I think of such a fight in order to get The Habeas Corpus Act. Again, sir, a struggle that generations of men put up so that today we can stand free in this Legislature and free in our British society.

Then, sir, as I look at you, in your position, symbolizing this freedom, I cannot help but think of the shame that took place yesterday when these cornerstones of freedom were utterly disregarded by the man in our society, in our province, who is supposed to stand at the head of our legal system, to symbolize the deep conviction which should be the freedom of our society. I think of the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) presenting a bill to this House which has ignored six of the fundamental freedoms that are the right of every citizen of Canada.

He has ignored the right not to incriminate oneself. He has ignored the right to have public hearings when one's freedom is in jeopardy. Some may make light of it, but I assure you, when we look at the heritage of our people, I assure you that there are those of us who have fought not only in battle for this, and we all will fight in this House to preserve that freedom for the people of Ontario.

The hon. Attorney General has ignored the right to privacy; he has ignored the right to counsel; he has ignored the right of freedom of speech and expression; he has ignored the right of any individual to refrain from making a statement to the police, if that is his desire. All these things have been ignored by the man who stands as the head of our law enforcement department.

An hon. member: Not only ignored them but trampled on them.

Mr. Thompson: Then he himself has recognized what he has done. He has said that the legislation which he was proposing would be drastic, dangerous and terrible legislation in an English common law country. The Globe and Mail, a paper which usually might have some sympathy for the cause of this government, has an editorial on its front page in which it refers to this bill as a "Bill of Wrongs" and it suggests that this proposed bill—and I would like to read some words from this—it refers to hon. Mr. Cass saying of the legislation: "It is drastic and dangerous and it is terrible legislation in an English common law country."

Then the Globe and Mail goes on and I quote:

These are the precise reasons why the legislation should never have been introduced.

These are the precise reasons why it should never have been contemplated. These are the precise reasons why it must immediately be withdrawn.

This legislation could make Ontario a police state. It would give the Ontario Police Commission powers comparable with those of the OGPU or the Gestapo.

Where did this legislation emanate? We understand it came from the Cabinet. It came from the men who are elected in free elections; and they would turn this country, by such legislation, into a police state.

I, sir, speak as my hon. leader (Mr. Oliver) did this morning. We speak with the strongest conviction; that we will fight this legislation. We do not see this, as the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. MacDonald) said "as some political battle"; we see this as a battle for the sanctity of the people, a battle that we have to fight.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: Eternal vigilance is the price of freedom. As I listen to what the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party, a man who has told us that he stands for principles—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: I always felt they were for the principles of freedom; but when he turns around, sir, and suggests that you throw the baby out with the bath water, because that is what he infers—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I am talking of today because it is today we are facing this problem, and I would say—

An hon. member: That is right!

Mr. Thompson: I would say that we heard the peep of a mouse from him when we are endangered. We in this province are endangered with the taking away of six fundamental rights.

An hon. member: Right!

Mr. Thompson: And from a man who says he stands for freedom, I say again we heard a peep.

Let me get back to this, sir. This took a Cabinet decision in order to have this legislation passed for first reading in the House. If I could come back to the principle of our British system, Cabinets must stand in solidarity and therefore every man in the front benches is as guilty as the hon. Attorney General. I would say, as I read the paper, that I understand that the hon. Attorney General has said the government intends to have the amendment adopted at the current session of the Legislature.

Mr. R. A. Eagleson (Lakeshore): Did the hon. member not hear the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) this morning?

Mr. Thompson: This is what I am coming to, if the hon. member will be patient.

Mr. Eagleson: It is about time.

Mr. Thompson: We saw conflict in Cabinet solidarity. A decision was made, a bill was presented to the Cabinet. Have we heard any remarks from the hon. Attorney General to retract his statement that he is going to have these amendments passed in this session? No, sir, we have not.

Do hon. members notice what the hon. Prime Minister said in his remarks that he personally—he personally—was against any infringement of the rights of the individual? I suggest he should think of himself not only personally but publicly.

He has the office of Prime Minister of Ontario and he stands with his Cabinet, and his Cabinet passed a bill and brought it before the House for first reading. What kind of chaotic government have we in Ontario when you have the hon. Attorney General bringing in a bill for first reading and you hear no more from him, and then you have the hon. Prime Minister standing up and apologizing for the dangerous aspects of this bill?

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would like to inform the member that we are speaking on the Budget. I do not want to be unduly restrictive but he is pretty well confining himself to a bill which has just been placed on the order paper. I admit you can have a wide latitude, during the Budget debate, on these matters, but I would hope that he would also speak on budgetary matters and have this discussion on the bill when it comes before the House.

Mr. Thompson: I am just going to move into that, sir. At the moment I am talking on principles of good legislation, and if it pinches certain feet, then it pinches them.

I am talking about one of our great traditions, which is the solidarity of Cabinet. And I am suggesting that if there is a decision by one Minister, then all the Cabinet stands behind it. And if you have the leader of a government refuting the remarks of one of his Cabinet, then I suggest that he has the fullest obligation to suggest that that Minister of the Cabinet must resign.

I would also suggest to you, sir, that, in our system, the man who holds a public office for the enforcement of law throughout our province should have imbued within him a deep sacred belief in the rights of the individual. This is the thing he should be fighting for. I suggest, sir, if such a man brings in legislation, or proposes legislation—I am not referring to any in particular—which is abhorrent to the very principles of our democracy, then such a man is not fit to hold that high office.

With that, sir, I will move on to other remarks I wish to make with respect to the dangers of arbitrary government. Before doing so, I would like to say that I have felt that this Legislature, over the past week, has been refreshed by the contributions of hon. members of this House. I would naturally refer to my own colleagues but I am making a point of referring to the hon. members on the government side.

In the past we have listened to an almost obsequious murmur from hon. government members, but now we are finding that they are standing up—and I can think of many of them; I have enjoyed reading Hansard—and infusing new ideas. Indeed, some of them are standing up at the risk, as they suggest, of being in great disfavour with the government, and stating what they feel are personal principles. I think, for example, of the way the hon. member, who just stood up, spoke of legal rights and the need for legal rights. I think, perhaps, he could have enlarged on that further, in view of conditions which shadow our Legislature today.

What I am interested in, at this point, is to look at another crisis—and I presume I can talk on this crisis as well, because it seems to me that one of the situations we have, with respect to the government of Ontario, is that things seem to have to develop to a crisis before we get action from government. I think, for example, of the situation of crime, and I am coming back—without referring to any particular bill—to the situation of crime in Ontario. I am thinking that there was almost a “John the Baptist” voice crying in the wilderness, crying out to alert the people that there was something very serious, a cancer, in the growth of our society. That voice, sir, was the voice of our previous leader, John Wintermeyer. And it took courage, which he showed on many occasions—he showed it by not only making certain statements in the House but walking outside the House to make them.

I say that John Wintermeyer has done a great service for the people of this province, in alerting the people to a situation warranting considerable apprehension. I say it must be apprehension, if we read the report which was presented to us yesterday. It must be apprehension, if we find that the government is contemplating drastic action. I certainly hope they will not go through with the kind of action they are suggesting, but they are contemplating such action. Yet we heard previously, sir, that an Attorney General, when this was broached, blushed it off. So now we have a situation of the government having to do something drastic about this.

So I come to another example of crisis. I come to the example of the lack of hospitals and the lack of staff. Once again we find another Cabinet Minister sloughing off the very real crisis we have about the health of our people, suggesting to us that there really is not a lack of hospital beds, giving us figures which we find are twisted. We even have doctors suggesting that he must have either twisted them or been hoodwinked in the approach he took to present, or cover up the very drastic need there is in this province.

In Metropolitan Toronto, there is a shortage of 2,360 active treatment beds. This was established last July by a highly qualified committee for a survey of hospital needs in Metro Toronto.

How did the hon. Minister of Health act on this information? He ignored it. He shrugged it off. He told the House, sir, that there was a surplus of beds in Ontario; and when you are complacent in thinking there is a surplus of beds, you are not going to take drastic action to meet an emergency.

I would suggest that either the hon. Minister was hoodwinked or else, sir, he was not giving out the facts and wanted us to be hoodwinked. Today we hear, as we have heard from the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party, that the hon. Minister of Health uses this argument. He suggests that it is political to criticize him. When my hon. leader (Mr. Oliver) stood up trying to fight for the fundamental rights of the people of this province, we heard from the hon. leader of the new party that he was being political. Well, if that is political, I am proud that it was political.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: Let me return to the fact of hospital beds. In the Canadian Medical Association Journal of last week, Dr. T. P. Morley asks:

Was Ontario Minister Dr. Matthew Dymond hoodwinked by the Ontario Hospital Services Commission over the hospital bed situation, or was he less than frank with the provincial Legislature when he said some time ago that he knew of only 60 beds in Metro idle for the lack of nurses?

I quote Dr. Morley because some people may suggest that only politicians are raising this issue. It is not so.

The point is that the doctors are the people who are very aware of how serious this problem is. I would say, sir, that if it comes down to the point that if a Minister of Health is asked by competent men in their field if he has been less than frank, or whether he has been hoodwinked, then I suggest that if he has either of those attributes he cannot inspire much confidence in his ministry.

What is the hon. Minister doing about this? We have heard two statements from him. One of them is almost pathetic in its irony. I looked through Hansard to see remarks that the hon. Minister had made recently through this crisis, when we wanted to hear a call from him, to show that action was going to be taken. One of the statements he made was an aside which was quoted in Hansard during the estimates of The Department of Reform Institutions. I quote: "Give me a room in Millwood. Give me a room in Millwood."

Well, sir, the last thing that I would want is that the hon. Minister should be sent to Millwood, but if Millwood is where we are going to get action from him, then by all means send him there.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Millbrook!

Mr. Thompson: Millbrook! I beg your pardon. It is one of the security places.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Thompson: May I come to this point, sir, that has been shouted to me? I am glad that the hon. member is so attentive and wants to get the facts from me.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest this, if hon. members were to read The British North America Act—and I am sure that some hon. members have not, but I will be generous enough to say that some may have—but if they have, they will find that the health of this province is the responsibility of the provincial government.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: May I also point out that when you have an agency of the Minister of Health going around and collecting money—raising money, raising the fee—in order to provide hospital services, surely it is then the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Health to see those services are provided.

I look to the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly), a businessman, and I am quite convinced that in his long practice in business with his locks, if I pay for a lock, I will get one. He would not stand up before us now and say: "You could pay me for a lock, but you might not get it." Yet, on the other hand, sir, that is what the government is permitting the hon. Minister of Health to do. He is taking money from us and we are not assured that we will get the services.

I would suggest, sir, that if that was to happen with my hon. friend that he would be in danger of going to jail for operating under false pretences. So perhaps the apprehensions the good doctor had about Millbrook are not too far fetched.

In this situation, sir, I would like to come to the point of staff. It is easy to be critical, for example, of the ineptitude and the lethargy on the part of the hon. Minister of Health, but we have got to realize that not only is there a crisis of hospitals, there is also a crisis of staff.

What kind of aggressive action did we see on the part of the hon. Minister of Health with respect to a shortage of beds? We know that one of the reasons for a shortage of staff has been the working conditions in the hospitals. Did we see the hon. Minister of Health as a protagonist in the betterment of working conditions which would encourage more nurses to come? No, sir, we did not. We saw the hon. Minister of Health quoting that there should not be shift differentials with respect to nurses' pay because it was unprofessional.

When it was suggested to him that across the province the doctors had a basis of shift differential, what was his answer? His answer, during all of this crisis, has been one of either sullen or embarrassed silence.

We suggest, sir, that because it has had to come from us, from medical men, from the public, the suggested solutions have had to come from people other than doctors. And the suggested solutions have included: the use of the veterans' hospitals, the use of nurses' residences and so on; and we have all read about these solutions brought up by people who recognize the desperate straits we are in. They are bringing up solutions about the need for nurses. Again we can read on this. They are suggesting more training schools should be attached to hospitals. They want to look at the nurses' training. They want to employ nurses' aides. They want to recruit married nurses.

This is coming from others. These suggestions are coming from other than the source from which they should come—the man responsible for the health of this province; from him we have silence. It is because of this, sir, that once again a crisis is developing in this province; and only when there is outraged outcry from citizens do we get some kind of action, or we hope we will get some action. It is because of this, sir, that we have suggested that, apart from using emergency measures, in order to tackle this problem of a hospital crisis and bed crisis, there should be a Royal commission to examine why this ineptitude and lethargy and indifference on the part of the hon. Minister of Health was permitted. And to suggest, sir, through a Royal commission, that we may have guideposts in order that such a situation will not be allowed to happen again in this province.

Mr. Thompson moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will proceed with the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare, followed by the completion of the estimates of Travel and Publicity; and the next estimates to be dealt with will be Economics and Development.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 23, 1964

The House met at 3.00 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome to the Legislature today, in the east gallery, students from Hill Park Secondary School, Hamilton and St. Vincent de Paul Separate School, Toronto; in the west gallery, students from Victoria Park Public School and Branksome Hall, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the order of the day for second reading of Bill No. 99 be discharged and that the bill be referred forthwith to the standing committee on labour, legal and municipal bills for consideration and examination and report.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in making this motion, I want to make a statement concerning Bill No. 99 and why I wish to have it dealt with in this fashion.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I have your guidance—

Mr. Speaker: The point of order of the member must be in respect to some statement that has been made up to the present time that is out of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Right!

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when the bill is to be withdrawn the rules call for a notice of another bill to be entered forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: I might correct the member: as I understood the motion, it was the order for second reading on the order paper to be withdrawn and not the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I draw to your attention that every public bill shall be read twice in the House before committal or amendment? If the hon. Prime Minister is going to go, in my submission, beyond the rules of the House and get up and make a statement today, I submit it can be done only with the general consent of the House and with provision of an opportunity for Opposition leaders to at least speak to it.

Second, before a bill can be referred to a committee it must have been given second reading. If it is withdrawn, it is not a bill. The rules of the House require that an alternative bill will be submitted in its place. May states that clearly on page 525 of the 17th edition.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, this is simply a motion respecting the conduct of the business of the House by the leader of the House. It is within his competence to make a motion regarding a certain order on the order paper. He is not ordering that the bill be withdrawn from the order paper, but that it be referred to a standing committee, which in my opinion is quite legitimate and I so rule.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, may I call your attention to rule No. 60 which was read very quickly by my hon. leader. Rule No. 60 of this House as published on page 114 of Lewis' Parliamentary Procedure—

Mr. Speaker: Yes! Well, may I just interrupt to let the member know that I am quite familiar with that rule but that it has often been the practice of this House to refer a bill to a standing committee, or even to a select committee, without it having second reading; that it can be done in the ordinary conduct of the business of the House; and that a bill has often been referred from third reading back to the committee of the whole House by means of a like motion.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): On a point of order, it has to be on unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

I am sorry, I am not of the opinion that it requires the unanimous consent of the House. This motion, as I understand it, is being made to take the order for second reading off the order paper and refer the bill to the standing committee. Any member of the House may speak to this motion after the Prime Minister has completed his remarks.

Mr. MacDonald: Frankly, that was the point I was seeking clarification on—

Mr. Speaker: I am not saying that any member has not the right to speak to the motion.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am merely speaking to the motion I have made.

I want also to make some comments concerning the report of the Ontario Police Commission on organized crime which was tabled in this House on Thursday last, but my remarks will be directed primarily to the motion I have made, which is that this bill should be referred to a standing committee.

I would say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that as leader of the government I accept full and complete responsibility for this bill and for its introduction into this Legislature. I also accept full responsibility for the tabling of the report, as it was tabled, with no deletions, without censorship and in exactly the same form and terms as it was submitted by His Honour Judge Macdonald, the chairman, Magistrate Thomas J. Graham and General H. A. Sparling, the members of the commission.

The commission, Mr. Speaker, was given the assignment to investigate crime in the province. In effect what it was asked to do was to continue the investigation that was made by Mr. Justice Roach sitting as a Royal commission in 1962 and 1963. I felt it was necessary for the entire report to be made public in order that the people of this province might know all the facts, in order that they might appreciate the many difficulties which face the law enforcement agencies of the province and in order that they might appreciate the extent of the operations of our police in the very enormous task of controlling and stamping out crime in the province.

We must accept the possibility that the publication of this report could create some immediate difficulties for the law enforcement agencies. On the other hand, we must not forget that its publication serves as notice to those who would attempt to establish criminal activities in the province that this government intends to make Ontario an unhealthy place for them. In other words, the mere publication of the report serves as a method of preventing the development and spread of crime in the province and serves notice on those with criminal intent that we will not tolerate their activities.

In accepting responsibility for Bill No. 99 as leader of this government, I say that it was introduced after it had been very carefully drafted by the law officers of the Crown who were of the opinion that it did not interfere with the fundamental rights of the people of Ontario. Let me say immediately that the government is not wedded to this piece of legislation. Section 39 was drawn and introduced as a result of the 11th recommendation contained on page 124 in the report of the Ontario Police Commission, the report to which I have referred, and I will quote this recommendation:

That section 48 of The Police Act be amended to clarify the powers of the Ontario Police Commission so as to permit hearings in camera as well as in public, and to make it an offence without permission of the commission to communicate the name of a witness or information given to the commission by any witness in private session; and to confer on the commission, whether in private or public session, the powers of a superior court to punish for contempt; and that following such clarification, this commission interrogate persons believed to be in possession of information respecting criminal operations, which information could be of assistance in determining the state of law and order in the province, and the need for special legislative, government or police action.

It is thus possible for hon. members to see that the report itself, with its exhaustive investigation into the existence and possible future development of crime in the province, together with this bill, form a unit in which is contained the problem which must be met and a possible means of meeting that problem. In other words, the report and the bill must be considered together, and in themselves they form a unit.

On Friday last, after many comments had been made concerning the possible effect of this legislation on the rights and privileges of our people and of the individuals in the province, I made a statement in the House in which I said I would not tolerate any legislation which infringes upon or jeopardizes the personal rights or freedoms of the individual. I further said if the effect of this legislation was to so interfere or to so jeopardize, the legislation would be changed. I further stated that before any further legislative action was taken in regard to this bill, it would be re-examined.

I have had an opportunity to carry out my undertaking which I gave to this House and to the people of this province. I have had further consultations with the law officers of the Crown and they have reaffirmed to me that at the time this legislation was drawn it was their opinion that it did not prohibit the right to counsel, that it did not interfere with the individual's rights to Habeas Corpus, certiorari and the other prerogative writs, that it did not interfere with the individual's rights under Magna Carta and under the Canadian Bill of Rights, nor did it deprive any person of the protection given every individual by The Evidence Acts of Ontario and Canada. After re-examination and further discussion the law officers of the Crown have informed me that they are still of the same opinion and that the fundamental rights of the citizens of this province would not be interfered with by this legislation.

Several hon. members: Nonsense, withdraw!

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Now, if these opinions had been expressed at the time the bill was introduced, the apprehension and disquiet which arose in people's minds before the bill had actually been examined, would have been avoided. In any event, I want to make eminently clear, as I have said before, that the government did not at the time this bill was introduced, nor does it now, consider this bill to be the final piece of legislation nor the complete answer to the problems that we are attempting to solve. Grave doubts have been raised in my mind by the comments I have read concerning this bill, not the least of which is the extension of certain powers of committal to a commission. In order that we may have all these matters in clear perspective, in order that there may be no misunderstanding in the mind of any man or woman in this province, in order that the full implications of the report, of the problems it lays bare and of the legislation and what it purports to achieve, in order that all these matters may be placed face up on the table so that the most thorough and complete study may be given to them, I am making this motion that this bill be sent to the standing committee of the Legislature which deals with legal bills.

When this bill and the report are before the committee I will ask that the members of the police commission, who completed the study and wrote the report and made the recommendations, appear before this committee to explain why they made the recommendations leading to the bill, as well as the other recommendations which are contained in the report. I will ask the law officers of the Crown who drew up this legislation, and who have given me the assurances which I have already mentioned, to appear before the committee, to discuss the drawing and drafting of the bill and all the background of its preparation.

The meeting of the committee will be held, with due notice to the public, in order that those who hold the opinion that this legislation does in fact infringe upon the rights and privileges of our citizens might appear, make their opinions known and have them examined and discussed. This will permit the hon. members of this Legislature to hear all these varying points of view, and to ask such questions as they may wish of those who are responsible for drawing up the bill and of those who have made the recommendations and know the problems the bill is designed to solve. I would hope that from these studies in the committee we may obtain the answers which will allow the police commission to be firm in dealing with crime, its organization, and its possible spread into our province; and to obtain answers which, first and foremost, would be in accord with the great concepts, traditions and principles of British justice and the inalienable rights of the individual, which this government and every hon. member of this House will always protect and uphold.

Mr. Speaker, from my own personal point of view, I think I have made it very clear that if there is a conflict between the rights of the individual and the necessity for powers to deal with the criminal elements in our society, then the rights of the individual must be supreme, even if it means that in so doing we give to the criminal elements in our society an advantage which we would rather they did not have.

I would say also that there are many misconceptions concerning this proposed legislation. While the terms "police state" and "police state" legislation have been used, I think it should be pointed out that this legislation gives no additional powers whatsoever to the police of this province. Rather, what it purports to do is to give certain powers to three men sitting as the Ontario Police Commission, and then only when they are in the course of making a report to the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass) in connection with three limited matters, namely: The extent, the investigation or control of crime; the enforcement of law; or the function of the commission under The Police Act.

I doubt if anyone is more opposed to the thought of a police state than I am. Indeed, I take responsibility for refusing to give the control of the Ontario Provincial Police to a commission because I thought that would remove the ultimate responsibility for the actions of the provincial police from the Legislature, where they must report through a Minister of the Crown, sir. Some have different views in this regard, and these are matters of great public and personal importance with which we are dealing.

I am moving that the proposed amendments to The Police Act be referred to the legislative committee dealing with legal bills, with no restriction and with no holds barred. May I make it clear, once again, that the government is prepared and always has been prepared to amend, to change, to withdraw the bill or any portion thereof? The bill has been put forward in the belief that it did not infringe or violate basic individual liberties and privileges, but if it does it must be changed.

I would point out, too, that in the studies to be made by the committee dealing with this bill the position of the police commission and the law enforcement agencies of the province must be given every consideration. The members of the commission feel, and I think it is reflected in the report and I think it is justified, that the Ontario Police Commission has been given a task to do, and that it is inadequately armed with powers to deal with forces which are highly organized and which have, at their disposal, all the facilities of communication and transportation in a modern world; and all these facilities can be used in a completely unprincipled fashion.

However, I repeat that there is nothing in this legislation—no clause, no sentence, no word—to which we are committed. We are prepared to change, to conform to the wishes of the hon. members of this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, the problems which I mention have been raised by an investigation of activities of organized and syndicated crime. We cannot and we will not overlook this problem. It presents us, as legislators, with the two opposing points of view which I have mentioned. I do not think that it is beyond our capacity as representatives of the people to equate these points of view and to come up with a solution which, while giving the Ontario Police Commission the powers it needs to carry out its duties, nevertheless is a solution which ensures the preservation of the right of the individual to live in a society free from lawlessness, free from organized vice—and a solution which ensures the preservation of all the traditional, deep-rooted British rights which safeguard our liberty and safeguard our freedom, and the liberty and freedom of all our citizens.

Mr. Speaker: Before the debate proceeds, I just wanted to read the motion so the members could hear it.

A motion by hon. Mr. Robarts, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer) that the order of the day for second reading of Bill No. 99 be discharged, and that the bill be referred forthwith to the standing committee on labour, legal and municipal bills for consideration, examination and report. In order to keep this debate in order, I might advise the members that it is the motion which is before the House now, not the bill. We are speaking on the merits of this motion being referred to the standing committee on legal, labour and municipal bills. So that the members may keep the debate in proper perspective, and on the right subject, I thought I should mention that. Anyone who wishes to debate the motion may do so.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish your inadvertent remark had been applicable to the present situation because I can say, quite frankly to the House, that technically I think the hon. Prime Minister's motion is in order. That is why I did not rise to oppose it. Technically, I think my hon. friend has the right, as leader of the government, to move the motion he has moved. That does not say for one moment that I think that motion should be moved. I think it should not have been moved. The place to discuss the principle of this bill is on the floor of this House.

The hon. Prime Minister and the government are shelving their proper responsibility in this, as they have done in other aspects of this whole problem, by referring it to a committee before the principle of the bill is discussed in this Legislature.

It may be that my hon. friend is in order technically, but morally he is completely out of order. He is afraid, and I charge him with it, to entrust the principle of the bill to the discussion of the hon. members in this House, afraid not only of the Opposition members, Mr. Speaker, but afraid of his own members, and he seeks this rule technically to get it into a committee of the House where it may be remodelled as he suggests. If there is going to be any remodelling of this bill it should be right here, not in any committee of the House. My hon. friend knows that. The procedure down through the years has been to refer these bills to committee after second reading, after the principle has been endorsed by the members of the Legislature.

Why does my hon. friend move from that well-established position this afternoon? He moves from it, as I have said, because he knows full well that the principle of the bill as he has outlined it and as it is contained in Bill

No. 99 would not meet with the approval of the hon. members of this Legislature in its present form. My hon. friend is afraid to take his chances before the proper tribunal, before a hundred and some members who are elected by the people of this province to say yes or no to this sort of legislation.

My hon. friend took a rather curious turn this afternoon, and having in mind the event of this last week it is not unusual that he should take one more turn that could be termed a little circuitous at least. We have in the province of Ontario, or had up until now—I do not see the hon. Attorney General in the House—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order, if you please. I must draw to the attention of the people in the galleries that it is against the rules of the House to make any applause whatsoever during any debate and if they persist in such a method, I am afraid I shall have to order the galleries cleared. Will they please keep in mind that no applause can come from the galleries.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has said this afternoon that upon re-examination of the advice of the law officers of the Crown, there is really not much wrong with this bill and it does not offend the person in his rights before the courts.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I did not say that at all.

Mr. Oliver: He said words to that effect, I will tell him that, this afternoon.

An hon. member: He certainly did!

Mr. Oliver: He certainly did not say them before and he is not reported in the newspaper as saying that, but he said that in effect this afternoon.

The law officers of the Crown are part of the Attorney General's department. The Attorney General, Mr. Speaker, is the chief law officer of the Crown. He is the man responsible in this Legislature for the enforcement of law in this province. He is the chief law officer. Now what does my hon. friend the hon. Attorney General say—perhaps not what he said today but what he said when he introduced this bill, as reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail. The hon. Attorney General said the police commission—now listen to this, Mr. Prime Minister—would have the power to deprive such a person of legal counsel until he was in jail. The legislation does not provide for bail or appeal by a person imprisoned under these new powers. It provides for an eight-day jail sentence each time a person refuses to testify.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! I am sorry—

Mr. Oliver: What is the trouble now?

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out to the leader of the Opposition that we must not discuss the principle of the bill. We are discussing the motion that is before the House.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Prime Minister talked about it for ten minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Order! But we must not discuss the principle of the bill. The bill is not before the House.

I would like to give the leader of the Opposition as much latitude as possible, but I must tell him to refrain from going into sections of the bill and discussing the principle of the bill.

Mr. Oliver: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I had not gone so far as to get into sections of the bill. I was reading what was said by the hon. member who was, up until lately at least, the Attorney General of the province of Ontario. He says in his concluding paragraph—and these are his own words:

It is drastic, it is dangerous and it is new and it is terrible legislation in an English common law country.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Attorney General did not feel that this legislation went further than my hon. friend interpreted it as going this afternoon he would not have used these kinds of words. The hon. Attorney General knew that as we understood the bill, as the public understood the bill, it was legislation that offended the liberties of people before the courts in this province—not only the law-breakers, as my hon. friend suggests. It takes in everybody. Nobody is immune under this bill. It is not just the law-breakers. If we were sure it would be restricted to those it would be a different thing. But the legislation as it is drawn makes it unsafe for anyone in this province of Ontario. That is what we are objecting to. That is a point that the hon. Prime Minister did not touch at all this afternoon.

He talks about the law officers of the Crown and the advice received from them. Has he not read in the paper where the most eminent lawyers in this province have said that this legislation is dangerous and that it tramples on the individual rights of people before the courts? Has he not read that? Did he not read what Joseph Sedgwick, one of the most eminent lawyers and a man of his own political faith, said in the paper this morning? Did he read what Mr. Robinette said? Did he read what all the great lawyers of this province have said in respect of this legislation? Then he makes the puny effort of getting up in this House this afternoon and saying that they are wrong and he is right.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): He said no such thing.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Get a hearing ad!

Mr. Oliver: I do not need a hearing ad and I certainly do not need one to hear the hon. Minister of Mines. Anyway a person would be better to have his ears plugged so far as the hon. Minister is concerned. But I would just say this to the hon. Prime Minister, that by this circuitous route he hopes to take off the pressure that is on the government at the present time. So far as I am concerned, nothing less than a withdrawal of these pernicious sections, yea, the withdrawal of the whole bill, will satisfy me or the Opposition. I say again, if this bill was withdrawn, another one could be put in its place and we could discuss it intelligently on the basis of doing things that the hon. Prime Minister pretends he wants to do with this bill but that he has overdone. He has been over-zealous in trampling on the rights of the individual.

Mr. Speaker, I want to move, seconded by the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) that all of the words after the word "discharged" be deleted and the words "and that the bill will be withdrawn" be substituted.

It is not in my own writing and I just cannot follow it too closely. I could not have followed my own any better, I suppose.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I think there is only one thing that will meet the situation that this province is faced with at the moment and that is that this government should give unqualified withdrawal to this bill.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: And that it has not done. What the government has done, as the hon. leader of the Opposition said, may be technically in order by moving a motion. In fact, they are in violation of the normal procedures of this House. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that when this government had, for example, bills that it wanted studied, such as the bill on pensions, such as the bill on health, what was its procedure? It introduced a bill, the bill went to second reading, we had a debate on principle, and then it was sent off to whatever committee the government wanted, for it to be studied.

This is what I suggest had to be done in this particular instance but the government cannot at the moment face this. So what it has done is only a qualified kind of withdrawal. What is even more dangerous, Mr. Speaker, what is even more alarming, is that the government is obviously unrepentant.

The hon. Prime Minister says, for example, that he does not believe that it is going to violate any civil liberties—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I did not say that.

Mr. MacDonald: He said that it was his belief, having been readvised and having had it reaffirmed by the law officers of the Crown, there was no violation of civil liberties.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: And I was advised—

Mr. MacDonald: I heard that, and I am sure that is in the statement. He inferred that he was accepting the belief of the law officers of the Crown; therefore he is unrepentant in it. He says that if it is sent out to the committee and somebody comes up with good changes, then he will consider them. It is this unrepentant aspect which is the dangerous thing at the present time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, for the benefit and edification of some of the newcomers at the back, if a bill is referred to a committee of this Legislature it is not withdrawn in fact. It is a qualified withdrawal, and that is the point I am talking to. The qualified withdrawal, as I have been trying to get across to the House, is accompanied by a virtually unrepentant attitude with regard to the contents of it.

The third point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is this: This bill is wholly the responsibility of this government; they cannot, in any degree, slyly or otherwise, try to shove it off as being the responsibility of, for example, the Ontario Police Commission. Just let me draw hon. members' attention to one quotation, since the hon. Prime Minister was referring to the report of the Ontario Police Commission. On page 11 are the following words:

We consulted The Attorney General's Department as to our legal powers while conducting our inquiry in camera and were advised that there was considerable doubt as to these, which should best be resolved by legislation to clarify it.

In other words, some time back, indeed back as far as last September, there were news stories when the police commission was beginning this investigation, reporting that they approached this government with regard to their powers.

This government has been contemplating this bill for six months. It has been contemplating the principles, and the manner in which they can put these principles into effect, for six months. They have had this report since January 31. The press, over the weekend, indicated that they have had the bill since March 2 in its present form; and I suggest that, if this is accurate, they have had all the time needed to discuss it. Yet they have come up with a conclusion which is so insensitive to the basic principles of civil liberties—important as may be the problem of coping with crime—that they have, in the view of everybody except the government and the law officers of the Crown, violated these liberties in the kind of fashion we have just seen.

Finally—and this is more and more obvious—this government is in chaos.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: This government has lost the confidence of the province at the present time. The government has lost the confidence of the House. As a matter of fact, the government has lost the confidence of the backbenchers—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: —and that is precisely the reason why the government could not bring the principle of the bill before the House; because if they did they would have been voted down on one of their own bills—so they have taken this short-circuited fashion to be able to cope with it.

The motion being moved by the hon. leader of the Opposition—I believe there can be only one amendment at a time—is a valid amendment. It would at least achieve the basic point that there would be unqualified withdrawal, which is what I think we should have. Then, if the hon. Prime Minister would be willing, in his present plight, to accept a little advice from this side of the House, I suggest that what we should do now is what we should have done to begin with. We should debate this report and not attempt things in a rushed fashion; the government is a victim of its own procedures by doing things in this rushed fashion and trying to have short sessions.

Debate this report. Put it as the first item on the order paper when we come back after Easter. And after it has been debated, then we can conceivably arrive at a consensus within this House and help to get the government out of the chaos it is in at the present time. Help the government, in other words, to strengthen our position in coping with organized crime, without destroying the basic liberties of the people.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the amendment moved by my leader, let me say that this, in my opinion, is not a time for dramatics, or breast-beating, or berating the government. The government has made a serious error, and I would have hoped this afternoon that the hon. Prime Minister would have come into this House and said, "We made a mistake." Had he done that, sir, had the hon. Prime Minister come into this House and said, "We made a mistake and we are sorry. We will withdraw this bill and proceed in a different way", I think he would have earned the respect of every person in the province of Ontario for such a manoeuvre.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, we are met with a complete face-saving device—and it is nothing more than that. He says, "We are not going to withdraw the bill. We are going to send it down to a committee and we are going to have the police commission there and to tell you what they had in mind." We have already read in the press, over the weekend, what the police commission has in mind. Magistrate Graham, quoted on the front page of the Toronto Telegram, said on Saturday: "The commission, to a man, stands behind this."

Judge Macdonald was quoted the same way. It was only Major General Sparling who reserved comment.

We wonder, Mr. Speaker, to what extent these three appointees on the police commission should be expressing public opinions. Surely they should be expressing opinions to those people to whom they are responsible, the hon. Attorney General and the Cabinet; but they did not see fit to do this. We have had all sorts of opinions, including the opinion of the hon. Attorney General, as my hon. leader read it from the newspapers; and you may remember, sir, on Thursday afternoon, the excitement and the horror which raged through the press gallery when they had had an opportunity to question the hon. Attorney General about what this bill really meant.

No amount of denying is going to gainsay the objectives of this bill. No amount of pointing to various phrases in this statement of the hon. Prime Minister is going to change one iota of what has been said.

Here on page 2, he says:

I say that it was introduced after it had been carefully drafted by the law officers of the Crown, who were of the opinion that it did not interfere with the fundamental rights of the people of Ontario.

Apparently we have all grades of law officers. We have law officers who give one set of advice to one person, and another set of advice to another person. I do not know who these law officers were, but apparently it was not the chief law officer, the hon. Attorney General.

How many law officers do we have, and how many law opinions do we have? Surely, if this government is functioning the way any normal, democratic government can and should function, it would come forward with one unified opinion? We would not have the opinion of the hon. Attorney General at variance with the opinion of the hon. Prime Minister. We would not have the opinion of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forest (Mr. Roberts) at variance with the hon. Attorney General and the hon. Prime Minister. We would not have the opinions of all these backbenchers, who have been quoted to show, and properly show, their abhorrence at this type of legislation.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Singer: We have not got a government. We have chaos here. The only way, Mr. Speaker, in which face can be saved—and all of us in this House are anxious that, in our legislation, we do the right thing—the only way the best can be made out of a bad thing, is that this bill be withdrawn right now.

The hon. Prime Minister says on page 4 of this statement:

I have had further consultations with the law officers of the Crown and they have reaffirmed to me that, at the time this legislation was drawn, it was their opinion that it did not prohibit the right to counsel and it did not interfere—and so on. Well, I ask you again, Mr. Speaker: Which set of law officers do we believe, and how can you tell the law officer with an opinion unless you have a programme?

Mr. Speaker, surely the people of Ontario are entitled to hear the government benches speak with one voice? This is not what we have today.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make one more point in this debate, in urging all hon. members of the House to act to withdraw this bill. I have in my hand a document issued by the government and published by the Ontario Human Rights Commission, dated May-June, 1963. It says:

A Day to Remember: The signing of the Magna Carta on June 15, 1215, is regarded by free men as one of the most memorable events in human history.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I was just wondering if this pamphlet, which the member is reading from now, has anything to do with the motion before the House; as I said before, I have given quite a bit of latitude in this debate but I wish the member would stick to the motion before the House, whether you are for or against referring this bill to the standing committee.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this has a great deal to do with it, particularly when I tell you who the author of this quotation is. The author goes on to say:

When on that day the despotic King John surrendered to the demands of the barons in the great meadow at Runnymede, the lamp of liberty was lit, not just for the inhabitants of a single island, but for all the people everywhere in the world. And if down through the succeeding centuries the lamp has sometimes burnt low, its light has never been extinguished. There came into being in 1215 a fundamental principle which even a king was not permitted to violate, and whenever the state, in the words of Sir Winston Churchill, "swollen with its own authority" has attempted to ride roughshod over the rights and liberties of the people, it is to the doctrine of Magna Carta that appeal has again and again been made and never as yet without success.

This quotation goes on for several more paragraphs and it is signed, "John P. Roberts, Prime Minister of Ontario."

I would say simply this, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Prime Minister as an honourable man—and he is an honourable man—really believes the sentiments he has expressed there, and I think he does, then I think he should accept the honourable course here this afternoon and without any shilly-shally, without any reliance on technical rules of procedure, stand up and say, “I will withdraw this bill without any reservation.” I urge all hon. members of the House, led by the hon. Prime Minister, to support the amendment brought in by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House has to do with procedure, it has nothing to do with the substance of the bill called Bill No. 99. It seems strange to me, Mr. Speaker, that you should be so tolerant of the Opposition as to let it wander beyond the bounds, especially in the light of the experience of the hon. leader of the Opposition himself, who has been in this House longer than any other person, and should know the rules of the House and be willing to be bound by them. But not the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to the procedure which is the substance of the motion advanced by the hon. Prime Minister, he has suggested that the bill itself be sent to a committee, to the committee on legal bills. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that in all of the circumstances this is a very desirable procedure. There is precedent for this, there is precedent within the years that I have been in this House myself.

Mr. MacDonald: Not before second reading!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: After first reading, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: No, sir!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, the situation is this, that second reading involves a debate on principle. The views which have been expressed here today and last Friday by some hon. members of the Opposition are based on newspaper reports and other documents which are second-hand information to them, but they have been attempting to advance them.

Mr. MacDonald: The reports were based on comments from the hon. Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am talking about the procedure. The procedure which we suggest and the government suggests is to send it to the committee on legal bills. Why? So that the public interest can be best served at the earliest possible moment before the legal bills committee. At its sitting, witnesses from outside—these experts that the hon. leader of the Opposition has made reference to, and others and the civil servants of this government—will be heard. These are matters which will have a bearing because everything on both sides of this case has not been told so far. I am not arguing on the merits of the bill, I am talking—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I say that quite frankly, because that is not before the House. I am for having this bill referred to a committee at the earliest possible moment.

Here is the situation: The hon. leader of the Opposition, of all people in this House, should know better than to stand here and tell the hon. members of this Legislature what he did today. He knows full well that after it has been to the committee this bill will come back to this House after those witnesses have been heard and the debate on the principle of the bill will then be held. We would be in a far better position—I will go further than that—if the bill came back to this House then we would have the benefit of a first-rate public discussion and we would be able to discuss the principle in the light of the knowledge that we had gained.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. members of the Opposition want to interfere with the remarks which I am endeavouring to make, that is quite acceptable to me. But I will tell you this, Mr. Speaker, that their interference with what I am saying about procedure, which is directly relevant to the motion before the House, reflects in direct proportion their lack of responsibility with respect to the business of this House.

I must take exception to something else, Mr. Speaker, and I think this is the proper time and place to do it. Reference has been made to the law officers of the Crown, and by inference serious criticism has been made of the law officers of the Crown.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Sedgwick was doing it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Anybody in this House who attacks the law officers of the Crown in the way that has been done today involves an attack on the civil servants of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand completely the position taken by the hon. member for York South, because I thought he was interested in finding some way at the earliest possible time of dealing with this serious canker which is alleged to exist. The most expedient way of dealing with this problem is to get this matter before the committee.

Mr. Speaker, his position today is different from the inference he gave to this House last Friday.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, well, just wait, the hon. member will have a chance!

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The position taken by the hon. member for York South is substantially different today from that which he took last Friday in this very House.

Mr. Speaker, in asking the hon. members in this House to support the motion advanced by the hon. Prime Minister, I suggest this to them, that this is the act of a responsible leader of a responsible government to get this matter moved along at the fastest possible time.

Mr. Speaker: The chair recognizes the member for Woodbine.

Mr. Bryden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition which I support. The effect of the amendment as I understand it, if carried, would be that the bill would simply be discharged from the order paper. That I believe is the proper course that we should take at this time, for reasons that I will try to outline.

Before I go into those reasons, however, I would like to call attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that we are now discussing procedure with regard to one of the most important bills ever introduced into this House, and the hon. Minister who sponsored the bill and piloted it through first reading is not even present in the House. Mr. Speaker, I think there should be an explanation of his absence in all fairness to him and to everyone else concerned. If he is seriously ill, that fact should be known. I would suggest that there could be no other valid excuse for his absence at this time other than serious illness, and I think the House and the public are entitled to know why it is that he is not here. If he is on his way out, I think that should also be announced.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would remind the member now to stick to the motion as closely as possible.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, sir, I will try to direct all of my remarks to the amendment, which I believe is what is before the House.

Mr. Speaker, I accept the ruling you made, to the effect that the main motion is in order. I must say, with deference, that I have the greatest difficulty in understanding your ruling, in view of the clear terminology of rule No. 60 of this House, which says that no public bill may be committed or amended until after it has received two readings. This bill has received one reading. The main motion is to discharge the order for second reading and refer it to the committee. It appeared to me that, under rule No. 60, that procedure is clearly out of order. You have ruled that it is in order, sir; but I would like to suggest that it is still a most improper procedure for any government to follow, particularly in a bill as contentious as this one.

I would suggest that no bill of any consequence should be proceeded with in any way, by reference to a committee or in any other way, until it has been approved in principle in this House. That is the whole point of second reading of a bill; it is to approve it in principle. If a government does not wish a bill to be debated in principle, then it should withdraw it altogether, as the amendment of the hon. leader of the Opposition proposed. But to ask us to refer to committee a bill which we have had no opportunity to approve in principle, is a most unreasonable request, and one that no hon. members of this House should be asked to comply with. I will try to enumerate certain reasons why I think that is so.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, if the bill has not been approved in principle, then it is a total waste of time to refer it to a committee. The function of a committee is to consider the technical details of a bill. But let us assume that it is not approved in principle—and I hope it never will be approved in principle, certainly in its present form—then the entire work of the committee would be a complete waste of time. What is the use of asking a committee to consider the technical details of a bill until it knows, first of all, whether the House assents to the general principles of the bill?

Second, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to you that many of the hon. members, the majority of the hon. members, of this House are not members of the committee to which it is proposed the bill should be referred. I happen, myself, to be included among that number.

I object to a bill being proceeded with and dealt with, on which I have not had any opportunity to express my views as to its principle. It is, in my opinion, an abrogation of the basic rights of the hon. members of this House that the regular procedure should be short-circuited, and that only some members will have an opportunity to discuss the bill at this stage.

My most important objection to this short-circuiting, of what I would suggest is proper procedure, is that it represents a total evasion of responsibility on the part of the government. We all know that the government has been in a state of total confusion for the last few days. I would say that the introduction of this bill was perhaps the greatest blunder of this decade, and the government has been in a state of confusion ever since.

I sat and watched an interview with the hon. Attorney General, the sponsor of the bill, on television; when he was asked certain questions, questions relating to his bill, he said that those questions should be directed to the chairman of the police commission. Well, who is introducing legislation in this House? Who is taking responsibility for it, Mr. Speaker? Is the chairman of the police commission, or some person outside this House, taking responsibility for legislation? Have we sacrificed entirely the concept of responsible government and of ministerial responsibility?

The hon. Minister and the Cabinet are responsible for this bill, and they should be prepared to answer all questions on it and justify its principle, if, indeed, they believe the principle can be justified. If they do not believe it can be justified, then they should frankly admit their mistake. As far as I am concerned, I am prepared to believe that anyone can make a mistake. I think an honourable course, and one which certainly would not provoke anything but favourable comment from me, would be for the government to indicate that they have not given sufficient consideration to this bill, they have made a mistake, and therefore will accept the amendment of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

That would be an honourable course. It would be a proper course under the circumstances, and I think the government should receive credit for it; but no, they are trying to crawl out from under responsibility altogether. We can only assume that they arrived at a policy—although some of the reports in the press lead one to wonder if they really did arrive at a policy in any meaningful sense of that term—but we can assume they arrived at a policy. They have found the policy is objectionable to a large part of the people of Ontario and now they are asking a committee to make policy for it. That can be the only significance of the referral of this bill to a committee before it has been approved in principle.

It means, purely and simply, that the government is now in a state of such utter confusion that it is unable to determine policy itself, as is its responsibility; and it hopes that somehow or other the committee, with the assistance of outside parties, will be able to get it out of the mess and come up with some sort of acceptable policy. Well, that is not acceptable. That means the end of responsible government, if we accept that sort of principle.

Let the government come in with its policies and then stand or fall on them. If it believes that this bill is justified, let it call second reading and stand or fall on the second reading. If it believes it is not justified, let it discharge the bill from the order paper and bring in such other bill as it sees fit. Then we can decide, when we see its new bill, whether or not we like it.

Mr. Speaker, I think the government should be aware of one thing. I realize that with its top-heavy majority it has become quite unresponsive to public opinion; but surely it is sufficiently aware that there is widespread apprehension among the people of Ontario as to the implications of this bill? I am suggesting to the government, Mr. Speaker, that that apprehension can be allayed only by the unconditional withdrawal of the bill. As long as that bill, in any form, is before this House or is before a committee of this House, there will continue to be, quite legitimately, in my opinion, apprehension among the public.

I think it is the duty of the government to try to allay that apprehension, and there is only one way I can see that it can do that. Let it withdraw the bill; let it have a sober second thought; let it consider the whole matter; let the whole subject matter be discussed in this House, if the government sees fit; and, after further consideration, let it decide on alternative legislation it may wish to bring in.

Why do we have to have this bill driven along relentlessly, stage by stage, at this juncture? What is the hurry? The government sat for years and did nothing about organized crime. What is the tremendous hurry now to push this ill-considered bill forward? It has had first reading; the government is afraid to bring it to second reading, so now it is trying to spirit it off to a committee; but it is still in this House. It is still a part of the subject matter of this House as long as it is in committee. When it goes through that committee stage it advances one more step toward adoption; and I do not think it should advance any steps toward adoption. It should be withdrawn.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the private members on the government side of the House that they should give serious consideration to supporting the amendment to the main motion. It has been said on a number of occasions that the private members on the government side have shown considerable energy and initiative in this House, that they have shown a disposition to criticize the government where they have considered it merited criticism. I believe that is true. I believe that they have shown quite a lot of independence in thought and action. I think there are a great many members on the other side of the House who are quite capable of independent action and I suggest to them that here, if ever there was an issue, is the time to show their independence and to vote for what they think is right. It is an open secret that many of them are unhappy with this bill.

It has been alleged in the newspapers that it went through a caucus meeting at which only ten of them were present. This I find hard to believe. I find it hard to believe that the government would put a bill of this magnitude through a caucus meeting of only ten members—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What has this got to do with the motion?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member's party could not even have a caucus of ten.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bryden: At any rate that is what was reported in the press. I said I found it difficult to believe, but whether or not it is true, or what the truth of the matter may be, I would still suggest to the private hon. members who object in principle to this bill that the motion the hon. Prime Minister has put forward is not a satisfactory way of disposing of the bill. I would suggest to these

hon. members that they should vote for the amendment.

I realize that supporters of the government would hesitate to vote no confidence in the government, but this, after all, is a procedural matter. I would suggest to them that the question of confidence is not involved. Therefore, if they are genuinely independent as has been indicated in some quarters, let them show it. Let them vote to have this bill discharged from the order paper so that there will be an opportunity for sober consideration of the whole matter and an introduction at an appropriate time of such legislation as may be appropriate.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the kind of issue in which all people who are concerned about civil rights and the liberty of the subject should unite and stand up and be counted in favour of the removal of this bill from the order paper. That can be accomplished if the motion proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition is adopted.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I rise—

Mr. R. A. Eagleson (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Sorry, I recognize the member for Parkdale and the member for Lakeshore second.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment of the hon. leader of the Opposition. This bill should be withdrawn because it is evil and it is a shame on the province of Ontario. The very fact that the hon. leader of this government, despite his protestations to the contrary that he is all for liberty and will not interfere with our rights, would withdraw this bill from the Legislature, the place where the principle should be debated, where the public of Ontario can see what is going on, is all the more reason why we in the province of Ontario should be on our guard. If it had not been for the press on the day this bill was introduced, days would have gone by before we would have known what the real content of the bill was.

By taking the bill from out of this House and putting it into a committee where we are told we can talk to the law officers of the Crown, the government is taking away from us and the people of Ontario their real rights. Mr. Speaker, we are not interested in talking to the law officers of the Crown. The responsibility is with the government and the responsibility lies primarily with the hon. Prime Minister and with the hon. Attorney General, an Attorney General who does not even come to this House today. One wonders, if the bill goes to committee, whether the hon. Attorney General will show up then to tell us what is behind it. We do not know.

What we want to do is to see and to discuss this bill here. This is the most important legislation ever introduced into this province. I say that because it virtually destroys the rights our forefathers fought for for centuries—and one thing can be said, if the British people have ever done anything, it is to create law and order. Our common law is the greatest legacy that we have ever given to civilization, and yet now we, in this shameful day, are faced with the prospect of seeing a government bring in legislation that can destroy these rights with a stroke of the pen.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we, as members of this House, speak not only for the people of the province of Ontario today but we speak for those untold thousands who for centuries have served the cause of freedom. I think that this government owes it to us and owes it to the province and to the people that have served the cause of freedom over the years, to let the principle of the bill be debated in Parliament. Once again to try to throw the blame on the civil service, to say that it was recommended to it by the officers of the Crown, is nonsense. It is abrogating its duty to civil servants and no matter how good or faithful those civil servants might be, it is the responsibility of the government.

I have sometimes wondered whether, if this type of legislation was recommended to the government by civil servants, if it is not time the government cleaned house. I say this to any Attorney General who would allow such legislation to come before this House, or go before a committee; he should not be Attorney General in a free province. He may be being offered as a sacrificial lamb, I do not know, but certainly whether the government offers the hon. Attorney General as a sacrificial lamb, it is still the duty and the responsibility of the hon. Prime Minister of this province. He is the first Minister of the Crown and nothing will ever shake that garb from him.

Mr. Speaker, whatever reputation the hon. Prime Minister has built up in the province of Ontario, it has received a blot by this legislation from which he will never recover. And we as a province have received in the press throughout the world a shame and a blot from which it is going to take us a long time to recover. To think that even the government is so ashamed of its own legislation, it wishes to take it from this House to some committee, where no doubt it hopes to bury it. This legislation, which today is compared with what is done in South Africa, and which is being sent to the United Nations, has the name of the province of Ontario listed with a type of legislation which will seek to crush the rights of the individual citizen.

Mr. Speaker, if there is any decency or any wellspring of liberty in this government, it will see to it that this legislation is debated in this House, that it is not withdrawn and taken to a committee so that we can talk to the civil servants. This is not the duty of the civil servants. This is the duty of the government of Ontario. The fact that it is such a vital piece of legislation, makes it more than just a matter of procedure or technicalities. Today the people of the province of Ontario are not interested in technicalities, they are interested in killing this bill, and it should be withdrawn—

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trotter: Any technicality that is used to take it out of this House and place it before a committee, is a technicality being used to strangle the rights of the people of the province of Ontario. I was glad to hear the hon. leader of the Opposition speak the way he did for the rights of the people of Ontario.

The bill, I might say again, should be completely withdrawn. The government, despite its huge majority—and this is another reason why the people of the province of Ontario have a right to fear this government, a gnawing fear—still cannot debate the bill in this House. I say again, the government should withdraw the bill and show that it has some decency and some respect for the liberties of our forefathers and the people of the province of Ontario.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Eagleson: Mr. Speaker, we have heard certain references by the hon. members of the Opposition here today indicating that the backbenchers of the Progressive-Conservative Party perhaps were not in favour of the motion of the hon. Prime Minister. If I might speak—

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the member now that we are speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Eagleson: Yes, to the amendment, that is correct. The amendment as proposed, Mr. Speaker, is to have this bill withdrawn. I am sure that every hon. member of this House is well aware of my personal position on civil liberties. I feel that they, at all costs, must be protected—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Eagleson: Well, if the hon. members had listened on Friday they perhaps would have heard them.

An hon. member: Some of us were not here.

Mr. Eagleson: The hon. members were not here; right.

Mr. Singer: The hon. member had a chance to speak on Friday.

Mr. Eagleson: I made it clear on Friday that we must, at all costs, protect the civil liberties of the individual in our province.

An hon. member: The hon. member did not talk about Bill No. 99.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Eagleson: I feel that the amendment before this House perhaps would not protect them in a way which will show everyone in this province just what was intended by the proposed legislation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Eagleson: The hon. Prime Minister, in speaking today, in his own words, indicated that the bill had been put forward in the belief that it did not infringe or violate basic individual liberties and privileges, but that if it does it must be changed. In other words, we are going to have the opportunity, if these rights are infringed, to change the bill; and it will be done at the committee stage. We have heard in the words of the hon. leader of the Opposition when he spoke today, Mr. Speaker, that this motion was in order technically. Well, surely that is sufficient! If it is technically all right, then it is all right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Eagleson: The people of the province of Ontario have put their faith in the Progressive-Conservative Party and we are not going to betray that confidence. I urge that the hon. members of my party vote against the proposed amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Was the hon. member in the caucus when it—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment of the hon. leader of the Opposition that the bill be discharged from the order paper; and I do so for several reasons.

The first one is that the bill, as originally proposed, has disrupted this province in a way I have seldom seen. Up to this point, I have never, on any issue, received as many phone calls or personal calls demanding that I oppose this bill when it come to the House. Everywhere across this province there has been indignation at what has been happening here these past few days. The press of this province has been unanimous in stating that this bill is dangerous and should be discharged from the order paper. I do not know that I have read one single editorial or one single article in the press of this province—and the press has often been the safeguard of human freedom through the ages—which has not condemned the legislation, and which has not demanded that it be withdrawn. It has also demanded other things, but it has demanded that as a basis.

Over the weekend, too, I read in the newspapers where backbencher after backbencher in this government—and some who have not been backbenchers—has been extremely unhappy with this legislation; therefore it should be withdrawn from the order paper. I know that the technicality, which has been brought forward by the hon. Prime Minister this morning, allows some of these people to “get off the hook”, and support this kind of a technicality as means to change their point of view. But, believe me, even though that technicality can be supported by these people, they still feel that this bill is iniquitous and that it should be discharged from the order paper.

I know that if it does go to committee, and I suppose the overwhelming majority of this House—the government party—will make sure that it does, I can see the people who expressed themselves over the weekend fighting the principle of this bill at the committee level. I think they will; but why they should, this afternoon, hide behind that technicality is beyond me.

The second reason why I feel that this should be discharged from the order paper, and the amendment carried, is that this government has shown itself to be insensitive, almost completely insensitive, to the feelings of the people of this province. I know they have found themselves in a desperate fix. I know that at this point they are trying desperately to find a way out, to keep Cabinet solidarity, and keep solidarity within their ranks; but that insensitivity is there. Sometimes a government, which is top-heavy in its majority, and which has been too long in power, begins to think that its mandates, no matter what they are, are in the best interests of the people in the province. So I believe, because of this insensitivity, that this legislation should be withdrawn from the order paper.

The third reason why I think this should be done is that the legislation, as it stands, gives almost absolute power to three men on the police commission. While we may have profound respect for some, or all, of these men, it is the kind of power which no democracy—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: When the hon. member will not hear what explanation the men who wrote the report have to make he is killing democracy.

Mr. Young:—which no democracy should hand over to a small group of men to be administered. You see, they say—and I have the quote here. One of the commissioners says:

—that this will only be used against known suspects in the matter of organized crime.

But the commission itself decides who these people are going to be, who will be hauled in, perhaps in the middle of the night, and questioned with or without counsel—we are not sure, yet, whether this is the case. Then they will be jailed if they do not give the answers the commission feels it wants to get. They decide, and they alone can make up their minds, who is going to be hauled in.

This way we are destroying the freedom we are trying to save; and if human history tells us anything, it is that legislation like this, or decrees like this, which are designed to save the state, can only result in the destruction of freedom for the citizens in that state.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Young: The other matter I want to bring before the House—another reason why we should withdraw this bill and discharge it from the order paper, Mr. Speaker—is that this House has rights; and this motion, which was offered this morning, tramples upon those rights. The amendment is designed to restore those rights to this House.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: I have not had long experience in this House, but I have had some experience in parliamentary procedure. I know that, generally, it is taken for granted—except, it seems, here—that when legislation comes for second reading at that point the principle of a bill is discussed, and at that point the people, who have been elected to do a job, express their opinion as to whether they think this is good legislation or bad legislation. If the majority think it is good they send it on to the committee—

An hon. member: Amen!

Mr. Young: My hon. friend across here says, “Amen!” I am delighted to hear the response and know that he agrees. This is wonderful. We expect that he will vote with me on this legislation—that is what “Amen” means—I might read him a lecture in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Young: So I say, Mr. Speaker—and I hope that this legislation will be withdrawn—that the amendment will be carried. I say to the people who have expressed their opposition to this legislation, “Do not be caught on a technicality such as has been offered here this afternoon. Express your opposition.”

There are some great moments in history. Some of the greatest have been when men are willing to say, “I stand here on principle. I believe that the principle of this bill is wrong.” Certainly many of the people in this House believe it wrong; the time is here for people, who believe the principle of the bill is wrong, to say so, and stand on their feet and so express themselves. This is a democratic procedure on the second reading of a bill.

I recall to hon. members that event in the House of Commons in Britain, when one man got up to speak and the voice came: “Speak for England!” I say, today in this House, the challenge is here for every hon. member, who sits with his responsibility as an elected representative, to vote for Ontario and to vote for democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment to the legislation.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, some of us missed the actual wording of the amendment. Would you please advise me and the House whether the amendment called for the withdrawal of the bill or the discharging of the order from the order paper?

Mr. Speaker: It calls for discharging the order and the withdrawal of the bill.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to support the amendment made by the hon. leader of the Opposition and I speak in sorrow, Mr. Speaker, because I have always considered the hon. Prime Minister and his team to be responsible people. I cannot understand for the life of me what they are doing this time, I just cannot. I look at what the hon. Prime Minister has said on page 3 of his statement today and I quote:

I made a statement in which I said I would not tolerate any legislation which infringes upon or jeopardizes the personal rights and freedoms of the individual.

There is nothing that is more important, Mr. Speaker, and I really and truly felt when the hon. Prime Minister made that statement that he would realize what the man in the street is worried about—that he would have taken the honourable course out and would have withdrawn the bill. I cannot for the life of me see why, sir, with 77 members and a small Opposition such as we have today, that government is afraid to have this bill and its principles discussed on this floor today. This is the time to do it, there is no better time than the present.

Mr. Speaker, I say again I speak in sorrow today, because I feel democracy is being trampled on, the rights of this House are being disregarded.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Braithwaite: Hon. members can say what they like!

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to bring to you and to the hon. members of this House, something of the feeling of apprehension of the public. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to bear with me. I would like to bring to you some of this feeling of fear in the minds of many who have come from strange lands and who have felt that they have left this sort of thing behind them. I also speak of the people who were born Canadians, who have lived here all their lives and whose forefathers lived here and who have a great regard for freedom.

I could tell the hon. member of many of the other people who have called me personally on this, Mr. Speaker. Friday morning I got an unprecedented number of phone calls on this very bill. I told each and every one, without even having come down to Queen's Park to discuss this with my hon. colleagues—and I had no fear at all when I told them—that this party would not support this bill and that we would fight it to the end.

Mr. Speaker, we all know who the majority of the members of the committee are. We know that there is a possibility that the bill could come back to this House exactly as it went. If that happens, Mr. Speaker, I can only say as our hon. leader has said, that filibuster we might if we have to. I stand against that sort of thing, I do not like it, but as far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, this thing is being sent to committee on a technicality. Democracy is being throttled. If necessary, I think we will have to take every step that we can to fight to make sure that this bill is not passed.

I spoke earlier, Mr. Speaker, about the apprehension of the public and I am going to beg your indulgence. I would like to read you a couple of the communications that I received just today.

Mr. Speaker: Speak on the amendment.

Mr. Braithwaite: I am speaking on the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Would the member please sit down! If the member is going to read some letters at the present time they will have to refer to this amendment that the bill be withdrawn. I just wanted to warn him that they must be of that nature before he reads them so they may not be out of order.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Speaker, I would like to read some of the comments from some of these letters with reference to the statement made by the hon. Prime Minister himself when he said that he would not tolerate any legislation which infringes upon or jeopardizes the personal rights and freedoms of the individual. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the comments I am going to make are directly in relation to those comments made by the hon. Prime Minister. I talk first of all about a telegram that is dated 2.24 today from a constituent of Etobicoke, where we value freedom, Mr. Speaker. It says: I ADD MY SUPPORT TO YOUR CONDEMNATION OF THE PROPOSED REPREHENSIBLE AND UNACCEPTABLE AMENDMENTS TO THE POLICE ACT.

I read you another letter, Mr. Speaker, and this is addressed to myself from a constituent:

In this morning's paper there appears a bill introduced into the House by Attorney General Frederick M. Cass, which is beyond the belief of any thinking man. I refer to the legislation that would increase the power of the police commission to that of dictatorial power similar to that enjoyed only by tyrants like Hitler and Mussolini. This would in effect endow the Attorney General with—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I think the member is dealing with the principle of the bill and I must ask him not to get on the principle of the bill because the bill itself is not before the House.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Speaker, if I am not allowed to speak on these letters today, I just want to bring to the attention—

Mr. Speaker: I did not say the member could not speak on his letters. I only wanted to tell him that he must not mention letters or read letters that refer to the principle of the bill itself, because the bill is not before the House. It is the amendment at the present time, that the bill be withdrawn, that is before the House.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Speaker, I am going to go back to the statement that the hon. Prime Minister himself has made, where he accepts responsibility for the bill. It is page seven that I am reading from, Mr. Speaker:

From my own personal point of view, I think I have made it very clear that if there is any conflict between the rights of the individual and the necessity for powers to deal with criminal elements in our society, then the rights of the individual must be supreme, even if it means in doing so we give to the criminal elements in our society an advantage which we would rather they did not have.

And further:

May I say also that there are many misconceptions concerning this proposed possible legislation. While the terms "police state" and "police state legislation" have been used, I think it should be pointed out that this legislation gives no additional powers whatsoever to the police of this province.

My hon. leader has said the comments of formidable lawyers such as Mr. Robinette and others indicate this is not true. The hon. Prime Minister has said right here that he disagrees violently, and so do I. All that I am trying to do in reading from some of these letters, Mr. Speaker, is to attempt to bring to this House the fact that the man on the street does not agree with what the hon. Prime Minister has said. I will see if I can find another letter here which is right on the point. I quote:

Never before have I felt so strongly about a proposed bill that I have ever written to my member of Parliament but as a Christian I feel that I must raise my voice in protest against any legislation that would plunge us backward as quickly as this piece of mockery of freedom proposed by Mr. F. M. Cass.

Here is another. I will just read a few sentences from it:

Not only is this an affront to our civil liberties and our rights as citizens, it is an insult to our intelligence. Please oppose this legislation to the best of your ability.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would say to all hon. members of this House that they should join with this party and vote in favour of the amendment. This bill should not, and I repeat, should not go to committee where a majority on the government side could put through what it likes. Many of the hon. members of this House do not sit on the private bills committee. They should have an opportunity to discuss it here and now, and I call specifically to the independent hon. members on the government side. They have a precedent. There are a few who are not afraid to stand up and speak for what they feel is right, and I call on these people to vote with this party in favour of the amendment.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. Prime Minister—he is a reasonable man—to show the public, to show the man on the street, how he feels about this by allowing the hon. members of his own party to have a free vote on this. Then let us see what would happen. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister would not allow this. His motion might fail. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have listened a long time this afternoon to those with legal training expressing their opinion on a subject of great concern to all of us. I, frankly, confess that I have not had the benefit of that legal training, but I am one who believes in those traditions long established and cherished by all within this House.

I think I might be described, Mr. Speaker, as one of those who believes in permitting those, who want to speak to something like this, to have the opportunity to do so. I feel very keenly about the benefit of public discussion and public forum; in fact, I have felt so keenly about it that, as the hon. leader of the Opposition was once wont to say, I might be known as the man who establishes committees at such a rate that I might be known as "committee-man Bill." I make that statement with the degree of levity with which the hon. leader of the Opposition directed it in my direction.

But I do not look at it in quite such a manner of levity, because I frankly believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is a great deal to be learned, a very great deal to be obtained in the way of evidence, if this bill is to go before the legal bills committee. Those who supported the bill, in bringing it forward, in advising that action be taken to deal with the problem as they saw it, as it was outlined in the report of the police commission, should have the opportunity to appear before that committee and to so express themselves.

Those people are denied the right to come before this assembly and so speak; but they would have the right to come to the committee and so speak and address themselves. As the hon. Prime Minister has suggested this afternoon, it would provide the members of the police commission with the right to come there and express themselves in public forum, before the members of the committee, before the public, and before the press, so that they might have an interpretation placed on their findings in a way we all could understand. Then, on top of that, it seems to me that it would provide the public with the opportunity to come before that committee and, having heard all the facts, express their opinion in a calm and collected manner; and disagree, if it is their belief that they should disagree, in preserving the traditions of freedom that we enjoy in this province.

Certainly we respect it and admire it. Let us have the benefit of public forum and public discussion. To my mind the hon. Prime Minister of this province, this afternoon, has set an example for all of us to follow when he has openly suggested that the rule of the House be suspended to bring this bill before the legal bills committee before second reading, so that we can have the benefit of discussion on the report of the police commission, the benefit of the discussion of those who prepared the legislation, the benefit of the discussion of those who would oppose the legislation. Having done this, then I think we would all be in a position to have the bill come back to this House and be decided upon in a right and reasonable fashion. Surely this is reason itself? I subscribe, Mr. Speaker, to the view that the amendment should not carry and we should uphold the motion of the hon. Prime Minister.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. T. L. Wells (Scarborough North): Mr. Speaker, having listened to some of the discussion this afternoon, one would think that the hon. members of the New Democratic Party are the only ones who have a private hold on this matter of principle. This, personally, is repulsive to me because I think that all of us in this House believe in principles and want to put our principles into action. I certainly would like to explain to this House how I think my principles fit in with the situation in which we now find ourselves.

Mr. Speaker, we have an amendment to withdraw Bill No. 99 from the order paper. In this we have some fuzzy thinking because, Mr. Speaker, Bill No. 99 contains one section which has caused a lot of controversy—section 14—it contains 21 other sections of useful legislation, legislation dealing with things like procedural provisions in connection with bargaining for policemen which are made standard with that applying to firemen; and other sections, to clear up technicalities.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, we are being asked to withdraw from the order paper—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I must remind the member not to get into sections of the bill. I must be fair to all sides.

Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I feel we are being asked to withdraw a bill which, as I have stated, contains a lot more than section 14, which is the one in controversy. I think, therefore, that I cannot vote for this amendment to withdraw this whole bill. I think the proper place for discussion of this bill is the legal bills committee. I think that the bill will have complete discussion there. I would say at this point, Mr. Speaker, that I will certainly speak and work for some changes in section 14.

I believe further, Mr. Speaker, in the character of the hon. Prime Minister. We who know him know the type of man he is, and we know that the statement he has made today and I would like to read it again:

That the legislative committee dealing with legal bills should have this bill with no restrictions, with no holds barred.

And he further says:

May I make it clear once again that the government is prepared, and always has been prepared, to amend, to change, to withdraw the bill or any portion thereof. The bill was put forward in the belief that it did not infringe or violate basic individual liberties and privileges, but if it does, it must be changed.

Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. Prime Minister, and I believe him when he makes this statement. I believe that we will have the fullest discussion of this bill at this committee and this is why it should not be withdrawn now.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not think my hon. friends realize what this means. They are being given an opportunity now, to work in co-operation with us, to right this problem, to help get at this problem of organized crime. And what a sorry spectacle is this group who claim they are the champions. They are out after organized crime and yet they do not want to come and work, in co-operation with us on this committee, to help get a section that will put teeth into The Police Act without infringing upon the individual rights of the citizens of this province. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we have here today a sorry spectacle. They do not want to co-operate to stamp out organized crime in this province.

I say to them, Mr. Speaker, I say directly to them, that we should vote against this amendment. Let us have the hon. members of the Opposition either put up or shut up.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment put forward by the hon. leader of the Opposition, if that was news to the hon. members of the House.

I am a new member of this House, Mr. Speaker. I am a young member of this House. I have sat here now for almost ten weeks. I have no particular illusions about the absolute virtue of the parliamentary system, and I have no particular illusions about the absolute principles to which the hon. member latterly referred. But I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I would not have believed it possible for a government to introduce such a bill into this Legislature on a Friday, and then for a government to defend such a bill in this Legislature on a Monday. It betrays, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. member: We are not talking about—

Another hon. member: We introduced it on Thursday.

Mr. MacDonald: We did not see the content until Friday afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. S. Lewis: If indeed, Mr. Speaker, I made the slip and said Friday instead of Thursday and the hon. members rise to it, then it is an even sadder commentary that the extra 24 hours should not have brought them to their collective democratic senses.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! I will have to remind the guests in the galleries that this is the second time they have given applause.

If there are any further demonstrations of applause or otherwise, I will order the attendants to clear the galleries in which the demonstration took place.

Mr. S. Lewis: What profoundly concerns the Opposition, I think, Mr. Speaker, is that it betrays an attitude of mind which is totally incompatible with fundamental human rights. And it goes further.

What frightens us is that the government has become addicted to anti-democratic procedures. I want to remind this House when talking about the discharging of this motion from the order paper that when the hon. Attorney General introduced the bill on Thursday he did not even have the courtesy to inform the House of the offensive sections it contained.

When the hon. Prime Minister puts forward this motion today he again circumvents one of the normal legislative processes which are the rights of members. In answer to the hon. members of the government opposite, it is acceptable government procedure that we discuss the principle of the bill first and then move it into committee, and no one surely can contest that. Let it be said, Mr. Speaker, that no one contests it particularly when it is a contentious bill and when there are principles at stake which must be discussed. What are we here for if not to debate in collectivity, the principles of such a bill.

Just as the bill flouts civil liberty, so the rights of the Opposition are flouted, and I suspect, Mr. Speaker, so the rights of certain members in the government are flouted.

I think it an unhappy fact that on this kind of motion, government hon. members have to rise, as my good friend, the hon. member for Lakeshore rose, to reaffirm his loyalty to the cause of freedom. This is not an oath-taking ceremonial. This is a matter of serious government concern. It is an unholy spectacle, indeed, to close ranks on a technicality such as has been presented, and we of the Opposition say, and say sincerely, to the government: "Gentlemen, pull yourselves together. Abandon the circuitous. Be decisive. Withdraw your bill. Present something anew that will properly deal with organized crime in Ontario and then we will support you and not until then."

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the member wish to speak?

Mr. Reilly: Yes. I was losing some of my enthusiasm for it, Mr. Speaker; I have been up and down, up and down a number of times. I realize it is difficult for you to look at everybody at the same time.

I want to assure the hon. member for Etobicoke, Mr. Speaker, that whether this was dealt with in this House or whether it was dealt with in committee, there is still a majority of members of the party dealing with it regardless of where it may be.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member is still for it, is he?

Mr. Reilly: I also want the hon. member for York South to know, and the hon. member for Etobicoke to know, and all the hon. members of this House, that I would resign from this House and from the Progressive-Conservative Party rather than vote for a bill like this that would interfere with the basic rights and privileges of the people. The hon. member for Etobicoke told you about receiving communications and letters. I guess there is not a member in this House who has not done so.

Mr. Braithwaite: Let them speak up.

Mr. Reilly: I was able in many instances to explain to the people to whom I spoke that under the circumstances, we were trying not to interfere with the basic rights and privileges of people. What our hon. Prime Minister has indicated today is that he had no intention of interfering with the basic rights and principles of people. It is on that basis that I would support this bill going to committee, Mr. Speaker, for several reasons—

An hon. member: Pretty weak.

Mr. Reilly: Pretty weak, then tune in my hon. friend. We are most anxious, Mr. Speaker, to hear what the Ontario Police Commission and its officials have to say about organized crime right here in Metropolitan Toronto and throughout the province of Ontario.

Mr. Singer: They have said it.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Reilly: Yes, they have said it and I have read their report this weekend, but the public of Ontario has not read it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

I am going to ask the members to give every member a fair hearing. I have endeavoured to see that all the members who have spoken so far had one. We have had a very good debate and I wish the members to co-operate so that every member will have a fair hearing and not be interrupted when he is making his remarks.

Mr. Reilly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was pointing out that there was a public indignation, and it was experienced by many hon. members of this House, perhaps by all hon. members. The reason in many instances was because the people did not understand what we as a government were trying to do.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): We are not all dumb!

Mr. Reilly: What is more, there were reports which appeared in the newspapers.

As one of our members said, there are several sections of the bill that I am sure every hon. member of this House would be willing to adopt once they were discussed; there are some sections of the bill on which judgment perhaps should be reserved.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, when we have an opportunity to listen to our legal officials, when we have an opportunity to listen to members of the police commission and we have an opportunity to debate the methods and the merits involved, I am quite sure that we can come to a decision that will be helpful in the interests of all the people of Ontario and will not deprive them of any of their rights. It is only on that basis I would vote to have this sent back to committee for further enlightenment, further study, and on that basis I am going to support the original motion and not the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Oshawa.

Mr. A. V. Walker (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like, if I might, to say a few words on this matter. I have listened with considerable interest to the speakers who have talked about the new hon. members in this House who have been speaking their minds and who should now get up and vote one way or the other. I still think we have a perfect right to make up our minds; we do not need to be told how to do it.

First of all, I would like to point out that I also have received a great number of phone calls, 25 letters, ten telegrams, and so on and so forth, and that all of the people are vitally concerned with this legislation. I have gone on record as making the statement in the local press and the local radio that I would never support legislation which, in my opinion, infringed on the rights of my fellow citizens, and I never will. On the other hand

I have also stated that I feel we need some form of legislation to better enable the control of the criminal element in our province. I must say to you this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, that last week I heard some hon. members, who now cry so loudly, saying exactly the same thing—that they felt that we needed some type of legislation, but that this legislation went too far.

Mr. Bryden: It sure does!

Mr. Walker: There seems to have been a great change in the last 36 or 72 hours, whatever it seems to be. I would say also, Mr. Speaker, that this debate has gone to some length over and above the original motion and amendment, until I admit quite frankly, that I do not know whether I am going to be asked to vote on the bill or whether I am going to be asked to vote on the motion or the amendment. It is getting a little confusing. I think you will agree that a great deal of laxity has been permitted.

The legal bills committee is composed, I believe, of some 40 hon. members of this House. I have found in the discussions I have had as a new member in these committees, that the committee has been wide open, permitting free discussion.

Firstly, Mr. Speaker, I want this to be very definitely understood, that my vote today is on the motion or the amendment. It does not signify that I am either for or against the bill that is being presented.

Mr. Trotter: When are you going to make up your mind?

Mr. Walker: I can make up my own mind and I certainly do not need anyone in this House to help me. I feel, as has already been stated in this House, that parts of this bill are needed, as far as we are concerned, and that parts of the bill should be amended. That is my feeling, if you would care to know my feeling. I say that to the hon. gentlemen on my right. But I cannot disagree with the reference to the committee. I think it is interesting to note that, in committee, it has been very evident to me, there has been no solidarity of government voting. In committee, on various occasions, there has been a considerable difference of opinion in the votes which have been held.

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have to remind this House, or the Conservative caucus, or even the government, that at no time am I afraid to stand up for what I think is the right of individual people. I do want to say just this:

I can see a reason why the Opposition would like to see this bill withdrawn now. I think they are quite aware that when this bill goes to the committee, there will be ample opportunity for the people who proposed some of the suggestions in this bill to explain why they did it, the Opposition will realize that they have lost ground in their political objectives.

An hon. member: No. Poppycock!

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, over the weekend, the people of Ontario have been subjected to a barrage of press, radio and television reports. It did not get through to the people what this bill was all about.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Attorney General said what it was about.

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, I venture to say that most of the hon. members who are sitting in this House have not read all of the points in this bill. I make that observation because most of the statements which were read in this House were letters from individuals who may have never seen the bill. There were press quotes from the daily press, or quotes from other papers.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Did they never see the bill in the press?

Mr. Singer: Did the hon. Attorney General not see it?

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, I am one who believes in freedom of the press, but I do think that sometimes, with freedom, should go a little bit of responsibility. I want to say this, and I have wanted to say it for some time: I think our news outlets are too prone to give wide publicity to the reckless and the irresponsible, and not to the responsible speeches. And that goes for what is said in this House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wellington-Dufferin has the floor.

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, I listened on my car radio, coming down this morning, and heard the report which has gone out over and over all through the weekend, about what the hon. leader of the Opposition said—I do not deny it is right for him to have his say—about what the hon. member for York South had to say, and about what the hon. member for Dovercourt had to say. Then after it was all over, and I had listened to about five minutes of this propaganda, then they said that the hon. Prime Minister had said: "I made a statement in which I said I would not tolerate any legislation which infringes upon or jeopardizes the personal rights and freedoms of the individual."

Mr. Speaker, there has been a deliberate attempt, over the weekend, to inflame the passions of people and to distort the intentions of this legislation; and I am going to vote against the amendment. I want this bill to go to the committee. I am not on the committee, but I have every confidence in this—

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member wants to get out from under, does he?

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, I have very confidence in the sound judgment of the hon. members of this Legislature, regardless of political party, that in that committee they will ask questions and we will get answers, not propaganda.

Mr. Speaker, over the weekend I exposed myself to the public every place that I could.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, I had a higher regard for the mentality of the hon. members of this House. I did not mean that I physically exposed myself to the public, I simply meant that I exposed myself to hear the voice of public opinion.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that some of the hon. members would not appreciate what I was trying to say, because their minds operate on a different level.

Mr. Speaker, I was in the city of Guelph; I was in the city of Kitchener—on Saturday afternoon I attended a seed fair, where there were literally hundreds of people.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Nobody knew the hon. member.

Mr. Root: Well, again the hon. member for Bruce has displayed his ignorance there. I was in my own riding. It was a place where there were hundreds of people there. A few wanted to know what this was about. Actually, I never had a letter, I never had a phone call, about this; but I did have phone calls about other legislation before the House. In the evening I attended a presentation and met hundreds of people.

Yesterday I attended the opening of a church in another community and I exposed myself there to hundreds of people—again I do not mean physically, I mean I made myself available where hundreds of people could talk to me. I think some of the hon. members better go—I will not say it.

Mr. Speaker, what I am trying to say is simply this: In my riding we are not so easily brain-washed by some of the Metropolitan press, radio and television as perhaps other ridings are—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I must remind the member that he must stick to the amendment that is before the House. I would ask him to confine his remarks to the amendment, that the order be discharged and the bill be withdrawn.

Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, what I wanted to say was that I think it will be in the interests of all concerned if this bill goes to the committee, where people who have views to express can express them. We will get all sides of the story, and if the bill comes back to this House we will deal with it. If it dies in committee, it will die in committee. If it is amended, we will deal with the amendment.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of repetition here. I do not think anything is to be added by continually repeating some of the things which the hon. members have repeated. There is only one thing I would like to make clear and I would like you, if possible, to make this clear to me.

There has been a great deal of suggestion from the Opposition hon. members that if this goes to committee it dies there. Of course, after it comes from committee, it will get second reading here and they can discuss the principles till the cows come home.

Mr. Speaker: To answer the Minister, I would say that the procedure is that when the bill goes to the committee, the committee must bring a report back to the House. At that time the bill will be placed on the order paper for second reading in the House and the principle of the bill will be debated at that time.

Mr. A. E. Reuter (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to rise—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I noticed the member for Sault Ste. Marie first, so I will have to give him the floor.

Mr. A. A. Wishart (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, one point which I think has not been made entirely clear is that, in all the remarks of the hon. members of the two Opposition parties, I have detected an impression that the reference of this bill to the legal bills committee would be in the nature of choking off or cutting off debate. That impression has been given by more than one speaker in the Opposition.

I am sure that they are speaking with tongue-in-cheek, and that this is certainly a mark of insincerity in this type of presentation; because if they do not know, I should like to make it clear that in that committee not only the members of the committee have a right to speak, but any hon. member of this House who attends the committee is given the fullest opportunity to speak and discuss the bill. As the hon. Prime Minister has pointed out, in his statement to the House today, the public will be invited to attend the hearings of the committee on notice. And as you have been told, and as I surely do not need to repeat, members of the police commission, law officers of the Crown, anyone, any person, any group, anyone who has anything to say with respect to this bill will have the fullest opportunity to be there and state their views and be heard. Then, as has been pointed out by some of my hon. friends, the bill, when it comes back to this House, can be debated fully in this House.

So let me make it clear, if I may, to all concerned, that the reference of this bill to the committee on legal bills is not in any way a choking-off of debate but a widening of it, a full opportunity to debate the bill. Then hon. members have again the further opportunity, when the bill comes back to this House, to debate it clause by clause again.

Mr. Reuter: Mr. Speaker, after listening to all of the debates going on in this House for quite some time this afternoon, I am compelled to rise to express my opinions and the way I feel about this matter as a new member.

The suggestion has been made that a lot of the backbenchers would not support this bill nor would they support the government in the attempt to pass such a bill. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the motion made by our hon. Prime Minister to refer this matter to the committee for full discussion is indeed, sir, what we must have. I feel that there are a lot of motives behind the report of the crime commission. I have read the report completely myself and I feel there is some desirable legislation that must be passed to endeavour to implement the recommendations. I feel that the bill has been an attempt to implement some of the recommendations, but I do feel that in order to learn what the members of the commission have been promoting, what their thinking is and what the legal minds in the department of the hon. Attorney General are thinking, we as committee members are entitled to know the facts behind this.

I must say that in my opinion if this bill would be withdrawn, it would simply be an easy way to get out of the whole situation. I, for one, want to know what the facts are behind it. I can say right now in no uncertain terms that if, after it has gone to the committee, there is no recommendation for an amendment to the bill, I will certainly oppose the bill. I must vote against it in its present form. But I do feel that I owe it to myself and to my constituents, indeed to the rest of the government, to find out the facts behind this bill. I must move against the amendment.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, I am another one of the backbenchers who have been referred to from time to time and I also, like many of us here today, have received many telephone calls and letters regarding this particular bill. I have listened to the radio, the television, read the newspapers and have seen, read and heard many accounts as to what people think of this particular bill. I for one want to know a little bit more about it. I would like to know about it from the people who were directly concerned in making up this bill and I can think of no better way of finding that out than hearing everyone concerned about it in the committee. I happen to be a member of this committee and I cannot understand why the hon. members of the Opposition are afraid of this going to committee.

It seems to me, and maybe I am wrong, that they seem to be afraid this bill will be changed. After listening to everything everybody concerned has to say, if it is shown that the rights of the individual will be harmed, then I for one will vote against it. I will make up my own mind like the hon. member for Oshawa. If there are certain amendments that are needed to preserve the rights of the individual, I certainly will vote for them. It seems to me that the object of this particular bill is to give more teeth to the police in their efforts to halt crime in Ontario and at the same time this must be done without infringing the rights of the people of Ontario. I do not think there is any question about it, that every hon. member of this government and every hon. member of the Opposition is desirous to see that crime is prevented in Ontario. I also think that these same people would not stand for infringing the rights of the individual people of Ontario.

I welcome the opportunity of being a member of this committee and of listening to what everyone has to say regarding this. There has been so much printed in the paper, you hardly know where to go, you do not know what actually to believe. I feel that the right way to settle this so that the rights of our people are not infringed upon, and so that we can do the most we can to give the police the power they need in their efforts to combat crime, is by a committee after listening to everyone who really knows a great deal about this particular problem.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, just for the record, I would like to read again the statement, or part of the statement, made by the hon. Prime Minister and he says:

In accepting responsibility for Bill No. 99 as leader of this government I say that it was introduced after it had been very carefully drafted by the law officers of the Crown, who are of the opinion that it did not interfere with the fundamental rights of the people of Ontario.

We have had some flag-waving today, Mr. Speaker, from the other side, a good deal of it. We heard the Opposition say that we are going back into the dark ages, and mention the Magna Carta and other things. I think it should be pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that the leader of our government, the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario, served with distinction in the last war.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cowling: Just a minute now, just a minute. Another thing they said is that we are doing away with the fundamental rights of the people of our province, a pretty ridiculous statement in the light of what I have just said. I would venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are just as many hon. members on this side of the House who served in the last war and fought for these freedoms as on that side of the House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Could I just ask the member to stick to the amendment before the House and not to go too far astray?

Mr. Cowling: Very good, sir. It is sometimes difficult to do that when you hear so many speeches from the other side. But I think we should think about this thing seriously, Mr. Speaker. Nobody is taking this lightly. As a matter of fact, I think the hon. leader of the Opposition and his party should think very seriously about withdrawing their amendment to withdraw the bill. That makes sense to me.

The very idea of the NDP suggesting to backbenchers that they vote independently, I venture to say, is having about as much effect on the backbenchers as I would have with the NDP; which is practically nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I urge on the hon. members of the House—and I say all the hon. members of the House, including the Opposition, and some of them have spoken very well here this afternoon—that they do not support the amendment of the hon. leader of the Opposition but support the hon. leader of our government in sending on this bill to a standing committee of the House.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, may I submit to you and through you to all hon. members of the House that for clarification purposes, if for no other reason, the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition should be defeated and that the motion of the hon. Prime Minister should carry. I would like to comment on that briefly if I may.

I would again submit to you, sir, and to all hon. members who have professed such stirring emotional positions here today, that there has already been too much emotion, too much distortion associated with the remarks of the Opposition. In fact, sir, all too many people have been unduly alarmed by observations made by Opposition speakers. I would say to you, sir, that surely the assurances of the hon. Prime Minister, his sensible comments made in support of his motion, should bring nothing but a sense of comfort and confidence to every person in this province.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

An hon. member: Do you want to bet?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: What, Mr. Speaker, may I ask those who have already supported the amendment today, can be more sensible than a motion which will provide all interested people to hear the explanations which will be made available in committee? What can be more sensible and appropriate, under the circumstances, than the provision of a forum which will enable all interested people to express their misgivings and their fears to those who may very well find themselves in a position to allay those fears?

Mr. Speaker, I would submit again to the hon. members of this House, and those who have spoken from the Opposition benches know it full well, the standing committee of this Legislature is in fact an integral part of the Legislature itself; but, by the very rules and procedures of our standing committees, it is much, much easier to examine legislation in detail. I am going to assume, Mr. Speaker, if I may, that those of the Opposition who have spoken are quite sincere in their wish to express their interest in the people of the province of Ontario, but I would simply ask them to consider employing the same type of responsibility they have seen fit to request of the government. May I simply ask the hon. members of the Opposition to let reason, common sense and a calm reappraisal of their own position prevail. It may not suit their purpose too well, but in this way they can join with the government in helping to resolve a highly important matter in the interests of all, as the hon. member for Downsview has indicated it was his real purpose to do.

What is apparent, from the comments of those Opposition hon. members who have spoken, is that they say, "Do not confuse me with the facts, my mind is made up." If the amendment is passed Mr. Speaker; all too many people are denied the facts, and there would appear to be no fundamental difference of opinion among the hon. members in this House with respect to positions associated with our civil liberties. I believe, Mr. Speaker, those liberties will be protected more effectively in the manner proposed by the hon. Prime Minister. I simply suggest to you that it is about time we got on with the vote.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. A. Pritchard (Hamilton Centre): Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said in this House that has been repeated time and time again. I would like to take some hon. members of the Opposition back to their pre-election statements when they were screaming for action on the crime wave and syndicated crime in Ontario.

I would point out to the hon. members that possibly the best thing that has happened to this government is what has happened this weekend, because we have had it proved to us that when the people do not like anything, they say so. I think, in fairness to the time spent in preparing this bill, that it should go to the committee; anyone can attend that committee. The hon. Prime Minister has said that he is unalterably opposed to any legislation which deprives any individual in the province of Ontario or Canada, of their liberty; this I believe, and this I support.

The only thing I can say to this House is: Cease the levity; stop the nonsense; it is our responsibility in this House to give good government. This we are trying to do, and the only way we can do it is to get back to common sense and wait until the implications of this bill have been studied by people who have had their thinking cleared for them and know what they have to do.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mrs. Pritchard: Something has to be done about crime in the province of Ontario. Obviously the commission has not had the ability to do all they want to do, or the power; and no one intends to give them power which will interfere with liberty. I shall not support the amendment.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Has everyone spoken on the amendment who cares to speak? I recognize the member for St. George, first.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I shall attempt to speak as briefly and as temperately and as moderately as I can, on such an important and passionate subject as human rights and civil liberties.

May I also say that I hope you will extend to me the leniency you have extended to the other hon. members of this House in discussing what should be a procedural motion. I appreciate that you have let some of the hon. members wander off the procedural aspect, and I trust you will allow me to do the same because I do not intend to infringe upon very much of the House's time.

The question of human rights and civil liberties is certainly a passionate one for us all. I must say, sir, that when section 14 of the offending bill was brought to my attention, in this House late on Thursday afternoon, I was quite blind with rage at the incompetence and stupidity of any group of people who would attempt to bring such a measure before this Legislature.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: Since then, sir, I have had the opportunity of taking a look at the bill as a whole. I have not changed my mind regarding section 14, in the slightest. I think it is repugnant to us all—it must be, to us all. Over the weekend, and on Friday and today,

I have had the opportunity of speaking to many hon. members of this Legislature, on this side of the House and on the other side of the House. I have spoken to veteran members. I have spoken to new members. I have spoken to old members. I have spoken to young members. I have spoken to Cabinet members. I have spoken to non-Cabinet members. I have yet to find a single person who has a single good word to say about section 14.

An hon. member: How did it get through caucus? Was the hon. member at caucus?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: Saying that, I just want to say that I agree with everything which has been said on both sides of the House, here today and last Friday, regarding our human rights and civil liberties. I agree with them. I passionately believe in them; I think we all do, sir. But there is more to this bill than section 14.

I came here today—and I will be perfectly blunt and perfectly frank—I came here today, not having had the opportunity of being able to discuss in private the full implications of this bill. I regret, as a party member, saying that. May I also say that, in my ignorance, I came here today expecting the government to move that this bill would be withdrawn in toto. I am now convinced that under our rules this is not possible; and, of course, I refer hon. members to section 60.

An hon. member: Rule 60!

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: I am sorry, rule 60, of the rules of this House.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: Now I have not interrupted a single hon. member today, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: —and I regret very much anybody else doing this to me at this time, on a matter that is as serious as this.

I refer to rule 60 of the rules of this Legislature, which states that every public bill shall be read twice in the House before committal or amendment. Before committal or amendment. Certainly to withdraw a bill, in my mind, must amend that bill.

I think the government, sir, is caught on the horns of a dilemma. I think that every single hon. member of this Legislature—certainly every single hon. member of the government—would now want to repudiate, if they could, here in this House today, this particular offending section of this bill. I said I think they would. I have not had the opportunity of speaking to them all, but I think they would. I can see no reason why they would not.

The government cannot withdraw the bill in its entirety; and what I have heard here this afternoon has led me to believe that there are many hon. members who believe, as I now have come to believe, that the bill in its entirety should not be withdrawn.

Ergo, what do we do? We have heard a great deal from the New Democratic Party hon. members this afternoon, that they want to discuss this bill in principle. I agree with them. The bill has to be discussed in principle in this House, and how in the name of all common sense and goodness, sir, can the bill be discussed in principle if we withdraw it today in its entirety?

Sir, we have had the other observation made by some of the hon. members of the Liberal Party that they want to find out the whys and the wherefores and the means of the introduction of this bill. I agree with that as well, sir. I want to examine, I want to probe, I want to search the mentality of the men who had the gall to introduce this bill into this House and the only place I can do that is in committee. That is the only place, sir. We cannot do it on the floor of this House. How can we?

I want to publicly castigate the people who introduced that section of this bill. The only way I can do it is in committee. To withdraw it in its entirety today is nonsense. This will mean an end to it. This will lower the boom, sir. We do not want that to happen. Therefore, sir, I feel that we have to support the motion of the hon. Prime Minister in referring this to committee. I may say that I do this with great regret because I do not want to be tainted in any manner, shape or form with that particular section of that bill and I will fight—even cross the floor of this House—and I will vote against this section of the bill if it is put to this House in this House, sir. But I do want to understand the thinking of the people who introduced it. I do want to attempt to point out to them in no uncertain terms how wrong they are. The only possible place, the only possible way we can do that, is in committee.

Therefore, sir, as I say, it is with regret, because I am afraid it is going to taint me with that particular section but I see no other way of doing it, that I say that I do intend to vote for the amendment of the hon. Prime Minister.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, like the last hon. member who spoke it is certainly my intention to be as brief as possible. Much has been said. I think a great deal was said by the last speaker, who of course, is one of those who is brave of heart and who is not afraid to speak up to the hon. members who are in the government benches. One of the things he said in just the last minute or two in this House was this, that he wanted this bill to go back to committee so he could publicly castigate the men who were behind the thinking of this particular bill and who were responsible for it.

Mr. Speaker, there is only one group of men in the province of Ontario that has been responsible for this bill being brought to this Legislature. That group of people is the hon. members of the Conservative government of the province of Ontario led by the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario. I suggest to the brave young man, the hon. member for St. George, that if he wishes to publicly castigate them let him publicly stand up in this Legislature and put the blame where the blame should be—on the government of the people who have accepted the advice of the civil servants or the enforcement officers of this province and who brought the bill into this Legislature, the highest court in the province of Ontario, so that all hon. members of the Legislature could discuss it and not those, just those, who have the opportunity to belong to the legal bills committee. This is the place where it should be discussed.

Mr. Speaker, as far as I am aware, and I have looked back a long time, I have not found one single instance when, after a bill has been introduced in this Legislature, ever since it started, the procedures that have been suggested by the hon. Prime Minister this afternoon have taken effect. Many hon. members particularly from the government benches have said that this bill should go to committee. We on this side agree that it should go to committee but it should go to committee after it has had second reading, just the same as all other bills introduced into this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, may I point out to you that such important bills as the hospital insurance bill had second reading in this House before they went to committee. Such bills as the Medicare bill and many others of great importance over the past number of years have been debated in this House and every one of them, without exception, has gone to committee after the second reading. This House, Mr. Speaker, has been treated with the utmost contempt by the hon. members of the government and I would say that it has been treated with contempt in three instances:

Number one was when the hon. Attorney General introduced Bill No. 99 in this Legislature and gave us no intimation that there were any offending passages in it whatsoever. He did not say one single word about the one particular section that most of us are against. Number two is that this House is being treated with contempt here because this afternoon we are not going to have the opportunity of debating it on second reading. Number three is the absence of the hon. Attorney General here this afternoon. The Number 2 man of the government and the man who is responsible for the law-making of this province of Ontario who, after introducing this bill last Thursday, has not got the fortitude to come into this Legislature this afternoon—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

The member must not impugn the dignity or honour of any member, particularly if he is not in the House to defend himself. I would ask the member also to stick to the amendment before the House and not discuss the honour of any other member of the House.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to accept your ruling.

Many excuses have been given by our Conservative friends this afternoon, sir, that legislation such as this is needed. Mr. Speaker, I think it was the hon. member for Hamilton Centre who reminded us that before the last provincial election we in the Liberal Party were screaming that the province should do something and the government should do something about crime in this province. Mr. Speaker, we are still screaming and we ask the government to bring in a bill dealing with organized crime in the province that we can support.

May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the people who bring legislation before this legislative assembly are the government of the province and not the committees? It is all very well for my friend, the hon. member for Kingston, for example, to stand up and say that he wants to be in committee so that he knows what is going on. By supporting the government that he does, he is supporting an organization that is supposed to know what is going on before the legislation is brought in in the first place.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: It is ridiculous.

Mr. Reaume: It is true, is it not?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I will not take much longer. All I can say is that it is not nearly as ridiculous as some of the things we have heard given by hon. members on the other side today and on other days. May I say this, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker? There is great apprehension, not only in the province of Ontario, but as the hon. member for St. George said, among the hon. members of this Legislature. The hon. Prime Minister called it "the most exclusive club in the land," and we are being denied the dignity of discussing this legislation, which should be put on our desks, in not proceeding with second reading, this afternoon.

There has been great apprehension, not only in Ontario, not only in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, but all across Canada. As a matter of fact, we have heard reviews on radio and television by people who suggest they are going to take this to the United Nations. We are being put in the class of police-state countries whether we like it or not.

I still, Mr. Speaker, share the apprehension that has been shown by the newspapers and by the hon. members here this afternoon, and after reading the hon. Prime Minister's statement from cover to cover I must say most regretfully I still have that apprehension. May I refer you to page seven of his statement, and I quote one paragraph:

May I say also that there are many misconceptions concerning this proposed possible legislation. While the terms "police state" and "police state legislation" have been used, I think it should be pointed out that this legislation gives no additional powers whatsoever to the police of this province. Rather, what it purports to do is to give certain powers to three men sitting as the Ontario Police Commission and then only when they are in the course of making a report to the Attorney General in connection with three limited matters, namely, (a) the extent, investigation or control of crime; (b) enforcement of the law.

Mr. Speaker, what is limited about enforcement of the law? To me this is one of the most important things we have in the whole province, or anywhere in the world, as far as that is concerned.

(c) the function of the commission under The Police Act.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House can support nothing except the complete withdrawal of this bill, not only to save face in the province of Ontario but to put ourselves on a pedestal where we can work again and face the people in this world who believe in total freedom.

The hon. member for High Park mentioned, a few moments ago, that there were many members of the Conservative Party who had a long period of service overseas. We certainly agree with it, and we ask those hon. members now to stand up for the freedom of the people of the province of Ontario the same way they did when they were fighting Hitlerism and Mussolinism, because it is things like this which start dictatorships in the world. And as far as that goes, Mr. Speaker, we have no room for it here in this province.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I rise of course, to support the amendment put forward by the hon. leader of the Opposition. I think I might not have taken the opportunity to speak on a bill of this nature because of inexperience in legalistic or police problems, but one tends to express one's opinions when listening to the debate on such an important matter.

It is apparent to me that some of the government hon. members, in opposing the amendment and supporting the motion, have sort of dwindled down to an appeal to the Opposition to use some common sense and offer co-operation to the government to get this bill into committee before we deal with it in principle. But I think that the government should realize the responsibility of the Opposition; and I think the Opposition is being exemplary in its approach to this problem this afternoon.

The attempt by the government to take this bill out of second reading and into committee is nothing more than an attempt to pass on the responsibility of the government to either the committee, or responsible members of the civil service. We can understand what would happen. They are afraid to debate the principle in second reading, because at that point they have agreed, as a government, that they are in favour of the principle embodied in the bill. But if it can be sent to committee first, the committee then deals with it and the government is off the hook. They have made an excuse to get out from under their responsibilities in regard to this important problem.

Certainly it is the responsibility of the Opposition to first see that their impression of the rules of the House is lived up to, and that we do not deviate, on a technicality, from the established principles of dealing with legislation.

I can remember many times when the leader of the government, the Prime Minister or whoever was leading the House, sir, would get up and appeal to the Opposition to let this bill go through second reading so that they could get it to committee at an early date and bring it back to deal with, section by section. I feel it is utter stupidity to judge an important bill in committee stage before we have agreed upon the principle.

I have had a lot of experience in dealing with reports of committees in another activity, and certainly the first thing to be done, before a report is drafted, is to come to some agreement that you have a principal objective, and you want that down on paper for people to consider. In this case all that would happen would be that the government, after it has come out of committee, regardless of what happened to it, could say, "Now it has been taken out of our hands; it is now the responsibility of the committee."

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it would be the responsibility of the Opposition, if this amendment is defeated and this bill goes to committee first, when section 14 is reached, to absent themselves from the committee and not deal with the section. That would be my approach to such an important matter as this if it were to go to the committee stage.

It has been said by an hon. member of the government, that the committee stage would give the public a full opportunity to present their views, where they could show faith in the government. Well, certainly, the public have shown their loss of faith in the government, by the reports in the press in the last few days. Certainly there have been expressions by some of the greatest jurists in this country as to their impressions of this particular kind of legislation. So why should they be appealing to the public to come before a committee and give their impressions on such an important piece of legislation?

I would urge the hon. members to support the amendment, and let us follow the regular established procedures in this House and deal with it in principle first. Let the government accept the responsibility of saying to the people, "We still believe in the principle we have enunciated by the introduction of this bill. We are not going to try to get out from under our responsibility by passing it off to a committee who then will have the responsibility of reporting to the House and then, at the same time, let the civil servants take the rap for the type of wording in the legislation."

Mr. Speaker: Has every member spoken who wishes to speak?

Mr. H. J. Price (St. David): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended saying anything about this matter today but I feel that my constituents would wish me to say something on such an important matter.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is probably the most important matter which has been raised in the House since I have been here, during the last eight or nine years. What we are really trying to evolve is an orderly system to get at a matter with which we are all vitally concerned. We are all vitally concerned about how we are going to handle the matter of crime in the province of Ontario. I feel that the Opposition have conducted themselves in a very responsible manner on this particular subject. The whole debate has arisen over something which I believe, to a very large extent, is a misunderstanding. The press had a duty to bring this matter as forcibly as they possibly could to the residents of this province, and they have done so. I think the Opposition, in the responsible attitude which they have taken towards this matter, is to be commended. Never have I been prouder to be a member of a government in a democratic assembly than I have been here today.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am really appalled. I have never been more shocked, dumbfounded and surprised than I was today to see the hon. Prime Minister, a most honourable man, come into this House and use such unprecedented unpardonable procedural manoeuvres to have full discussion on a bill shelved. He may have been technically right but he was morally wrong.

Mr. Speaker: This bill is a result of the crime probe. The proper procedure would have been to present the report to the House, have the House discuss the report, take into consideration the recommendations, the suggestions, and then have legislation from that report brought down. Had such a procedure been followed, we would not be in the position we are today, where technical procedural manoeuvres have to be employed to prevent full debate on this bill right at this moment.

Mr. Speaker: It has been said this was in the public interest, that the public is being best served. May I say at this time, Mr.

Speaker, that the public would be best served were this bill completely withdrawn. We can be most thankful today for a very alert press. Had it not had the copy of the bill and alerted the people of Ontario and the Opposition, this—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the member would stay away from the bill now and just stick to the amendment, so that we may proceed.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I am. I just mentioned the amendment and I mentioned the complete withdrawal of the bill, which is the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: We have to commend the press for alerting Ontario. This is a real dark, dismal day. It is only one week ago—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Newman: —that we mentioned on the floor of the House here, the 116th anniversary of the Hungarian fight for independence and freedom and here we are, on March 23, in one fell swoop, ready to take away one of the vital freedoms of the individual. Mr. Speaker, just imagine what would have happened, had the press not been allowed its freedom of expression.

Mr. Reilly: We would discuss it in committee, that is what would have happened.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, this could have followed the regular procedure of all bills discussed right here in this House, and after its second reading, been sent to the committee. That is the normal procedure, that is the way all bills are taken care of. Why, all of a sudden, does this one bill have to deviate from that procedure? Parliamentary procedure has been set up for a set purpose. Why do we have to deviate all of a sudden because the government finds itself extremely embarrassed? Had the hon. Prime Minister come in this House today and simply apologized, stating the government had made a mistake, Ontario would have admired the hon. Prime Minister. Everyone admires a man who is not afraid to admit a mistake.

But to use a manoeuvre to cover up a mistake is unpardonable.

Mr. Speaker, I, like many of the other hon. members of this House, have received many phone calls and letters, asking that this bill be withdrawn. The concern of the people was most astounding. Last Friday, within probably two hours after we had completed the discussion in this House, we had a picket line in front of the Parliament buildings. This is how concerned the people are. This is how concerned they should be, when one of their freedoms is being taken away from them. Is not one of the freedoms being taken away from us right here in this House by this discussion, the freedom to debate the bill on second reading? The government did not have enough—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Newman: There are apparently two rules in this House, one for the Opposition and one for the government to twist and do with it as it pleases.

Mr. Speaker: I want to remind the member that I, as the Speaker, determine the rules of the House, whether in my opinion they are being followed or not, and I would like the member to stick with the amendment that is now before the House, because I think he is breaking the rules.

Mr. Newman: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not mean to break the rules. I mean no reflection on your high office. Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak for about another seven minutes and so I move at this moment the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Can the member finish his remarks? If so, we would like to finish with his remarks.

Mr. Newman: No, not for about another ten minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Newman moves the adjournment of the debate.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 23, 1964

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

RE BILL No. 99

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, before we adjourned for the supper hour I had been speaking on the amendment of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Oliver) that Bill No. 99 be withdrawn. I had attempted to point out that in the interest of the public the honourable thing for the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) to do was to withdraw his motion and withdraw the bill, following that to bring the report of the Ontario Police Commission on organized crime into this House for full House discussion, and after a complete discussion of that report, come down with some appropriate legislation.

By the procedural manoeuvre he has employed here today, he has indicated to this House his unwillingness to follow normal House rules. Never before has the freedom of so many been jeopardized by the wishes of so few.

An hon. member: That is good. That is good.

Mr. Newman: It is as true now as it was then. Mr. Speaker, for the edification of the hon. gentleman to my far left I would like to repeat that last statement. Never before has the freedom of so many been jeopardized by the wishes of so few. Mr. Speaker, just imagine the harm that may already have been done to our own tourist industry—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Newman: Our American friends may think twice today—

Mr. Speaker: I am going to inform the members once again that I want an orderly debate. We have had a fairly good debate this afternoon and kept in order and I would like it to continue this way this evening. I would ask the members to give the member speaking their attention and if he is to be called to order I shall do so.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, every hon. member in this House knows that were he to travel to a country where such a law was in existence he certainly would be most wary, and more than likely would think before he would ever consider entering that country.

The hon. Attorney General (Mr. Cass), during his remarks on Thursday, March 19, on page 1799 of Hansard was asked by the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer):

Mr. Speaker, before we get into the orders of the day I wonder if the hon. Attorney General could advise us if all these bills will be going to committee. There is a lot of new and important legislation here and I think the committee should have a look at all of them.

The hon. Attorney General replied:

I think they would all go to committee, Mr. Speaker, except perhaps The Police Act which might better be discussed in the committee of the whole House.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

An hon. member: But he is out now, he has been fired.

Another hon. member: Where is he?

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I appeal to all the hon. members of this House to think first of the many who came from oppressed areas of this world and who have been fortunate to escape police states, and then to vote for the amendment of my hon. leader.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the amendment, I would like to say that this afternoon when listening to the hon. Prime Minister making his statement to some of the other government hon. members, I found it was quite interesting. We listened to the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly) explaining that he would support this bill if it were not for section 14. We also listened to the hon. member for St. George (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) condemning the government—

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I just want to correct the speaker. I did not signify or indicate that it was section 14 only.

Mr. Davison: It is even worse if he feels more of it should be withdrawn; but he certainly did say that. The hon. member for St. George also took the position that he condemned the government for bringing in this type of bill. The hon. Prime Minister, in his statement, although he may not say it is a perfect bill, says he still feels that nothing in the bill is going to do too much harm. But we also listened to the hon. member for Hamilton Centre (Mrs. Pritchard) talking about crime, saying "Sure, I think we all will admit there is crime in this province now. I think we all want to see that it is cleared up. We are all looking for the best way to clear it up." If we are going to clear up crime, the best thing to do is to have a second reading in this House where all the hon. members will have an opportunity to debate the principle in this bill. We must bear in mind that this committee, to which the hon. Prime Minister wants to send the bill, is a committee of about 50 members—

An hon. member: Thirty-five members.

Mr. Davison: Thirty-five members—and there are about 107 or 108 members in this House now, representing all the people of Ontario. I do feel that this should be debated in this House, the decision made here, and then it should be sent to committee. Do not have it sent, first, to a small committee and then brought back with those sections which now, I think, even the government wants out. I think I can predict that when the bill comes back into this House again certain sections will have been taken out.

I would therefore say that the bill should be debated here in second reading. We have had all kinds of important bills in here before, and we have debated their principles rather than send them to committee first. This is only one way the government is trying to get itself off the hook. It has got itself into a mess in this situation, public opinion over the weekend has shown that, and now it is trying to get out. It is taking the easy way, rather than taking the responsibility of having second reading here in the House.

Mr. R. J. Harris (Beaches): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the member for Beaches, I would like to correct what I think is an erroneous impression. Whenever the motion was made by the Prime Minister, and the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) was speaking, I said that in my opinion bills had been referred to the standing committee before receiving second reading. In the interval of the supper hour, I have looked up several occasions of this, and I thought it might be of interest to the members if I just took a second and mentioned some of these which are in the 1957 journals of the House.

On March 8, 1957, five labour bills—Nos. 137, 138, 139, 140 and 141—were referred to the labour committee after first reading.

Then, on March 11, Bills Nos. 137, 138, 139 and 140 were reported by the committee back to the House.

Then on March 13, two days later, Bills Nos. 137, 138, and 140 were given second reading. And on the same day, on Bill No. 139, a motion by the Prime Minister made an order for second reading to be discharged, and the bill was referred back to the committee on labour for further consideration.

Then on March 18 of the same year, Bill No. 139 again was reported by the labour committee with Bill No. 141; and on March 28 these two bills were given second reading. Then there was just one other one here in the same year, 1957, March 21, Bill No. 165, The Hospital Services Commission Act, was given first reading and then on March 27 it was reported by the committee on health, and on March 28 it was given second reading. I just wanted to give the House that information to substantiate the remarks that I made when the motion was made this afternoon, that there had been occasions when bills were referred to the standing committee before they had received second reading.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, may I ask you if on those occasions there was unanimous consent for what was, I think, an unusual procedure?

Mr. Speaker: On some occasions when the first reading was given, then of course Rule 60 of the House was waived, which would be by unanimous consent. The other one which I mentioned with regard to Bill No. 139 was by order of the Prime Minister. The order was made that the bill be discharged after second reading and that it go back to the labour committee for further consideration.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, one cannot have sat in this House for the past three hours this afternoon and indeed for 25 minutes this evening without having been deeply moved by many of the comments from hon. members on all sides of the House.

It is very obvious that we are all concerned with the protection of fundamental rights that every citizen has under our British system of justice. Under this system the individual is entitled to be protected from being abused by the state and also from those who do not observe our laws. The government must guarantee freedom from both these abuses. It cannot abdicate its responsibility to make certain that the individual is protected against the criminal segments of our society. The protection of the individual from the abuse of power by the state, and the abuse of power by the criminal element may involve a legal balancing act, and one upon which I am not qualified to speak at this moment without hearing the experts who drew up this bill and also the experts who may have contrary views.

I do not wish, and I do not feel that any hon. members of this House wish to appraise the bill and its effects on legal opinions only on what we may have read in the newspapers or have heard on television. It is necessary that we hear these legal opinions directly so that we may properly be able to assess them. The responsibility to balance the aforementioned powers is one I cannot meet without having all sides of the story in front of me. The police commission report indicates that certain powers are required to meet the crime threat. Let us have these people in at committee and let them make their report to us.

We are advised by the hon. Prime Minister that his legal advisers say the powers in this bill are designed to meet the threat without infringing on the rights of the individual. So let us have those people in at committee before us. If there are people who have contrary views, let us have those people in. I say, Mr. Speaker, we have a grave responsibility to ensure that the people of this province are properly protected from all threats to our freedom, and the price of freedom is eternal vigilance. Let us be vigilant and study this legislation thoroughly in the manner proposed this afternoon by the hon. Prime Minister. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support the amendment to the motion introduced by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. J. R. Knox (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, as a backbencher who feels capable of making up his own mind, I am opposed to the amendment to the motion. What has happened over the weekend with respect to Bill No. 99 is a clear attempt on the part of certain individuals from this Legislature and others to circumvent the precise and orderly manner in which decisions are reached in this House.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Utter nonsense.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Why did this bill not get second reading?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Knox: Expressions of views from people of all sorts, most of them utterly unknown to me, have given very positive opinions, I suspect without having all the facts. This having been done, and the orderly procedure of our affairs having been unduly upset, my feeling is that I want to hear these people, all of them if necessary, state these views where I can see them and hear them and see what they look like when they are saying it and the inflection in their voices. I want to understand why they say what they do, and I want to be able to question them if I wish to do so.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): The hon. member is not on the committee.

An hon. member: The hon. member should be quiet, or he might get put in jail.

Mr. Knox: I suspect that we have heard only selected parts of what some of these people have said; that only specific questions, perhaps loaded like some that were asked of me, have been answered. The Opposition would have us legislate by argument outside the House from some people who may have been completely uninformed, and possibly may have been biased.

The thing to do is to give these people a chance to speak to a committee of the House, give also those who framed the bill and those to whom we entrusted the investigation, which has produced this report, a chance to tell their side of the story. When all the evidence is in, we can decide what is best to recommend to the government — not what political advantage there may be, but what legislation will deal best with the serious problem and yet guarantee the rights of the people we represent.

The hon. Prime Minister has said on page 8:

May I make it clear once again that the government is prepared and always has been prepared to amend, to change, to withdraw the bill or any portion thereof.

This is a stand that I fully support. Regardless of some remarks on my right, I am a member of this committee and will expect while sitting there to use the right that I have always understood that I have on that committee. That is, to try to amend or to change if I thought that was the proper thing to do.

Procedure is merely a device by which the business of the House can be carried out in an orderly, efficient manner. It is a tool only, and never, never meant to obstruct. Our hon. Prime Minister in his motion has recognized this and his motion offers us a fine and perfectly proper method of proceeding under circumstances which were deliberately engineered by hon. members of the Opposition.

Mr. Whicher: Does the hon. member still thank God for the hon. Prime Minister?

Mr. Knox: Yes. In this the hon. Prime Minister is—

An hon. member: Where is the hon. Attorney General?

Mr. Knox:—affording to me, a new member, the same fine leadership that he has always done. The amendment is obviously silly, I will oppose it and vote for the motion.

Mr. D. Bales (York Mills): Mr. Speaker, in reference to this matter, I will speak only for a few moments because many of us have had our turn. This is a matter that has moved a great many of us in this House during these past days since Thursday evening. There are sections in the bill that is before us, as Bill No. 99, which I am sure as I read them—and I would read them as a layman first and not as a lawyer—are repugnant to me.

Mr. Singer: How does the hon. member do that?

Mr. Bales: They are certainly repugnant to the public.

Mr. Bryden: Why were they brought in, then?

Mr. P. J. Yakubuski (Renfrew South): Cut it out!

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bales: As I came to this House today, I expected, and I first thought, that the hon. Prime Minister might simply withdraw the measure that was before this House.

Mr. Bryden: A good idea!

Mr. Bales: But let us face up to this matter, Mr. Speaker. I think there is a more difficult decision. I think the hon. Prime Minister has taken that decision that we have before us about the report from the police commission in reference to crime. The hon. Prime Minister has realized that this matter must be dealt with, that this matter has had the full glare of publicity in the province, and rightly so. It has had the full glare of publicity over this past weekend and I think, Mr. Speaker, that we should bring this bill to a place where the public can deal with it and have its say as quickly as possible.

If we bring it before members of the public so that they may come as witnesses, not merely the members of the police commission, we will have their full views. I feel confident that, when it comes back to this House, this section we find so repugnant will be removed; for I am sure that, for myself, I cannot support it as it stands and I am sure there are many in the House who feel the same way. In the light of what the public has said, we must not only have justice and freedom but it must appear to be justice and it must appear to be freedom—and it does not so appear to the public.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that we should take this before the committee as quickly and as expeditiously as possible. Earlier in the day I heard some suggestion that perhaps it would not be reported by the committee. Mr. Speaker, I should regret that very much. I hope and trust it will come back to this House as soon as possible in an amended form. Thank you.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak against the amendment, and say very few words. It is difficult, Mr. Speaker, to avoid being repetitious. However, as one who is opposed to some of the provisions of the bill, and as a member of the legal bills committee, I want the opportunity to question and even grill the law officers of the Crown. I am rather surprised and intrigued by some of the provisions of this bill, and I want to hear their opinions.

I think, Mr. Speaker, during the next few years, we will have much legislation dealing with the rights of the individual and civil liberties, brought in in the name of the common good. We have to be careful of this type of legislation. I want to be able to attend the committee hearing because I feel that if we gave this bill second reading—after debating the principle—the public would be even more apprehensive.

Imagine the headlines: "Police Bill Given Second Reading." If we think the past weekend has been bad, we can imagine what the next weekend would be like. The public would be even more worried, and certainly apprehensive, than it is now. I have faith in the committee system, Mr. Speaker. I have faith in the legal bills committee. There are 35 members of the legal bills committee, and nearly all the lawyers in this House are members of that committee. All parties are represented, and I understand that all lawyers in the Opposition parties are members of the legal committee.

As a new member I have had a certain amount of satisfaction and pride in my committee work. I feel that we, as MPPs, have a job to do and I accept that responsibility. Without being repetitious, without being emotional, and without being partisan, we can question the people who are responsible for drafting this legislation in a proper way.

I, frankly, Mr. Speaker, do not have any worry that the outcome will be to the benefit of the people of this province. I do not think that the people have any worry about this procedure, or the hon. Prime Minister's motion. In view of that, I support his motion.

Mr. G. R. Carton (Armourdale): Mr. Speaker, as this House knows, I have had some differences of opinion with my own government on occasion and I am inclined to exercise my own judgment at all times and to voice my opinion whenever necessity demands it.

I have witnessed this afternoon a spectacle, a two-ring circus, participated in by the two Opposition parties. They are interested in protecting civil liberties, but at the same time I would suggest, in political capitalizing. They were not discharging their parliamentary duties, one of which, now that the crime report has been released, should be directed at stamping out crime in this province immediately.

Very succinctly, to withdraw the bill, in my opinion, would be a backward step and what is most frightening, would delay our getting on with the job, thus playing into the hands of the criminals and subversive elements of this province. The introduction of Bill No. 99 and the attendant publicity respecting section 14 has erased for the time being all other parts of the bill and indeed, the crime report itself.

We have two duties: one, to stamp out crime, and two, to protect and safeguard the civil liberties of the individual. These, I suggest, are not irreconcilable. There is, I submit, no better procedure to follow and no finer method available than to refer this to committee where all relevant facts will be brought out where a thorough and exhaustive examination will take place.

The most redeeming feature of our parliamentary procedure for me to date has been my attendance at committee meetings. I have found them to be most educational, most informative, most non-partisan, and most productive. The Opposition, I suggest, is not sincere in its contentions and in advancing its arguments because its hon. members know full well in their hearts that section 14 is repulsive and repugnant to any clear-thinking individual and would not, under any conditions, pass through this House.

Mr. Bryden: How did it get in here?

Mr. Carton: I would resign forthwith if I thought otherwise, because under no condition whatsoever will I ever be inveigled into thinking that the ends justify the means.

We have a job to do, Mr. Speaker, a collective job to do forthwith and without delay. All parties should immediately join together for a common cause, that of stamping out crime. It is so much easier, so much more expeditious to build upon something. We have Bill No. 99 with one extremely repugnant section, but with many other sections universally acceptable. I would urge the Opposition, now that it has had its day in court as it were, to rise above party politics and earnestly and sincerely think of the interests of the people of this province by withdrawing its amendment and joining forces with the government in committing the legislation to the committee for full study.

In the event that the amendment is not withdrawn, may I state that I have unalterable faith in the hon. Prime Minister of the province. He has stated his position clearly, precisely and unmistakably. He has made it abundantly clear, in unequivocal terms, that section 14 will not stand under any conditions whatsoever. No citizen of this province need be under any misapprehension whatsoever, and to say or suggest otherwise, in the light of what has transpired today to date, is untruthful.

In conclusion, it is my considered opinion that I would be doing my constituents and the people of this province irreparable harm and damage, were I to do other than support the motion of the hon. Prime Minister and reject the amendment of the Opposition for one reason and one reason only, that full disclosure be made and full attention be focused on crime in this province at the very earliest opportunity.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, the main reason I suggest to the hon. members of this House to withdraw this bill is because it was in embryo state—a brainchild of the Ontario Police Commission which I suggest was wrongly formed and is now endorsed and presented to us by this government.

As I said at the outset in the House in my maiden speech, Disraeli said a long time ago that, "Politics is nothing but organized opinion." I suggested to the hon. Prime Minister then that we on this side of the House, through my hon. leader, the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver), and my hon. colleagues are going to organize opinion in this province to show the people of Ontario what this government truly is—a smug, arrogant machine—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! I would advise the member that he must stick to the amendment which is before the House and not become political in his remarks.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Police Commission is a newly created body which, I understand, was formed in 1961, probably at the request of the government. The personnel of this commission, I suggest to this House, is not democratic in that it does not contain in its personnel sufficient elected people. At the formation of this commission I, as an elected official, was there with possibly 50 or 60 other elected officials. The meeting was loaded I would say, speaking very kindly, with magistrates and judges, and so on. This is to the point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I am sorry. We are not debating the police commission at this time. We are debating the amendment to the motion of the Prime Minister that this bill be withdrawn. I would like the member now to stick to that if he can.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I plan to show where the commission was not capable of presenting a proper bill.

We, the elected officials, were howled down by the magistrates and judges, because we wanted to have more elected people on this commission. They suggested we should keep the business of crime out of politics. Then the mayor of London asked them how magistrates and judges got their positions except through politics.

I suggest to you in closing then, Mr. Speaker, in voting against this bill and voting for the amendment to throw out this bill, that this police commission be dismissed and reconstituted by personnel who reflect the views of ordinary people of this province. I suggest that my many good friends in this House, on both sides of the House, cannot oppose our amendment, regardless of politics—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: How can they report back to their people if they do otherwise?

Mr. Speaker: Does the member wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): I have listened to the discussion which has gone on this afternoon. I will try to speak, and I only wish I had the ability to speak, with all the emotion and with all the logic and with all the ability with which men have spoken when rights have been abused throughout the generations of parliamentarians in the history of the British Commonwealth.

I am unabashed in saying that I will speak with every emotion I can put into this. I would say, sir, that I welcome—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: —and I hope it will be put in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Thompson: I welcome the jibes and the jeers of any men who are not sufficiently sensitive to the momentous situation that is before us, when a bill such as this, and when a procedure such as this, is contemplated.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: We have seen—and I appreciate any remarks thrown from the other side, because students of history in later years are going to look with shocked disbelief at the cynicism which certain hon. members have displayed with respect to the dangers presented by this bill, and by the whole procedure.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: What are we debating today? We are debating the extraordinary procedure on an extraordinary bill. We have been asked to have faith in the hon. Prime Minister, to place our faith in this man. I would say to him that the whole procedure within the last 48 hours has been one of utter confusion, certainly not one of responsible government. And I will detail this.

At the start we had the hon. Attorney

General, who was reported to have said that he is going to see that these amendments are going to be passed by this Legislature. To this date he has not refuted that statement. Then we have the hon. Prime Minister, who is reported as saying on Saturday that this legislation was drafted to fight crime, and we are going to have to find another way. Then we have his press agent, or his press officer, Mr. Bill Kinmond, putting out a release on Sunday which quoted the hon. Prime Minister as saying the offensive sections of the bill were being withdrawn. Then we have Mr. Kinmond saying, later on, that he should not have released that statement. He added that the hon. Prime Minister would clarify, not necessarily withdraw, the offensive sections. With all this chaos and confusion, we now have hon. members standing up and saying, "Have faith in this government. Go along with what they are suggesting."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: We, sir, are contemplating the danger of continuing a bill which has shocked the whole of the western world.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: Let me say this: We had a situation in this bill—and it is connected with procedure because, after all, if we do not know about the bill, we do not know why we are having this extraordinary procedure. All across Canada, there have been outraged outcries about this bill. There has been puzzlement that good men, men who sit in the Legislature, who have been voted in, supposedly men who believe in freedom and liberty, could possibly contemplate this kind of bill. And what do we have? We have, for example, people like the previous Attorney General, who says—and I mean by that the Attorney General in 1963, because we do not know—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I find the member straying a little too far from the amendment. I would ask him to get back on the amendment that the bill be withdrawn, which is before the House at the present time, and not to continue speaking about the principle of the bill—whether it is good or bad or indifferent—unless it is connected with the withdrawal part.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it might be wiser if I followed the remarks made by the hon. Prime Minister. If I talk about his remarks then I cannot go astray.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Prime Minister has said—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Thompson: May I say that some of us do not believe as much in a person as we do in institutions? The hon. Prime Minister has said: "As leader of the government I accept full responsibility for this bill and its introduction into this Legislature."

I would assume that he speaks for all his Cabinet. Referring to what the hon. Prime Minister has said, I suggest that he does not. Because we have a previous Attorney General who has said that if he had known about this bill and the dreadful implications, which he was alert enough to see, he could not have voted on this bill.

On the other hand, sir, we have an Attorney General who says, "I am going to see that this bill is going to be passed through the Legislature." We have chaos and confusion when we would assume that a government would believe in Cabinet solidarity. Is this Cabinet solidarity—like rats of a deserted ship? We find that some of the hon. Cabinet members were suggesting they were not in Cabinet when this was proposed; and then we find later, from a story in the Toronto Telegram, that only four of them were absent.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member should hear them talk in the back halls, too.

Mr. Thompson: I would say, sir, that the first point I noticed, expressed by a number of the government hon. members who were speaking on this bill, was that they wanted us to have faith in the personal attributes of the hon. Prime Minister. In no way do any of us question the personal attributes of the hon. Prime Minister. What we question is the public office of a Prime Minister.

We question that, no matter if he has served in the Navy, or whether some of the rest of the hon. members have served in the Navy, no matter if the hon. lady member thinks he is a nice gentleman, those are not the questions at stake. The question is: Are we going to sweep aside all the rights which have been developed over the centuries and have faith in the personal qualities of a Prime Minister? This is really what is being asked here. We are being asked to believe in a benign dictatorship when we are in the twentieth century, in Ontario, a part of Canada, a part of the British Commonwealth.

The next point that was raised—and which surprised me immensely—was one of the Ministers, sir, who said that he was disappointed at the irresponsibility of the fourth estate, the press, because they saw the dreadful implications of this bill. He went out and exposed himself in various parts of his area—and he was trying to explain this. I say, sir, thank God for an alert press which will expose the implications of a bill like this.

The third point—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Does the member wish to ask a question? Was it a point of order or did you want to ask the member a question?

Mr. J. Root (Wellington-Dufferin): The hon. member said that I was a Minister. He is about three years behind the times; he apparently does not know what is going on. I am not a Minister.

Mr. Thompson: I apologize to the hon. member. It is so hard to know in that large overgrown Cabinet who is a Minister and who is not.

I would say that the next point that was raised was that crime is a very serious situation in Ontario. It suggested to us, the Liberal Party in Ontario and this Legislature, that crime is a serious situation. I only repeat again, because obviously they want us to forget it, that it was John Wintermeyer who pointed to the government people and told them they should get alert to the serious situation of crime in the province. I am referring to the points that were raised by other hon. members. Other hon. members suggested to us when they talked of this that because it is a serious affair they should throw out the baby with the bath water—that is more or less what they were suggesting.

Sir, the fourth point they raise about this, is to suggest to us that we want to hear the experts on this bill. Therefore, let us come before a committee in order to hear the experts. I would suggest to you, sir, the expert in connection with a bill which is presented before Parliament is the appropriate Minister who presents it. We have heard the hon. Attorney General with respect to this bill. What kind of things did he say to the press? He told them that it was a terrible bill. He told them that people could be detained without legal counsel. He told them they could be kept in jail indeterminately. He told them that you could have no public hearing, and he went on about incommunicado, in fact described in detail what to us sounds very much like Star Chamber methods.

Then they turn around and say that they want to delve into the thinking behind the experts on this. What kind of a ridiculous situation have we got in Ontario when they suggest they will bring in any kind of horrible bill, a bill which will throw us back to the Middle Ages, in order that they can find out the thinking behind people who would present such a bill?

We have heard from the expert on this, I suggest. The expert on this bill was the man who presented it to the House and, sir, I would suggest that on this occasion it is disappointing to us that he is not here to continue with his elaboration on the bill.

I would say this, sir, that I think on the part of the hon. Prime Minister it took considerable courage to stand up and to associate himself with the deliberations of this kind of bill and to say that, "I, as head of the government, take full responsibility for this bill." Everyone respects a man who will stand up even though the ship is sinking and say "I am captain of it." I would say we respect him for that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. members can laugh about that. They can laugh that this kind of stain of political philosophy can be permitted in this House. I would say with respect to this, we would hope that the hon. Prime Minister would have further courage with respect to the procedure. We would hope he would come before this House and say, "Look, this bill has caused great concern to all the citizens of this province and I did not know all about the bill," if he wants to put it that way. Or, he might want to say, "I did know all about the bill, but I realize that this is a mistake."

The hon. Prime Minister is a man who is reasonable, he is a man I think who has as great a love for the liberties of people as anyone else. The hon. Prime Minister must know that there is a section of this bill which is abhorrent to every principle of a free society. Why then keep that section still towering above us? How do we know what will happen unless this thing is not completely taken away? How do we know what deliberations are going on? In the past 48 hours, we have heard one point of view and another. Is the hon. Attorney General's point of view going to prevail or will the hon. Prime Minister come in and take charge and the hon. Attorney General leave? How do we know what the situation is?

Surely at this time, sir, the honourable thing, the big thing for the hon. Prime Minister ter of Ontario to do is to stand up, as many of these hon. members have, and admit this bill was wrong, this section was wrong, and say, "I agree with you on this; let us completely withdraw the bill and bring in another." Instead, he wants to hide this situation, take it away in this extraordinary method—because to me it is an extraordinary procedure—take it away into a committee. How do we know when the committee will meet? How do we know that he will not hold this thing off with people still wondering what is going to happen with respect to this? We have no assurance when this bill will be studied. We have no assurance when it will come back before the House again.

Sir, in order that everyone can rest at ease, knowing their liberties are secure, in order that this government and this Parliament again can be a place where we can reflect the obvious decent thinking of people, the obvious respect for the liberties of men and women in this province, I suggest the hon. Prime Minister withdraw the section of this bill. I say, sir, as my hon. leader has said, that if this is not withdrawn, and if the government comes back again with that odious section before this House, we will filibuster and filibuster and filibuster. All we do at this time, sir, following the parliamentary procedure which we respect and love, is plead to the hon. Prime Minister, because this is the only approach in the parliamentary system we have. We plead to him, sir, in view of the outcry of the bill, in view of his own hon. members' outcry in connection with sections of the bill, to be big enough to stand up in this House and say that "I know that sections were wrong and I withdraw this bill." If he does that, he may still hold a place in the history of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The chair recognizes the hon. member for Forest Hill.

Mr. E. A. Dunlop (Forest Hill): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand the contention of certain hon. members opposite that this procedure will have the effect of limiting debate on this measure. In fact it adds a stage to the ordinary legislative process, and this measure, quite probably amended, will return to this House by way of report and for second reading. Or are the hon. members opposite afraid that this bill will die in committee? Were it to die in committee it would simply have accomplished what they seek to accomplish by way of their amendment—withdrawal.

An hon. member: We would like it to die tonight.

Mr. Dunlop: The process will be added to rather than subtracted from. The opportunity for the debate of this measure will be expanded not reduced, and I think it is very unfair to suggest to people who are not familiar with parliamentary procedure that the object of this method is a reduction of debate whereas actually it is increased.

You, Mr. Speaker, have allowed people to say some things on the merits of the bill and I will say this: There is much that is good in this bill and therefore it would be stupidity to withdraw it. Some of it is bad; and on those sections, in committee and otherwise, I, like most hon. members of this House, would vote against that which is bad, but we would not kill that which is good.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, some 12 years ago, as a young man of 33, I made a maiden speech. In that speech, I recalled for the Speaker of the day and my fellow members of the House the fact that it gave me—and I spoke with some great emotion, because I came from a stock of men who, for centuries, had not known the way of free men. Neither my father, nor his father before him, nor his father before him, nor for generations had the people of my stock known how to live as free men. At the same time that I was learning the history and traditions of the stock of my father and my mother, it was my privilege, through the educational and other institutions of this province which the young people have the privilege of attending, of learning the magnificent history of the development of the British institutions.

It was in those schools that I came to know of Magna Carta—none of my people ever knew of Magna Carta. I came to know of Habeus Corpus—none of my people had ever known of Habeus Corpus. I came to know of the right of counsel—that a man who could not speak for himself could have someone trained speak on his behalf. I grew up with one foot in the tradition of a people who had never known freedom for centuries. At the same time I was learning of these traditions.

So, 12 years ago, I took my place in this House and I was determined that one of the things I would do, and speak for, would be the continuous maintenance and development of the rights of free men, not only in this province but in this nation and beyond the seas—and to that I have devoted my life. I have said in this House, and outside, that there is no finer place in the world in which to live than in this province. I did not say that because my stomach was full, and the stomachs of those who were associated with me were full, nor because they had a roof over their heads and clothes to wear. That is not why this place is a decent place to live in; it is because this province is the place where men live as free men.

I shall not take as long as the hon. member for Bruce. I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker, this bill should be referred to the committee. It has been my lot to have been speaking on behalf of the rights of free men all my life—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: I was there for five years myself, and I am sick and tired of hearing of it.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! Order!

I do not want this debate to get into questions and answers across the floor of the House, and I would ask the Minister perhaps to come back to the amendment and speak on it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking on the reference of this bill to the committee, of the legal bills committee. Mr. Speaker, there are two sides to this coin, and it is in that committee that those two sides would be presented. Over the weekend I have read the connotations in the papers of the police state; that is one interpretation that has been put on this bill. I do not question for a moment that that point of view has been put fairly and honestly on the interpretation of the readers, as they saw it in that bill—that thing which was pointed in the press over the weekend concerning the police state, that this is what this bill was going to do.

I recall for the hon. members of this House that, for two years I, as Provincial Secretary, had to live with accusations which came from the other side of the House, and which were supported outside this House. And why was I subjected to criticism, to ridicule, to vilification? Because I, as a member of the civil authority, had done what? Had overruled the judgment of a policeman. And there was not one hon. member on that side of the House who ever rose to my defence.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. Minister ignored the judgment and gave charters to the gamblers.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There was not a person outside of this House who ever said—

Mr. MacDonald: Completely out of order!

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Faces are pretty red over there.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: And that is why this bill should go to committee. There was never any suggestion that that overruling was improper or had some wrong intent. It was a—

Mr. Bryden: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Will the member state his point of order?

Mr. Bryden: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I submit the hon. Minister has been out of order throughout his entire speech. He is not talking about either the motion or the amendment, and I think it is now time to call him to order.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I have listened for several hours. I have taken my lead from the scope of this debate, from the hon. members opposite in this House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am speaking to why this bill should go to the committee because there—

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister is not. He is talking about everything under the sun.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: A year ago the hon. member was throwing accusations against me in this House, that I, as a civil authority, had overruled—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Minister come back and speak to the amendment now before the House, or the main motion moved by the Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister of this province has clearly stated the position of himself and the government he leads; and the hon. members opposite have failed, but I shall not fail, to state why the people of this province need not have the slightest bit of apprehension about this bill going to the committee.

Mr. Whicher: Ask the hon. member for St. George about it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The hon. Prime Minister has clearly stated the position, that he speaks on behalf of himself and his government supporters, that he would not tolerate any legislation which infringes upon or jeopardizes the personal rights and freedoms of the individual. That is the point, and it is in committee—

Mr. Whicher: Why did he bring it in?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is the point, and I am reading the statement he made in this House this afternoon.

Mr. MacDonald: Where was the hon. Minister when the bill—

An hon. member: The hon. Minister is out of order!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I bring this to the attention of the hon. members of this House, because several hours have passed since the hon. Prime Minister read it. He is asking that this bill be sent back to committee. He stated the position that the bill had been put forward in the belief that it did not infringe or violate basic individual liberties and privileges but that it must be changed.

As the hon. member for Lambton West said, the terms of reference of the committee are of the broadest, not only the word "change," but the word "amend." It is clearly established that every opportunity will be given to all sides—to the members of the legal profession both within the service and outside the service, and to responsible organizations—to put their case. If the case is made, the terms of reference are broad enough, the word is to withdraw the bill or any portion thereof.

Mr. Speaker, those are the terms of reference to the committee and I will close my remarks by stating this: There was an honest belief when this bill was put forward, as the hon. Prime Minister has said, that there was no infringement or jeopardizing of personal rights. I make this one suggestion. I have been one of those who has all my life supported a bill of rights. It is not sufficient that the Magna Carta be there or the right of Habeas Corpus or the right of counsel. It is perhaps time that we had a bill, a federal bill and a provincial bill, which will spell out once and for all the principle that this government is dedicated to. Then never again, unwittingly or otherwise, will there ever be an infringement on that bill of rights because there would have to be then a definite exception in any bill put forward.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, that was called the bill of wrongs.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the hon. members opposite laughed at the federal bill of rights. I recall those days too when the hon. member held that federal bill of rights to ridicule.

Mr. Speaker, I close my remarks by suggesting this, that the hon. Prime Minister has always maintained that it is not beyond the human competence of men to solve a problem. We have the problem here of how to cope with the alleged invasion by criminals of this province, and then we have the fact that civil authorities have to deal with this matter in a way that will not injure the history of this province. We need a sharp sword to make sure that the elements of crime will be wiped out, but we must be careful that that sword is not a double-edged sword. The purpose of sending it to the committee is just to ensure that.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Has every member spoken who cares to speak?

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, could I just say a word and I can assure you that I am not angry at anybody. I will not call anybody any names, but I have heard the hon. Opposition members stand up—

Mr. Whicher: And the hon. Minister's own members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: —with a great show of humanitarianism, emotionalism and all the other things that go for histrionics about this bill we are debating. We talked about fair play, Mr. Speaker, and there was one thing that I wanted to bring out and the hon. Prime Minister—

Mr. Bryden: It is the motion we are debating.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I had better look like you—

Mr. Bryden: I must say your appearance has improved, George.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I am going to ask the Minister if he will address his remarks to the chair and I am going to ask the members to give him a hearing with no more questions and answers back and forth across the floor.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, has moved that Bill No. 99, which has had first reading, go back to the committee for discussion. I think that that is absolutely fair play. We are speaking in here about humanitarianism. Do we ever give a thought to the gentlemen who wrote this bill in the first place?

Mr. Whicher: Where is he?

Mr. Singer: Who did it?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Just a minute, just a minute—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Are we going to give them an opportunity to tell us why and what their thinking is regarding the sections that are alarming many of us?

I think they should be entitled to be heard as to why these proposals were made and why they thought it was necessary to have them in for law enforcement in this province. They should be given an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, I think, to justify their thinking before we, who know nothing about it in this House at all, do nothing but criticize them, which has been done here tonight in very bitter terms. They have used every adjective that they could lay their tongue to that was possible to use in public. They have been drastic in all their accusations, never giving a thought to the people who were the architects of this bill.

We are objecting to things in that bill which you all know about and with that I agree, but when hon. members of this House refuse to send the bill to committee where the architects will have a chance to justify their findings or not, we are refusing to do just exactly what we are objecting to in Bill No. 99, and do not forget that. Hon. members are objecting to Bill No. 99 and they know the clause as well as I do that they are objecting to, yet they refuse to let the people who are the architects of this bill explain why they did it. Is that fair, Mr. Speaker?

I favour this bill being sent to the committee for discussion and explanation, Mr. Speaker. I want to say to the Opposition that I heard a term once, "Consistency, thou art a jewel." Why do they not stay on the one track and tell us what they want and not be talking all around the bush? I am getting tired of it.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of the hon. Prime Minister's suggestion and will go along with it 100 per cent as I know every other hon. member in this part of the House will do, and if the Opposition were sensible, they would do the same thing.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. K. E. Butler (Waterloo, North): Mr. Speaker, I unfortunately—and I will stick strictly to the subject on a three-minute basis—have not had too much time to exercise any oratory in this House or prior to it. Basically, my reason was that my opponent in the last election talked so much that I did not have to. This has put me in an embarrassing position as far as practice is concerned on this.

I would like to say, quite seriously, that obviously everyone in this House can win on a pretty good ticket of motherhood and freedom. We are not permitted to talk on the bill, as was pointed out so often, but I do sense, with a very sensitive ear, that there are certain people opposed to this bill. It is an odd thing, but I feel that.

All we are talking about is, basically, procedure. It is a procedural proposition. We have a motion from the hon. leader of the Opposition that we withdraw this whole bill and we have a motion from the hon. Prime Minister that it be referred to committee. In the final net result, I cannot see the basic difference at all.

If the committee brings this bill as it is, back in, there is full freedom for discussion on the entire bill and this controversial section, which we should not have been mentioning, will come up for discussion again and give everybody a big, fat chance to get back at it.

If this controversial section does not come back, then the Opposition has achieved the purpose that it wants in asking that this bill be withdrawn. To go to the problem and trouble of drafting an entirely new bill, after this one has been withdrawn, takes time, takes more work and makes difficulty. So I cannot see in any way, how we can support the withdrawal of this entire bill when the same object and aims are being achieved by a better route than if the bill were withdrawn. I strongly favour, and I would hope that very shortly the question will be asked, that we do not support the withdrawal of this bill.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I shall now read the amendment which is before the House and upon which you shall vote:

Moved by Mr. F. R. Oliver, seconded by Mr. A. J. Reaume, that all the words after "discharge" be deleted and there be substituted therefor the words, "and that the bill be withdrawn."

As many as are in favour of the amendment will please say "aye". As many as are opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 26, the "nays", 70.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. We shall now—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on the main motion. I have spoken on the amendment, I have not yet had an opportunity to speak on the motion.

Mr. Speaker: I might say, for the benefit of the member, that I allowed each member who did speak to join the main motion and the amendments together in their remarks, which everyone did.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the main motion. Furthermore, I submit that this motion admits any number of amendments the hon. members feel they want to submit.

I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker; and before I sit down—I hope, before the barracking begins—I suggest that there is a solution which can resolve this difficulty in which the House now finds itself, or more particularly in which the government finds itself. Before I come to that solution, which I shall propose in the form of an amendment, I want to say in as quiet tones as I can that I am not only surprised but disappointed in the hon. Prime Minister.

I have many differences with the hon. Prime Minister, and I shall continue to have them, but there is one thing I had begun to appreciate about the hon. Prime Minister and that was that he was a pretty uncanny, political realist; he recognized a political situation and was able to deal with it rather skilfully. I wonder why that capacity has left him in this particular situation. The disturbing thing, Mr. Speaker, which has emerged in the four or five hours of debate we have had on this very important matter, and it is important enough that we perhaps should have four or five hours more, is that the hon. Prime Minister is sticking, at least to a degree, to the offensive section in this bill.

All he has presented to the House is the suggestion of qualified withdrawal; indeed I must confess, Mr. Speaker, that I did not even realize how qualified it was when it was first made earlier in the afternoon. All that the hon. Prime Minister has done is to move that second reading shall be struck from the order paper and that this will go to the committee. Then it is going to come back to the House for second reading. There is no withdrawing of this bill at all. This bill is technically still before the House; it is going to go to a committee and then it is going to come back to the House again, so we are still faced with this bill.

Mr. Singer: What is unusual about that?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Furthermore, if I may just repeat very briefly a point I made earlier, the hon. Prime Minister has, to a considerable degree, been unrepentant. I cannot quite make all the statements add up—those the hon. Prime Minister and other hon. members of the government have made.

The hon. Prime Minister, for example, on Friday, got up and said that he was not going to support anything that was personally offensive to him, or was offensive to basic civil liberties. In spite of having said that, he got up today and said that he had discussed this once again with the law officers of the Crown and they still contended that this was not offensive to civil liberties. So he is willing to accept this, even though he implied on Friday, if he did not state, that he found this offensive. There is at least a half-contradiction, if not a whole contradiction, in what he has stated. I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government, through the action of the hon. Prime Minister in his motion this afternoon, has made a bad situation worse.

He has appeared to be willing to manoeuvre, to deal in technicalities, instead of dealing in a forthright way with a situation which surely has become pretty untenable. Does the hon. Prime Minister not realize, for example, that he has repudiated this bill, or at least the offensive section, while his Attorney General continues to support it? Does he not realize, for example, that the hon. Attorney General apparently misled the Cabinet—or else the Cabinet was asleep, one or the other, you cannot have it both ways—and then misled this House by not—

Mr. Singer: The caucus was—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, there were only ten of the caucus there, so you cannot mislead a majority who were not there. He misled this House in a very interesting—I was going to say “calculated”—way. I do not know whether it was calculated or not on Friday, when he skipped over the offensive section of the bill, though he explained that the powers of the police commission were being expanded.

The point I want to get to, Mr. Speaker, and I am trying to keep my remarks as short as possible, is that it has become very obvious through the debate, in the last four or five hours, that everybody in this House is opposed to section 14. Everybody is opposed to section 14 as it now stands.

I am interested in the silence, because I have not heard any protest. I take the word of the hon. member for St. George, who said he has canvassed the Cabinet Ministers, he has canvassed back-benchers, he has canvassed everybody, and he has not found anybody who is in support of section 14. Now surely, Mr. Speaker, there is an obvious solution to this? As long as section 14 is in the bill, you are going to have this whole atmosphere of uncertainty, indeed of consternation, which has been created in the province of Ontario in the last three or four days. Is there not an obvious solution, that we get rid of section 14?

I do not think it is the best solution. I think the whole bill should have been withdrawn, but at least the hon. member for Scarborough North (Mr. Wells), who is not with us here tonight, pointed out, which is accurate, that apart from section 14 all the rest of the sections of the bill are more or less routine, some of them important. They may be amended when they get to committee. But it is a normal bill.

The one section of the bill which is completely offensive is section 14. Why can we not, Mr. Speaker, since we have not been able to persuade the government or the hon. Prime Minister to withdraw the bill completely, refer this to the committee with instructions that section 14 shall be deleted? Let the committee proceed and deal with the rest of the bill, which is a routine bill, and take section 14 as a problem in itself, because it is a problem in itself. It is the problem of how we can shape more effective machinery to cope with organized crime without encroaching on the rights and civil liberties of every human being in this province. Let this Legislature, when it comes back, as I suggested this afternoon, debate this report of the Ontario Police Commission on the first day. Having debated it and having got conceivably a consensus of hon. members of the House as to how we can achieve a more effective machinery for coping with organized crime without encroaching on the civil liberties of the citizenry of this province, then we can bring in a second bill to amend The Police Act.

The government has brought in two or three bills to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act or The Labour Relations Act during the year. In other words, deal with the routine aspects of the bill by referring it to the committee now, set aside this section 14 which is offensive to everybody in this House—everybody, including the hon. Prime Minister—and let us deal with it in the fashion that we should have dealt with it in the first instance. That is, by debating this report and getting a clear conception of the danger of organized crime.

If I may just interject here briefly, Mr. Speaker, I bow to nobody in this House over a concern about the threat of organized crime and the need for more effective machinery.

Indeed, six or eight months before John Wintermeyer read his speech in this House that somebody had written for him, I was the only member in the House on the Opposition side or the government side who was talking about the problem of organized crime. So I am not bowing to anybody on the dangers and the need for coming to more effective curbs. But what I cannot understand is why the government will not set aside this section 14—kill it, so that the people of this province will know it is killed. That is what they want to hear, that this Legislature has killed section 14 as dead as a dodo. Then they can relax into some sort of normal calm and not fear they are going to have a police state imposed upon them, and we can give the bill sober second thoughts.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is a very simple way to resolve the problem that the House now finds itself in and that the government finds itself in. I do not know why the government wants to rub salt in its own wounds by sticking with section 14. I would think it, more than anybody, would want to get rid of section 14, and bury it and say it is part of the past, completely part of the past.

Therefore, I move, seconded by Mr. E. G. Freeman, that the motion be amended by adding thereto, "and that the committee be instructed to delete section 14 of the said bill." That will leave the committee free to deal with the rest of the bill. My submission is that we, in this Legislature, can then proceed to deal with the substance of section 14 when we come back after Easter, first with a debate on this report and then moving to whatever amendments or legislation the government thinks would emerge to deal with the problem as a result of our debate.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to this amendment.

I would say that section 14, if its effect is what it has been interpreted to be, is as offensive to me as it is to any other hon. member of this House. I think we may start from that position. In my part in this debate, in making the main motion, I have not at any time attempted to show that any other man in this House has any desire to impose a police state upon the people of Ontario. I think I can say in all fairness that nobody in the Opposition is attempting to prove that anybody on this side of the House is anxious to impose this type of legislation on the people of Ontario.

I think we can clear the air because there is a position, in my opinion, from which we all operate. It is as unthinkable to me that the Opposition would wish to have legislation which would infringe the basic and natural, if I may put it that way, and age-old rights of our people, as it is for me to think that anybody in this party, which I lead, and the government which I lead, would wish to infringe the rights of our people. This is basic, in my humble opinion, to all of us. It is the cornerstone of the political philosophy of the party to which I belong and I think that in the debate here tonight we have perhaps become sidetracked.

I would like to have the exact wording of the hon. member's motion, but I would suggest this, that in referring this bill to committee, I would think that section 14 would be dealt with by that committee exactly in the way that the hon. member has suggested in his motion, with one possible exception. I am of the opinion that there has been a lot of rather fuzzy thinking about this bill. I am also of the opinion that it may not be so that these sections, as drawn, will necessarily have the effect that has been attributed to them. For this opinion I take the advice of men who are skilled in the interpretation of statutes of this kind.

What is suggested by the main motion is that this bill go to committee so that it can be examined and this section can be interpreted and all sections of this bill can be interpreted. That interpretation will be given to them by the man who drew them, and will be given to them by anybody else who wishes to appear before the committee and give the committee his opinion of what these sections mean. Then, and this is what my statement and my argument on the main motion meant, those sections will be altered if that is necessary, or withdrawn if that is necessary, to ensure these basic rights which we are all striving to protect. Every one of us in this House is striving to protect the same thing.

My point is simply this, that as far as the amendment of the hon. member is concerned, I think the same effect will be achieved whether the amendment to this motion is made or not. If it would help in this situation I would agree with the amendment if he will add to it "if the sections are found to be offensive", because it is this question that interests me.

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the hon. Prime Minister not start afresh?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: What I am suggesting to you is that I was not aware that the form in which the bill is, and on which there have been varying opinions expressed as to what it means and what interpretation can be put on it, when it was brought into the House originally, contained this possibility that it would infringe these basic liberties. I said on Friday that I would re-examine it to see if it did, and I got the same opinion that I had in the first place and that was that these sections did not so offend.

As I said this afternoon, I have grave misgivings about this, because of the comments of learned counsel in law, and that is why I wanted the bill treated in this fashion, so that we can ensure these liberties, one way or the other, as far as this section is concerned. I do not think your amendment is necessary to have that section treated in the way you want it treated. I think, under the main motion, this bill will go to the committee, it will be examined, section by section, and if the sections prove to be offensive—and I think that this is so obvious to everyone, so completely obvious—there is nobody in this House, there will be nobody on that committee, there is no one who supports this government, I would say to you that there is no one who supports the Progressive-Conservative Party in Ontario, who will ask for the section to remain.

Several hon. members: Take it out.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am simply saying to you this: There is at the moment a conflict of opinion as to what that particular section and perhaps other sections of this bill mean, and the procedure that we are following is simply to find out what in fact it does mean. When we know that, the course of action open to us will be clear.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would suggest to you that this is the procedure which would be followed. Much has been made of the particular procedure we have followed here. But I can point out that in certain controversial bills last year, where we did want to establish exactly the type of thing I am speaking about now, before there was a debate on the principle of the bill they were referred to committees and dealt with—

An hon. member: Which one?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, I will tell the hon. member. I can go back to 1955, but let us—

Mr. Singer: No, last year.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: —take 1963. Bill No. 160, The Milk Industry Act, 1963, went to the agricultural committee to get sorted out before it came back here to have the principle of the bill debated on second reading.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We are not trying to close off debate on this subject. We are trying to find out what we are debating.

Bill No. 159, The Oleomargarine Act—and hon. members cannot say that was not a controversial bill—received exactly the same treatment in this House last year.

The Minimum Wage Act was referred to the standing committee on labour before it was given second reading in this House, in order that it could go to that committee and be examined in detail. I do not recall whether amendments were made in the committee, but they could have been made; and then it would come back here for debate on the principle of the bill, as it was going to wend its way through this House.

So this is not new. I have got several others here, but I just mention these of recent date, which have happened recently.

Mr. Speaker, the point I make is that the position we take is that this bill will be dealt with in exactly the same way the hon. member suggests. What I am really seeking is to find an interpretation of these sections and this is the way we will get it. I think that the purpose the hon. member is after with his amendment will automatically flow from the procedure we have established in the main motion.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister a question?

The hon. Prime Minister has indicated to us that he did not think it was necessary, so far as the amendment was concerned; but, because of a possible misunderstanding and possible misinterpretation, would he not consider it desirable to support the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, let me have the wording of the amendment, please.

Mr. Speaker: For the benefit of the House I shall read the amendment:

Moved by Mr. MacDonald, seconded by Mr. Freeman, that the motion be amended by adding thereto: "And that the committee be instructed to delete section 14 of the said bill."

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, we in the Liberal Party can say that we will support the motion moved by the hon. member for York South. We will do anything in our power to kill section 14 of Bill No. 99 tonight.

We would have preferred that the House would have accepted the suggestion we put forward earlier, but we are not going to stand on ceremony. We are not going to play any games. We are not going to resort to rules of procedure or explanations which try to differentiate without enunciating the difference. In our opinion, if we accept the words of the hon. Prime Minister, there is no hon. member of this House, there is no member of the Conservative Party inside or outside the House, who believes in the provisions of section 14. Well, Mr. Speaker, what have we been talking about since three o'clock this afternoon? If we take the hon. Prime Minister at his word, surely again the simplest thing in the world would be—whether it was in line with the amendment moved by my hon. leader (Mr. Oliver), whether it is in line with the amendment now moved by the hon. member for York South or, if he wants to have it his own way, in line with any wording he wants to make—for goodness sake, to take section 14, once and for all, from the purview of this Legislature.

We do not care whose wording it is; just do it. It is no more complicated than that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, how did we get section 14 here in the first place?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Yes, the hon. Minister of Mines wants to find out. Mr. Speaker, who in the world, who in the Legislature of the province of Ontario, has been in a better position than the hon. Minister of Mines to find out? The hon. member for Grey North? Grey South (Mr. Oliver)? The hon. member for York South? My hon. colleague from Bruce or myself, or anyone in this 32 we have here? Is it? The hon. Minister of Mines sits—and I do not know how frequently he meets with the Cabinet—but he has that privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Singer: He has the privilege of examining every bill this government introduces. He has an obligation to examine and to question anything he has doubts about, and he says he wants to get down to the bottom of it. Mr. Speaker, if he had been doing his job he would have been down to the bottom of it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: And if he had been doing his job, or if his 21 colleagues had been doing their jobs, it would never have been here in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, I am not even going to be so unkind as to say that there is one hon. member in this House who thinks section 14 is appropriate. I accept the hon. Prime Minister at his word. We all abhor the principles in it. Well, then, what are we wasting time about? It is now ten of the clock. We started at three o'clock this afternoon, we have taken a short recess for dinner, and we are still at the same point.

If we all believe in the same thing, as the hon. Prime Minister says, for goodness sake if he does not like the wording that my hon. leader introduced, or the wording that the hon. member for York South introduced, let him take the wording of the hon. Minister of Mines, or anybody's wording; but, for goodness sake, remove it, once and for all. This is all we ask. This is all we ask in the name of the people of the province of Ontario; and let this be the end of it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to accept the suggestions that have been made here and I think I can see a way to accomplish what we wish. What I am interested in, of course, is the conditions of this bill when it was introduced into the House. Now section 14 is the offensive section. I would like this section to be discussed in committee stage. I would like it to be examined there. I would like to know if there are conflicting opinions as to what it means.

I would be quite prepared to accept an amendment by which we could ask the committee to delete section 14 after study. This means that it can be examined in that committee by the people who will be appearing before the committee. This means that what is required under the section can be dealt with and explained by the people who ask for this in their wish to combat the crime element in the province; and it means that the section will simply not be pulled out of the bill without any discussion as to why it was there and what it means. It does mean as far as the people of the province are concerned, that they will know this particular section is gone; but the reason for it being there in the first place will be a matter of study and consideration by the committee.

Mr. Reilly: Then I understand, Mr. Prime Minister, that this section is to be deleted.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I would recommend that it be deleted; but the point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is simply this—and perhaps the drafting of these amendments is better done some place other than on the floor of the Legislature—but I do not want this section of the bill to simply be taken out without any discussion in the committee of why it is there, of why the people who are charged with certain responsibilities asked for it to be there. But if in its present form it is considered to be offensive—and I think there is some doubt about this, at least there is in the opinions I have been given—however, in order to allay the fears, in order to ensure that the people of Ontario need not worry that this section in its present form can ever be passed, I am quite prepared to have it removed, to have a direction given to the committee that this section be removed. But I want the benefit of the examination of the committee and of the people who appear before the committee, on the section itself.

Now if this can be achieved in an amendment that we can reach here—

Mr. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the hon. Prime Minister in the dilemma in which he now finds himself—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Oliver: No, I am serious about this—wanting to preserve at least a segment of his political reputation. But I do not think the hon. Prime Minister is in a position to save even a shred of it tonight.

I say that because of this. My hon. friend says: "I am prepared to go along with the amendment of my hon. friend from York South with the reservation that we shall say from this House, in this amendment, that we direct the committee to throw this section 14 out but," the hon. Prime Minister says, "we want to have a discussion on it."

Now of all the ridiculous positions for a Prime Minister to find himself in. What he is saying and what he is agreeing to is this: That we shall say from this House to the committee that we instruct you to throw out section 14 and the only reservation we have is that you shall discuss it.

Now what an untenable position to find oneself in. The hon. Prime Minister has agreed, here on the floor of the House, that it is going out; but he wants to save a little bit of face by saying that it shall be discussed after the event. Now what in the world use is that? What political sagacity can be attached, what significance can be put, to my hon. friend's contention that he agrees to have it thrown out, but he wants to have a discussion after it is thrown out? Now that is a most ridiculous position in which my hon. friend finds himself.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, no, no!

Mr. Speaker, this really is the difficulty in trying to arrange an amendment on the floor of the Legislature to a piece of legislation.

I said in my remarks in first commenting upon this amendment to the motion that we would achieve what is required, and what my hon. friend from York South is after with his amendment, we would achieve this if we followed the procedure under the main motion. Now it is made clear, and it has been made clear in the debate here, right or wrong—whether that section carries with it the characteristics that some say it does, whether it has not got them as some say it has not—the problem we are facing here is that this particular section of this bill is the one that is bothering the people of Ontario. I think this has been made eminently clear by everyone who has spoken here today.

Now then, I say this: first of all, under the main motion this section — and under the statement that I made today—this section would be examined and if it proved to be in any way offensive it would either be altered, amended or withdrawn completely. This was the purpose of sending the bill to the committee, that this section, along with other sections of the Act, would be examined in this way. Now my hon. friend comes along with a motion dealing with one particular section and he says why not send the bill to committee with a direction that the committee take this section of the bill out. All right! Now I am prepared to go along with that, as long as we do not have this additional effect of taking it out. I am prepared to go along with it, because this is the section that, I say right or wrong, regardless of whose interpretation is put on it—and there has been more than one, there is not unanimity as to what this section means.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Just about!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member says just about and this is not so. I have tried, Mr. Speaker, to deal with this matter without reference to partisan politics. I have tried to get at the root of the difficulty with this legislation and I would hope that I would get the same kind of treatment from the other side of the floor, because this is bigger than party politics at this stage of the game.

Now this section which is so offensive was asked for. I set out in my remarks this afternoon the section of the police report, or the report of the police commission, in which they asked for these powers. There is a reason. These are the ancillary matters, if I may put it that way, that I do not want to see taken out of the hands of the committee because we send a bill to the committee with a direction that this section be deleted.

All I say is, arrange it so that these other matters that concern the section can be dealt with in the committee, so that we may know, so that we may put it to the people why these powers were required, and so that we can find out whether we may have to bring back another bill. Let us settle in the committee what the drafting should be. Should it be worded this way, or should it be worded differently? Does the wording of this Act mean what some people say it means, or does it mean what other people say it means?

Now if we can settle these matters in front of the committee—and this is the reason I wanted the bill to go to committee and this is the reason that the motion is here—I will still argue that this is not an unusual procedure in this House, it has been followed many times. If it is going to relieve the fears and if it is going to relieve the apprehension of people in the province to say that the committee will eliminate this particular section, I am quite prepared to go along with that. But I do not want—to use the expression of the hon. member for Dovercourt—I do not want to send the baby down the drain with the water. I want to know, and I want the investigation to be made as we discussed in this House today, why the section was there and will a similar section or something like it serve the purpose in the field of crime investigation. If we can ensure that this is dealt with by the committee, I have no objection if the instruction is to the committee to remove or to delete this section.

Mr. MacDonald: Just where does that leave us?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It leaves us with this: one amendment which has been suggested to me would be to accept the amendment that the hon. member has put forward by adding thereto, “provided that the same shall first be studied in relation to recommendation 11 of the report of the OPC.”

Mr. Oliver: Of course that is ridiculous!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I cannot see why.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister a question? I am afraid at this point we are quibbling over words.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am not quibbling, I think I have suggested something.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if I may ask my question: why can this amendment not be accepted which kills section 14? And I repeat, I would think the group which wants to get it killed more than anybody else, sir, is the government. I do not know why they want to live with it, like a bastard child you want to cling to for some time longer, or something like that. Get rid of it.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member should keep his language clean.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, it is not too inaccurate a description of what you are now coping with. But, Mr. Speaker, the question I wanted to ask the hon. Prime Minister is: If he accepts the amendment, the committee will deal with the rest of the bill to begin with, and then, at the next meeting of the committee—I presume we are going to have time for at least two committee meetings afterwards—it comes back and deals with it for as long as is necessary; deals with the next topic, the subject matter of this in relation to recommendation 11, in relation to anything else. There are some things left out of this which should be included, and other things have been included which should be left out. The subject matter of it can be reconsidered afresh in the light of the crime report, which I submit, Mr. Speaker, should be discussed before the committee gets at it altogether, because this is the genesis of this recommendation.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words in support of the hon. member for York South's amendment, for this reason: I, too, would like to have the controversial section 14 discussed in the committee. I believe, sir, that the amendment, if I understand it correctly from the hon. member, will allow us in the committee to discuss that section, because we are referring it to the committee with instructions to delete. Now if we do that, the very first thing to come before that committee would be the instructions to delete. I see no reason at all why the chairman of that committee, at that time, could not say that the instructions of the House are to delete this measure, therefore a motion will have to be made for the actual deletion. Certainly we can then discuss the thing sensibly, calmly and coolly, and yet with the unavowed belief of every hon. member in this House that the section as it now stands is repugnant to us all.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on the comments of the hon. member for St. George, as I understand them.

I had a number of comments, Mr. Speaker, which I had thought of making in relation to some of the speeches made here. Some of them were not very friendly or kind comments, and now I have decided I will not make them. I think we possibly are reaching the point where we can find a solution to the problem before us, and I hope that no words of mine will upset any possibility of a solution.

I believe that every hon. member in this House, bar none, is concerned about the liberties of the subject and wants to do everything possible to see them protected. I believe that every hon. member, honestly, is as much concerned as I on this matter. We have differences of opinion as to procedures taken in this House, but basically we are all concerned about the welfare of the people of this province and the protection of their legitimate interests—both the protection of their basic liberties and also the protection of them against criminals. We are all concerned about both of these things.

I would suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that what he, at the end of a very long time, is hoping to achieve can quite well be achieved simply by the acceptance of the motion of the hon. member for York South. The advantage of his motion, as I see it, stating boldly and simply that section 14 will be deleted by the committee, is that it is clearcut. There can be no doubt about it and any fears people may have will be allayed. But as the hon. member for St. George has pointed out, that would not preclude the committee from considering the general subject matter, from considering the purpose the government had in mind when it brought that section into the House or from considering the relevant sections of the report. It could do all of those things; and if necessary, it could make a report to this House as to its findings. Or alternatively, and I think this surely is the better procedure, the government itself can also consider that section and the objectives it had in mind and come in at a later date with new legislation which will avoid the features of section 14 to which we now object.

But I think it is very important at this stage that the people of Ontario should have a complete assurance that section 14 will not be proceeded with. The only way we can give them that assurance is by a clear and unequivocal statement that the committee has been instructed to delete section 14 and there is no possibility that they will bring it back. What further consideration they give is up to them when they meet. But at least let us make sure that everybody understands section 14 will not come back. If any attempt is made to legislate in this area—and I think some legislation is necessary with regard to the powers of the commission—then it will be new legislation; it will be considered ab initio and it will be introduced as an entirely new bill. This, as I see it, is the only possible solution. I think the motion of the hon. member for York South meets the problem that the hon. Prime Minister has in mind and I would appeal to him to accept it. We can thus dispose of this matter in a way, I think, which will provide assurance and satisfaction to the people of the province.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to say I have listened to the motion by the hon. leader of the NDP (Mr. MacDonald), and I would say I think the hon. Prime Minister is trying to get a reasonable solution to this. I think he feels the concern that is in the House reflects the concern, all across the province, about this section. As I listened to him, it seemed to me that his concern is that the section must have been drafted, by men who are close to the administration, for the protection of the citizens with respect to apprehending criminals. And he, it seems to me, if I could use this phrase which some of the rural hon. members know more than I do, puts, in a respect, the cart before the horse. I question the point of where the police commission—I am trying to get more direct on this—the police commission writes legislation for us and this legislation is presented by the hon. Attorney General. I question us saying to a police commission who writes a section, because I am assuming the police commission are the authors of this section—it seems to me always the police commission has to be the servant of the Legislature. This section, which they have written, should not be allowed to continue in the House but must go to be re-examined as proposed legislation. I think what we should do, in view of the abhorrence to the section, is to withdraw that section. On the other hand, I think we should meet the hon. Prime Minister's concern that the members of the police commission, which I understand drafted this section—and if the police commission did not, then whoever did draft it—were not legislators. The hon. Prime Minister is saying that he wants to hear the reasoning of those people who drafted it.

I would suggest, sir, that we, first of all, to allay the fears of this legislation, and to allay the fears of the people of Ontario, should say, "Withdraw the section before it goes to the committee". Then, sir, I think that in the committee, if we want to have a discussion with the people who have drafted this, why cannot we call them to hear their point of view—

Mr. Singer: Not just the people who made that recommendation, but other people.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, we would ask the people, for example, who made the recommendation "that section 39 was drawn and introduced as a result of the 11th recommendation contained in the report of the Ontario Police Commission and other recommendations". By all means let us hear from these people. Do not let us feel it is somewhat sacred to keep legislation here until we have heard from them. Let us get rid of this.

I suggest we get rid of this section that is so abhorrent; right now, let us get rid of it. Tonight, let us get rid of it. I am sure we would all wish this. Then, sir, let us hear the other points of view; and if we feel we have to get stringent rules, then let us bring stringent rules into the committee and redraft some legislation. But at this point our plea, sir, is that we withdraw that section.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member want to speak to the amendment to the main motion?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, it is very evident we are stretching the rules of debate. I am aware of this, but perhaps in view of what we are attempting to do this is necessary.

I do not think the hon. member for Dovercourt quite understood what I was getting at. My point in sending the bill to committee in the first place is to ensure there is a discussion in that committee concerning the various sections of the bill—whether they are offensive or whether they are not, whether some think they are and some do not—regardless of what interpretation might be put on it. The other point in sending it to the committee is to ensure that the actual interpretation of the sections is looked at. Do they destroy the things it has been said they destroy? These things we do not know. What I am seeking, and I am quite prepared to consider a motion that would instruct the committee to delete this section of the bill, as long as I can be certain that the investigation, which is the reason for the bill going to the committee, is carried out.

Mr. MacDonald: Surely you—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I just do not want the bill to go into the committee with the statement that there are instructions to strike this section out and that is it.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you want our assurance that we will not oppose a discussion of the subject matter of this?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, as long as I can have that; as long as I can be certain that we are not taking this section out of the discussion. We may be removing it—

Mr. MacDonald: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Pardon?

Mr. MacDonald: We will give that assurance.

Mr. Oliver: As long as it is out of the bill, that is all we care about.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is the reason, Mr. Speaker, why I have the amendment here. The hon. member's amendment is: "and that the committee be instructed to delete section 14 of the said bill." In order to meet the point I am making, if we were to add to it: "and that the committee be instructed to delete section 14 of the bill after discussion," that would cover it completely.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain just how the hon. Prime Minister left this, after his recent speech. Does this mean that the hon. Prime Minister, if I could ask him a question, sir, through you, is ready to accept the amendment if the Opposition in this House will not oppose at the committee level some discussion of the merits and demerits of section 14? Is that what he means?

If that is what the hon. Prime Minister means, Mr. Speaker, I am dead certain that the group on this side of the House is quite willing to have a discussion. I think the hon. member who spoke before, the hon. member for St. George, put this thing very clearly when he said that there is every opportunity in the committee for this kind of discussion.

As a matter of fact, it cannot be prevented, because when that section comes for deletion, as it must come in the committee, then and there the thing is wide open for whatever discussion the committee may see fit. I plead with the hon. Prime Minister, and with this House, that the time is here for us to take this action to assure the people of Ontario that section 14 is out, that it will not be reported back to this House with the bill. I think this is the thing which is needed desperately, and this is the thing which will give people confidence in Ontario once more.

I simply feel that when the discussion comes we are all going to be willing to participate in that discussion. And if this motion can be accepted by this House, it solves the problem and does not force the kind of division which could shatter confidence throughout this province as well throughout this House.

Mr. Speaker: I shall now put the amendment to the main motion.

Moved by Mr. MacDonald, seconded by Mr. Freeman that the motion be amended—

Were there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. R. A. Eagleson (Lakeshore): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Sorry, I did not see anyone.

Mr. Eagleson: Mr. Speaker, I am perhaps, personally, on the horns of a dilemma; and we have heard this expression thrown about tonight with reckless abandon.

I must say, in speaking to the amendment, that I am greatly surprised with the attitude of my hon. friends in the Liberal Party. Now let us just get one thing clear. There have been no interruptions tonight, and let us just keep it that way. This is a serious problem we have, now let us just listen to it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Eagleson: But the hon. members of the Liberal Party tonight have, on the basis of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York South, completely—I should not say completely—but partially compromised their position of this afternoon.

Mr. Oliver: Oh, go on!

Mr. Singer: Utter nonsense! This is worse than the first speech you made and that was bad enough.

Mr. Eagleson: When this was proposed at an earlier time, in the discussion we heard the hon. member for Downsview stood up and said he would support, without any doubt at all any amendment to remove this section.

Mr. Singer: That is right.

Mr. Eagleson: Since that time, there have been definite scurrings among the Liberal ranks to form ranks around him, and around that thought. I say this, as a member of the labour, legal and municipal bills committee, that I would sincerely trust there will be full discussion given to section 14, and that I personally would support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Singer: That is a wonderful process of reasoning.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I want the members to be given a proper hearing.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, may I add a few words to what the hon. member for Lakeshore has just said?

On behalf of the Liberal Party, I wish to say that the jewel of consistency has never shone as brightly as it has shone today. I do not know how the rest of the hon. members of this party feel, but I am certain that they feel with me that when we came in today we knew what we were going to do—we were going to stop this bill no matter what. This is what we are trying to do now. Although I value the hon. member for Lakeshore as a personal friend of mine, I must differ with him here tonight. I must say that we are all together in this—it matters not whether it comes from the side of the new party or from this party—if we stop this thing tonight we have done what we started to do today. I am satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can be forgiven for taking a little time to consider these matters, but I am prepared to accept the amendment made by the hon. member for York South. I think that I should say that I do so with the thought in my own mind, and with the assurance that has been given to me, that this section will be debated and discussed and the other sections of the bill, of course, will go to the committee and be dealt with in the same way as they would have been under the main motion that is before us today.

Mr. Speaker: Moved by Mr. MacDonald, seconded by Mr. Freeman, that the motion be amended by adding thereto and that the committee be instructed to delete section 14 of the said bill.

As many as are in favour of the amendment will please say "aye". As many as are opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.

Call in the members.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. Whicher: Any more bills like that one?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day: This is the first opportunity I have had—I have been staying in this House today—and I would like to read a letter addressed to me:

MY DEAR PRIME MINISTER:

I have been greatly privileged to serve under you as Prime Minister, as well as in the Cabinet of your predecessor, the Honourable Leslie M. Frost.

The warm association I have had with you and my other colleagues in the executive council have been most rewarding and pleasant. I have thoroughly enjoyed the challenge of the onerous duties involved in the administration of the various departments over which I have been appointed to preside as Minister.

I come from the Ottawa Valley and sit in the Legislature as member for Grenville-Dundas. In the past, this historic riding has been represented by two former Prime Ministers—the Honourable Sir James Pliny Whitney and the Honourable G. Howard Ferguson. They were honourable men and political warriors of the highest order and not unaccustomed to the hurly-burly of the political arena, its hazards and its high traditions. I was raised in that tradition and therefore have always had a realistic approach to the fact that while today the weather may be calm, tomorrow may bring a hurricane.

Believing as I do in the British and Canadian parliamentary system, embracing the responsibility of Ministers of the Crown, I acknowledge my responsibility as Attorney General with respect to recently introduced amendments to The Police Act contained in Bill No. 99. It is the opinion of the law officers that such legislation does not in any way interfere with the existing rights of the citizen to have counsel or to have access to any other constitutional remedies of our courts.

In answer to certain questions put to me by the press with respect to Bill No. 99, I felt constrained to stress the urgent nature of the whole problem and in my capacity as Attorney General I could do no less. The price of our freedom from the invisible tyranny of syndicated crime is the continuance of the vigilance which has thus far protected us from these infamous agencies.

In making those comments, I have unintentionally touched upon the sensibilities of our people. In doing this, however, I was answering the dictates of my own conscience. I can assure you, sir, that during the period that I have had the honour to be a member of Ontario's Executive Council, all my loyalties and efforts have been devoted to the very best interests of the people of Ontario. Indeed, throughout my whole career, I have persevered to ensure that the principles of justice and liberty which we all hold dear shall never be the less because of my own, or any other man's action.

Having in complete innocence aroused the concern of the people about these same principles, I do not feel that I wish to continue in this office.

I, therefore, tender you my resignation as Attorney General and member of the executive council.

(Signed)

Fred M. Cass.

Mr. Speaker, with regret and reluctance I have accepted this resignation.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, tomorrow we will proceed with the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 24, 1964

The House met at 2.00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome visitors to the Legislature; in the east gallery students from the Sudbury High School and Barton High School in Hamilton; in the west gallery students from Brantford Collegiate Institute and Vocational School and Deer Park Public School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre), from the standing committee on labour, legal and municipal bills, presented the committee's fourth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill No. 45, An Act to repeal The Investigation of Titles Act;

Bill No. 46, An Act to repeal The Custody of Documents Act;

Bill No. 65, An Act to amend The Division Courts Act;

Bill No. 70, An Act to amend The Securities Act;

Bill No. 71, An Act to amend The Fire Departments Act.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill No. 44, An Act to amend The Registry Act;

Bill No. 69, An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act.

Mr. J. F. Edwards (Perth), from the standing committee on standing orders and printing, presented the committee's third and final report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee recommends that the customary supplies allowance for the current session of the assembly be fixed at the sum of $50.

Your committee recommends that copies of the Canadian Parliamentary Guide, the Canadian Almanac and Canada Year Book be purchased for distribution to the members of the assembly and also that each member be given a year's subscription to the Labour Gazette and the Municipal World.

Your committee recommends that the following sessional papers be printed for departmental use and distribution:

Accounts, public, 1,650; agricultural college and experimental farm, report, 1,375; Agriculture, Department of, Minister's report, 2,175; agriculture, statistics branch, report, 6,675; auditor's report, 525; civil service commissioner, report, 675; Education, Department of, report, 2,875; estimates, 1,400; Highways, Department of, report, 775; Labour, Department of, report, 1,375; legal offices, report of inspector, 575; liquor control board, report, 675; Niagara Parks Commission, report, 400; Ontario Northland Transportation Commission, report, 450; police, provincial, report of commissioner, 675; Public Welfare, Department of, report, 1,375; Public Works, Department of, report, 450; Reform Institutions, Department of, report, part one, 1,420; part two, 1,420; Transport, Minister's report, 775; Travel and Publicity, Department of, report, 2,175; Veterinary College, Ontario, report, 2,175; Workmen's Compensation Board, report, 2,175.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the provincial auditor be authorized to pay the salaries of the civil service and other necessary payments pending the voting of supply for the fiscal year commencing April 1, 1964, such payments to be charged to the proper appropriation following the voting of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are several matters to come before the orders of the day. Perhaps first I would refer to the passing of our colleague, the member for Windsor-Sandwich, Maurice Belanger. He died earlier today.

Mr. Belanger entered this House in 1959 in the general election then and was re-elected in 1963.

While he and I sat on opposite sides of the House, we were always close friends. I found him in the various functions in the life of of this Legislature to be very good company indeed. I would also like to comment on the service he rendered in the House to his constituents from Windsor-Sandwich. He was unremitting in his attention to the detail of that riding and to the needs of the people he represented, and I know that he will be missed by them.

I would express on behalf of myself personally, and indeed the entire Legislature, our regret and our sympathy to his immediate family.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would join with the hon. Prime Minister in saying that we on this side of the House grieve very much today in the passing of Maurice Belanger, the member for Windsor-Sandwich.

Mr. Belanger was a dedicated public servant if ever there was one. He was a man, as the hon. Prime Minister said, who paid particular attention to detail. He was loyal to his colleagues in the House, ever willing to share whatever responsibility there was put on his shoulders. He was a good debater in the House, he was particularly acquainted with the needs of his constituents and unrelenting in seeking ways to help them.

I may just say this in passing, Mr. Speaker, that this morning in talking to one of his colleagues, he told me that when he went to see him just a day or so before his death that at least 25 letters were on his desk written in longhand about the matters affecting his constituency to departments of government here in Toronto. The riding of Windsor-Sandwich was well served by our hon. friend. We on this side of the House have lost a real and a loyal friend and an hon. colleague who will be hard indeed to replace.

We extend to members of his family our sincere and heartfelt sympathy in this bereavement that affects us very deeply.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, this House has sometimes been referred to as the most exclusive club in the province. I think that is certainly true to the extent that we develop ties of friendship with fellow members, no matter what party they come from, and when one dies suddenly, as has been the case in this instance, the news comes with a sense of personal shock and loss to every one of us. I cannot add to the personal tributes that the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition have made, but I certainly would like to join with them in expressing our sense of loss and in extending to his family our condolences on their bereavement.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, the hon. members here may recall that in the concluding statement in the conference on automation and social change which was sponsored by this government last September, the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) expressed our hope that in the extensive research and study to be undertaken in this field—and we have had some debates on this subject here already in this session—the hon. Minister of Labour expressed our hope that we might be joined by the federal government and by the governments of the other provinces in order that we could attack this problem on a national basis. This is a field in which cause and effect are national, in fact they are more than national they are international, and many of the warning signals that we may have to watch for in our jurisdiction will come from larger and more highly industrialized jurisdictions than our own.

I am happy to inform the House today that as a result of some negotiations which were initiated by the Economic Council of Ontario, the Economic Council of Canada, the Quebec Economic Advisory Council and the Nova Scotia Voluntary Planning Board have agreed over the next several years to join with us in an arrangement under which there will be a sharing of the responsibilities for and the costs of the necessary research studies that we see ahead. I would say this, Mr. Speaker, the door we attempted to open last fall will remain open, and we would hope that we will, as time progresses, have further participation by other provinces.

In the light of the acknowledgment that we have of the co-operative concern in an area in which we, through our economic council here, gave leadership, I have asked our economic council to give consideration to the report of the steering committee which was headed by Dr. Arthur Porter. Hon. members will recall that I mentioned the report of this committee during a debate on this subject some time earlier in the session.

Full agreement with the provincial-federal approach has been voiced by Dr. Porter and his colleagues who comprise that steering committee.

The specific nature of the field studies, which will be undertaken on a joint basis, will be determined by agreement between the economic councils who are participating in this endeavour. We hope that they will survey not only representative segments of industry and commerce, but will concern themselves also with programmes by public and private agencies which are seeking to facilitate adjustment, by individuals and communities, to the dislocation arising from automation and technological development.

Because of the federal participation, it will be necessary for us to resume our studies as to how this might best be put on a long-term basis. However, we have set aside funds for the research and the educational activity involved and if, at the conclusion of these federal-provincial studies, it appears necessary that some semi-autonomous national or provincial foundation on automation, social change and employment should be established, then this government will be prepared, in co-operation and concert with industry, organized labour, commerce and finance, to accord financial support to it.

However, in the interval, the federal and the provincial governments will join their facilities and their funds to undertake, without any other financial support from either labour or business, the preliminary research which is required.

Mr. E. G. Freeman (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to address to the hon. Minister of Mines.

Is the hon. Minister in a position to indicate when the commencement of pelletizing operations by Steep Rock might offer some prospect of alleviating the chronic unemployment of the Atikokan area?

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I want to give my thanks to the hon. member for Fort William for giving me advance notice of his question.

Commencement of pelletizing operations for alternative processing for further upgrading of Steep Rock ore will depend upon the results of pilot plant investigations. These decisions have been proceeding for the past three years, and are continuing. Results to date are very encouraging.

Concurrently, market reviews are being made to determine the domestic requirements of the steel industry, with special emphasis being placed on product type and volume. Meanwhile the Caland Ore Company is commencing construction on a pelletizing plant scheduled to enter production late next year.

There is some chronic unemployment in every community in Canada but the per capita unemployment in Atikokan at the present time is 2.4 per cent of the male population, while in Fort William it is 4.5 per cent. There will be 300 more men taken on shortly to handle the special construction at the pelletizing plant for Caland Ore Company in Atikokan, and these men will be employed for the next two years. There is not enough labour in Atikokan at present to take care of this construction, so many more men will have to be hired and brought in. Caland Ore is trying to rent 100 houses, in Atikokan, which belong to Steep Rock Iron, for these men who will be taken on for Caland's pelletizing project; but these houses are now occupied so more houses will have to be built in the town of Atikokan.

This is the situation at present in Atikokan.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Health, notice of which has been given.

When might the Legislature expect a statement from the hon. Minister on the Metropolitan Toronto hospital bed shortage?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped and anticipated that an answer would have been made before this House before we rose for the Easter recess. However, the hon. member and you, sir, will recall that when I answered his previous question ten days ago, I stated then that a complete answer could not be given until certain discussions and negotiations, then underway, had been completed. These are still not complete, sir; they are being carried on at all levels of government. They involve hospital authorities, nursing authorities, and all others interested in this difficult and complicated question.

In addition to this, sir, the Dominion-provincial conference scheduled for a week from today has, I understand, cost-sharing programmes on the agenda as one of the main topics. Hospital financing is very much involved in this, and until these discussions have been completed, sir, or at least brought to the point where we can see our way through this programme, I do not believe it would be wise or even satisfactory to put our answer before this House.

I can assure the hon. member, sir, that certain measures for immediate relief have already been put in hand and will be operative, I expect, within a very short time indeed; by that I mean within a matter of weeks. Well-founded plans have been laid—and these have been again very carefully scanned and considered—and are believed to be sound, and capable of meeting the whole problem. It has been so considered, by those whom I believe are skilled to know of what they speak, that these plans which are now before us, awaiting the outcome of the discussions I have mentioned, will completely meet the need. All of this I would hope, sir, will be laid before the hon. member before this session ends.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: May I hear the question first?

Mr. S. Lewis: Respecting his position of the long-term proposals, would the hon. Minister inform the House as to what precisely are the certain measures he indicated to alleviate the immediate need?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I believe, Mr. Speaker, it will be in the public interest, and in the interests of this House, if this whole matter is laid in one piece before the hon. member.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. Minister has said he will hear questions first, will the hon. Minister inform the House whether the use of veterans hospitals—we have several in Ontario—will be discussed at that meeting?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am sorry, I did not hear it.

Mr. Troy: The use of veterans hospitals by the provincial government — will the hon. Minister discuss those at his meeting in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the use of veterans hospitals has been a subject of discussion between this department and The Department of Veterans' Affairs over the last four years, to my knowledge.

Mr. Troy: I know they have; but will the hon. Minister say something definite?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, one of the responsibilities of the Minister of Labour is to report to the Legislature on behalf of the Ontario Human Rights Commission and it is in that connection that I wish to make a statement before the orders of the day.

An historic agreement has been reached here, this morning, between the Ontario Human Rights Commission and the Association of Professional Placement Agencies and Consultants; representing some 15 private employment agencies in this province. This agreement has been formulated into a declaration in which the association and its members pledge their co-operation to the advancement of full and equal employment opportunities for all qualified workers, irrespective of race, creed, colour, nationality, ancestry, or place of origin.

This agreement, Mr. Speaker, is more than just a statement of general principle and philosophy; it includes tangible evidences of good faith.

I would like to commend the association and its member agencies for the moral leadership they have displayed in this field. Their pledge will serve to dispel any doubts or fears which individuals or organizations in this province may have had regarding their practices.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 48th order, the House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask if we could deal with the supplementary estimates now. It has been brought to my attention that these should be dealt with before the end of the current fiscal year. They are few in number, and are in the estimate book.

Mr. Chairman: Supplementary estimates of ordinary expenditure of the province of Ontario for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

On vote 518:

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, no doubt there will be some additional information about both of these votes from the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) but I would like to make a comment on item 2 having to do with the new universities' library project, which approaches $500,000. In connection with this, one of the most serious condemnations of the ordering of our universities' development in the past few years has been that the library facilities at this level have not been adequate, if we are going to maintain our universities at the level that we hope to in this province and in this country.

Although the figures are not at hand I understand that an objective assessment not only of the books available but the whole library service at the university level in Ontario, would classify our best library as about fourteenth among the university libraries in North America. Certainly this is not good enough and my very serious question to the hon. Minister is: What are the long-range projects that are going to be undertaken by his department to bring the library facilities at the university level up to a reasonable standard, and is he sure that the amount voted here is sufficient?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Chairman, I anticipate that we will get into matters of university grants problems in a more detailed way during the estimates of the department. In dealing with the second item today—the grant to the new universities' library project—I should explain to hon. members that this is a co-operative project organized through the university advisory committee with The Department of Education.

This project involves the new university at Brock, Trent, the two new off-campus colleges at Erindale and Scarborough, and the new campus here at the University of Toronto. These new institutions have combined to purchase and catalogue books co-operatively for the establishment of new libraries and also to add to the existing library here at the main campus of the University of Toronto. This amount is the first amount to be expended and I am speaking now from memory, but I believe that the total expenditure to build the basic library—and this refers to the basic library only—is somewhere in the neighbourhood—and I will have this during my estimates—of $1.5 million. It represents, by doing it in this way, a saving of close to $1 million to the public of the province. The great saving is realized through the central cataloguing. In other words, all the cataloguing will be done at the main campus here at the University of Toronto and then distributed; and all the purchasing will be done through one agency.

The hon. member's general observation as to the status of libraries at the universities in this province is perhaps one that we might discuss in a general way in the estimates of the department. I would make this observation that the departments or the government through its grants, have not dictated the type of library that the universities have been establishing. I think this is one principle that we must accept and make it very clear that we accept, that we are not interfering with the academic development of any of these institutions. I will question the observation of my hon. friend, the member for Brant in that he suggests that our best library at the University of Toronto would rank perhaps fourteenth. I do not think that this is quite an accurate statement, but I shall become more specific during the estimates.

I think it is very necessary for us to be careful not to infringe on the academic development of these institutions and I assure the hon. members that this whole question of universities and the amount of monies they have available to them will be discussed, I assume, very thoroughly in this House. But this is a separate project apart from any other government grants in order to establish these four new libraries and to add to the existing library here at the University of Toronto.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that even the most sensitive university authorities would consider the provision of adequate funds an unnecessary infringement on their authority, and I hope that the hon. Minister is not under this impression.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not suggesting that, Mr. Chairman. I question whether the amount of monies available to some of the universities to build up the library has been a detriment to the type of library they maintain and I think you will find that many of the libraries at the universities in this province are reasonably adequate. But they themselves select. It is not just the number of books that constitutes a good library, the selection of the books is left definitely in the hands of the universities themselves.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in the remarks of the hon. Minister, particularly insofar as these funds are going to be devoted, as I gather, only to purchasing books and cataloguing. I wonder if the hon. Minister noted a press release given by the chief parliamentary librarian for the House of Commons just a few days ago, when he indicated that he thought there was a real crisis existing in the library field insofar as finding available trained librarians is concerned. This is a point that has been made frequently by many of us on this side of the House during the estimates of The Department of Education, but I think it is particularly pertinent since the hon. Minister is embarking on a library project. Somewhere along the line there has to be far, far greater consideration given to the training and availability of librarians.

I have forgotten the figures that were quoted by the parliamentary librarian from the House of Commons but they were shocking, dealing with the number of students presently going through the various library courses, and so on. His prognostication was that it was not reasonable to anticipate that there was going to be any reasonable number of librarians available anywhere to serve properly the existing libraries and these would include university libraries.

One of the things that is common through so many of these fields, one of the things that I think deters young people who might have an interest in this field from progressing further in their education and taking a university degree and then a postgraduate degree—I have forgotten what the name of the degree is, but a postgraduate degree showing that they are qualified librarians—is the lack of pay at the end of the course of study. There is no point in having buildings and books unless you have people who know how to run those buildings and what books to buy and so on. I think that this government has a real duty and responsibility to do everything in its power to produce more librarians to serve the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think once again, the more appropriate place to debate this would be, say, in the vote for library grants during the regular estimates of The Department of Education. I have observed Mr. Spicer's remarks on the number of librarians available. I notice also, they applied on a Dominion-wide basis rather than just to the province of Ontario—

Mr. Singer: It is not any better in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, I think perhaps I can indicate to the hon. member that certainly we are no worse here and that we are better than certain other provincial jurisdictions. I would also observe to you that there is a great demand for librarians, not just in the public libraries and at universities. Librarians are needed in secondary schools now with the greater interest, fortunately, in the development of libraries in that field. In this area they receive very adequate compensation, I think.

Mr. Singer: Yes, if they are teachers, they are paid as teachers.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I might also add, in case the hon. members opposite are interested in item No. 1, just a short explanation. This feasibility study is once again a recommendation from the university affairs committee and it corresponds to the present programme in operation at Waterloo where there is a joint programme between industry and the university itself. Waterloo is going to study the feasibility of extending this into the social sciences and not to just, say, the applied engineering field. The university affairs committee and the government thought that the programme had met with such great success in the engineering faculty at Waterloo that it was worthwhile expending this sum of money to see whether this might apply to the social sciences as well.

Perhaps we had better clear this first vote and then I will have this word on superannuation.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Just on that last point with which the hon. Minister has been dealing. Has there been any extension of the co-operative approach to other universities? Is one of the purposes of the study to view the pioneering of this extension into other universities?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, while there is no agreement by the other universities as to the merits of the development at Waterloo, I think it is obvious that if this experiment turns out to be successful the other universities would very obviously take note of this and see whether it might apply to their own situations. It may be that this type of training would apply only to engineering; maybe it cannot be done in, say, business or the other studies which might be available, but certainly the other universities will have full knowledge of the results of the experiment at Waterloo.

This is not the same type of situation which I expect we will debate during the university estimates as far as the tri-semester system is concerned. This is something apart altogether from that again, which I think is a matter which should be discussed here in this House.

Vote 518 agreed to.

On vote 519:

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): I know that this government, Mr. Chairman, acts precipitously at times—we had a crowning example of that in the last few days—but I must say they are certainly dragging their feet in regard to a brief that was presented some time ago by the teachers' federation concerning a superannuation fund; and we were assured by the hon. Prime Minister of the province (Mr. Robarts), who at that time was also acting Minister of Education, that there would be some answer.

For years now we have been asking that the number of years be reduced. In the civil service; in many other groups it is down to three years. I am just wondering, in the time between now and the full estimates of the hon. Minister, that perhaps this might be thought over and, in the intervening weeks, a report prepared.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, Mr. Chairman, the question of the teachers' superannuation fund, I think once again, might properly be debated during the regular estimates; or I may have an amendment to The Teachers' Superannuation Act which perhaps we could debate at that time. As for the superannuated women teachers about whom the Legislature has been concerned—and I recall the education committee meeting last year where certain recommendations were made—I could point out to the hon. members opposite that last Wednesday we had arranged, through the good offices of the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), to have this group present their brief and state the facts to the committee studying pensions. This Wednesday we will have what we refer to as the retroactive widows—they are two separate groups as you will recall—who will be making similar presentation to the pensions committee.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder—we see this estimate of $1 million to be added to the teachers' superannuation fund year after year; and year after year after year, we see the report of the provincial auditor saying that the fund is actuarially unsound, and is getting more unsound as the years go by. Is anything going to be done? Is this a cause of concern to the government? Is anything going to be done to either make it actuarially sound—or perhaps, if it is felt it does not have to be made actuarially sound, then to advise the provincial auditor that, really, it is not worth reporting upon? Because the situation is not being changed; $1 million is being put in and, according to the figures of the auditor, the situation gets worse year after year. Let us either do it one way or the other—put up or shut up. Is it worth while making this actuarially sound? Is it government policy to do so? If it is not, then what is the point of putting in $1 million? Is that much needed, or more?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, Mr. Chairman, I had really anticipated we might get into this in some detail during my estimates. If I recall correctly, the hon. member for Brant made some observations on the teachers' superannuation fund some three or four weeks ago, sir. I made a particular note at the time and I think, if I recall his words correctly, he indicated that it was probable and likely that the fund could or should be made actuarially sound.

I do not think this is what he was suggesting. I do not think that the teachers' federation expects that it will be made actuarially sound. I think what they suggest, and I think without any question they have logic on their side, is that certain alterations be made to the fund with increased monies paid into it; and I expect I shall have something, in greater detail, to suggest to the House during my estimates, or when the bill to amend The Teachers' Superannuation Act is presented to the House.

I think that we have to realize that the provincial auditor, when he suggested the fund is not actuarially sound, is not suggesting that the fund is in danger of becoming bankrupt tomorrow. I think the hon. member for Brant touched on this subject—I believe it was in the Throne Debate—and I do not think anyone expects it to be made, in words or in strict interpretation, actuarially sound. I do not think they expect this to take place.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is really good enough. I know the hon. Minister is going to bring in his estimates. I know, in the course of them, that he is going to be dealing with teachers' superannuation funds. We have made this point over a great number of years, but I think at this time we deserve a proper answer. The other estimate, 518—I can understand some good reason why it should be more fully discussed, the items shown there under his estimates. But this has been a recurring item.

These votes, these supplementary estimates, traditionally I have always understood, were something extra and unexpected, something that was not anticipated. But over the years we always see a supplementary estimate of $1 million for the teachers' superannuation fund; it is in every year. And if there is nothing else in the supplementary estimates, there is always this additional $1 million. Every year the auditor says the fund is not actuarially sound; and, as I say, it is getting less actuarially sound as the years go on.

We have suggested in the past that there should be a statement of government policy as to how far it is going to go to make it actuarially sound; or a positive statement of policy that it does not believe this is necessary. We have suggested again, Mr. Chairman, that this $1 million should be put in the regular estimates of the department, and not continue as a supplementary. It is nothing new. The purpose of supplementary estimates, is for some programme which is new and unexpected. But year after year after year, this same thing goes on, and the auditor writes the same sort of report—only he makes it more forceful if possible. And year after year after year, we do not get an explanation. We want some leadership from the government, and this is one spot in which it could come.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I assure the hon. member that I shall make a rather full statement on the teachers' superannuation fund either when the bill to amend The Teachers' Superannuation Act is presented, or during my estimates.

Vote 519 agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

On vote 715:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): I would say that for our part, sir, we are in somewhat of a dilemma in that, first of all, when I first came into this House and for a long period, there was no question in my mind that the most outstanding Minister in the whole of that group—with regard to the fight he would give—was the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond). I looked on him with a great deal of personal respect and admiration, for a number of the progressive legislations he was putting through.

For a long time, sir, I thought it was the Scrooge of the department who was holding back a great deal of this progressive legislation. I must say, that apart from my own personal feelings towards the hon. Minister as a person, I would say again—I want to distinguish this—that, as the Minister of Health, he is a different kettle of fish.

As the Minister of Health, sir, for whose department we are being asked to pass a supplementary amount of money, a large amount, for hospitals, I say we are on the horns of a dilemma. We realize that finances are needed to build the hospitals but our question is: With the lethargy there is with respect to this crisis of hospital beds, we wonder whether, in passing this, we have the right Minister of Health to see that aggressive, vigorous action will be taken.

I listened, for example, to the question this afternoon. We are told that the hon. Minister is meeting with various groups and is going to try to come up with a solution to the over-2,000 bed shortage in Metropolitan Toronto. I listened to a supplementary question from the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy), in which he asked about veterans hospitals; and the point that I raise on this is that the hon. Minister said he has been discussing, for four years, the question of the role of veterans hospitals.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Chairman, this has nothing to do with these estimates.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, is the hon. Provincial Treasurer asking on a point of order?

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): This is on the vote.

Mr. Thompson: I am talking on the question of passing estimates on the building of hospitals.

Hon. Mr. Allan: There is nothing in here for building hospitals.

Mr. Thompson: Well, what about special grants to public hospitals?

Mr. Singer: The $3,555 million. Is that nothing?

Mr. Thompson: That is what I mean, hospitals and the funds attached to them. This is a question of concern to everyone in this area.

We have looked at the situation of the lack of hospitals, we have looked at the answers given previously by the hon. Minister of Health. It was not myself who raised the question of whether he is hoodwinking or whether he is being hoodwinked, it was Dr. Morley, who I understand writes a very authentic journal, the Journal of the Canadian Medical Association—

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, the vote in these supplementary estimates is for grants toward debts and a bed grant for hospitals.

Mr. Singer: If you do not get bed grants you cannot build the hospitals.

Mr. Thompson: We have had the dismissal of the shortage of nurses, we have had the dismissal of the shortage of hospital beds and now they are trying to dismiss the very basis of building hospitals—finances.

Mr. Chairman: Order! I would ask—

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose the hon. member would believe me if I told him that we are looking after matters pertaining to health. I could give him a very logical and very sound, authentic answer to many of the questions.

You see the whole trouble, Mr. Chairman, is that their mouths are going so fast that their brains cannot absorb what is falling on their deaf ears. If they would look up the speech centre and open up the hearing centre of their brains they might get somewhere. I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, what the purpose of these grants—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Well, I would rather be a wolf than a yapping cur.

Mr. Chairman, may I explain to the hon. members what this grant is for?

Mr. Chairman: Order! The Minister has the floor.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Is this on a point of order?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, I did not ask on a point of order, I asked that I might be given the opportunity to explain to the House what this grant is for.

Mr. Thompson: Is it a point of order, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Since this grant affects my department, I think I should have the right to tell what it is for. I do not like the statements made by the hon. member through lack of knowledge.

Mr. Thompson: I will concede after I am through, sir.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I rise on a point of order. My point of order is that this matter has nothing to do with the building of hospitals whatsoever.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I ask if special grants for public hospitals under the authority of The Public Hospitals Act and the regulations thereto, have anything to do with beds or the building of hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member sits down I will be glad to give him clarification.

Mr. Thompson: I am asking you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister will answer it but I am not asking the hon. Minister, I am asking you, sir, am I out of order to talk about the building of hospitals?

Mr. Chairman: Yes. We have to have an explanation of this first.

Mr. Thompson: From whom, sir?

Mr. Chairman: The Minister.

Mr. Thompson: Why do we have to have it from the hon. Minister?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: We do not know what we are talking about until we get an explanation from the Minister.

Mr. Thompson: Are you demanding I sit down, sir?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member asked if this had to do with building hospitals. It has not. After the Ontario hospital services insurance plan came into operation the government from year to year has given a special grant for capital purposes. This grant is computed on a per bed basis and is equal to $75 per active bed for every hospital operating in the province of Ontario.

The purposes for which this money may be used include repairs that are not approved under other grants, the wiping off of capital debt, the payment of interest and the payment of other things which are not approved under the cost-sharing agreement.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the explanation by the hon. Minister because it gives me all the greater foundation to discuss what I was discussing. I will also try to discuss it in a vein that is not personal. I hope that will be reciprocated on the part of the hon. Minister.

I am saying, sir, for example, that this is a grant towards hospitals beds and I am suggesting that if we have to pass on the basis of—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, this is not a grant towards hospital beds. The grant is computed on the basis of the number of beds that the hospital has in operation, but it is not a grant for beds.

Mr. Thompson: Then, sir, I am talking about the number of beds that a hospital has in operation and I am suggesting to the hon. Minister that the number of beds that are in operation have been presented to us by the hon. Minister in such an oblique manner, in such a vague manner, that we are told at one point that there is a surplus of hospital beds. This is denied by Dr. Morley, who is the editor of certainly a well-established paper. It is denied by doctors across this province. Everywhere they are asking: "Will there be a statement from the Minister about how he is going to tackle this problem?"

We have him stand up today and heap personal abuse on us and say that he could give an answer in a logical fashion about the shortage of beds, but then with a kind of a small child attitude he sits down and does not give us a logical solution.

One of our problems on this, sir—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

An hon. member: When an hon. member is telling the truth why do you want order?

Mr. Chairman: The Minister has explained item two of vote 715 and what the hon. member is speaking on at the present time has no relation to it.

Mr. Thompson: I am very sorry. If I could correct you, and I hope you will accept this with the proper deference with which I submit it to you, the hon. Minister mentioned the number of hospital beds, that this relates to the number of hospital beds. I am talking about the number of hospital beds, and surely I am permitted to continue talking.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On a point of order, sir, I shall not attempt to put it any more simply. The only reason that the number of beds comes into this at all is to give us a yardstick by which to measure the grant. The matter that the hon. member is speaking about has reference to capital construction grants which were discussed under the estimates of The Department of Health. It has no relationship to this supplementary grant in any way, shape or form.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): What are these grants for, Mr. Chairman, could that be explained to us? It might help.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: They may be used for the payment of capital debts, the payment of interest on capital debt, the payment of certain other capital costs of operation which do not come in for any other cost sharing—building costs, interest on capital debt are not approved under the Dominion-provincial agreement for cost sharing—and then these grants can also be used for other costs that do not qualify for grant purposes.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, in connection with this, I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he is paying off the capital debt. The purpose of paying off the capital debt is in order that you can build more hospitals—I would hope, indeed, that is the desire of the hon. Minister in trying to pay off the capital debt!

I would also say, sir, with respect to the number of beds the hon. Minister said the reason he mentioned the number of beds was so he could have a yardstick in order to measure the amount to be given. I would ask, sir, how do we arrive at this yardstick when we have had the hon. Minister stand up and tell us there was a surplus of beds, when in fact we find that in this area there is over a 2,000 bed shortage of active treatment beds?

I cannot think why I am not allowed to continue and in this vein, because this is of extreme pertinence to the whole question of building hospitals and giving adequate health services to the people of Ontario. Surely that is the principle behind the whole of your wish, to get more funds.

I would say, sir, on this, if the hon. Minister would talk to his hon. friend and colleague to the left of him in connection with capital debt, he might get some very sound ideas from him. I do not know if you have read the speech that the gentleman to the left of you, the hon. member for Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop), made, but I know that the Toronto Telegram has seen fit to have a full page devoted to that speech. Why, sir, I ask, do we have this kind of crisis developing—

Mr. Chairman: Order. I feel that you are speaking on another subject, not related to item two—special grants to hospitals under the authority of The Public Hospitals Act and the regulations thereunder. It should have been discussed under The Department of Health capital construction.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I would ask, sir, with all deference to you: We are passing an amount of money in order to reduce the capital debt. If the capital debt on public hospitals—

Mr. Chairman: The Minister has explained this to you very carefully and I feel we should all understand it by now.

Mr. Thompson: What did he say, sir—the reason that I am not talking in connection with the estimates? Could you give me a ruling on why I am not talking on the estimates?

Mr. Chairman: As the Chairman, my understanding is that $75 per bed—the only use of the grant is based on the number of beds in arriving at this grant of $75 per bed. The hospitals themselves have the right to spend this $75 in certain directions within their organization, whether it is repairs or whatever it might be. It has nothing to do with the building of further beds for hospitals.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, in view of your suggestion that it should be $75 in order to keep on the basis of this, I would suggest it should be $100, and in order to substantiate why I am suggesting this, I will say sir, that we are aware that there is a drastic shortage of active treatment beds, in fact not only in Toronto but around the province—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Does the member want to discuss further this item?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order. The estimates before you here cover a certain amount of money. I think that we have to vote for that amount of money. We have no right to enlarge it or increase it. Therefore I would ask you to vote on the amount shown.

Mr. Thompson: Well sir, I will abide by your ruling but I do so with grave misgivings.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister how it came about that it was not possible to anticipate at the beginning of the year that this sum of 3.5 million dollars approximately, would be required. Now I assume—I have not checked back on last year's estimates—but I assume there was a sum of money appropriated for this purpose. Apparently it was found to be insufficient by a quite considerable amount and I would like an explanation of the reason for the discrepancy in the estimate and what is now found to be required.

It would seem to me on the face of it, that this is the kind of item where one ought to be able to anticipate quite accurately. Apparently that has not been the case, so I would like to hear the hon. Minister's explanation.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is in error in believing that we fell short of the anticipated total by this amount. The hon. member will recall ever since he came into the House there has been this item in supplementary estimates. It is placed here each year because we hope that the time will come when it will no longer be necessary and strangely enough, we can already foresee the time when this grant will no longer be necessary because the finances of hospitals are reaching that stage of competence, shall I say, that they will not need this special grant. This special grant has appeared in supplementary estimates in this House for many years. It used to be—

Mr. Bryden: There is no corresponding item in the regular estimates?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, there is not. It used to be $250 per bed and then with the inception of the plan it was reduced to $75 per bed because at that time, prior to the plan, hospitals were allowed to use this in some measure to wipe off accumulated debts. They do not face those accumulated debts now in the same measure that they did prior to the inception of the plan and this is why it was reduced to $75 per bed. May I repeat that we can already foresee the time when it may well be possible to wipe this grant out completely.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like now to inquire about item No. 1, a grant of $150,000 to the Ontario Heart Foundation. Why was it not possible to anticipate that expenditure at the beginning of the fiscal year when the regular estimates for the year were before us?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this is not an expenditure in the sense that the department spends it. This is a grant to the Ontario Heart Foundation—

Mr. Bryden: Did you not have many grants in the estimates?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, we have and I cannot frankly tell you why this one always finds its place in the supplementary estimates. Maybe this is where all grants should go because I am a firm believer in the principle of putting grants on an annual basis so that they may be reviewed every year. We do this with the heart foundation. They submit their statements to us and we do review it each year, but for some reason, which I frankly cannot explain, it finds its place on the supplementary estimates each year. This is an outright grant to be used for heart research.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I must confess to an ignorance that has now been dispelled. Now that it has been dispelled, I have a considerable concern to think there is $4 million of expenditures—I would take it that the same answer the hon. Minister has given me on two of these items will probably apply to all of them—so that we have a matter of over $4 million involved which is not voted in advance or passed on in advance by this Legislature. I do not go along with the suggestion the hon. Minister threw out that all grants should come in by way of supplementary estimates. In that way the hon. Minister or the government would have a completely free hand during the course of the year to hand out money without any authorization from the Legislature at all and an authorization that only comes retroactively. I think retroactive authorization is a bad principle at the best of times. It is sometimes unavoidable, but—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I must stand on a point of order. This is a misapprehension. This money has not yet been paid and if you do not vote it, I am afraid we cannot pay it. This money will be paid before the close of the fiscal year, but it has not been paid. This is not a retroactive authorization from this Legislature. The explanation for items four, five and six are somewhat the same but I think if you will recall last year, I did explain that in some of these cases the grants have already been reduced, because of the fact that the need has not been established. Some of these facilities for convalescent treatment—some are camps, which at one time were included in The Department of Health estimates, being justified as deserving of grants as hospitals—could not be approved again under the cost-sharing agreement with Ottawa. They have been carried along since in supplementary grants for The Department of Health. Each year their financial statement is reviewed and if the need is not there, the grant is reduced by the amount that the need has disappeared. Now it has not been reduced this year from the sum last year; indeed, the grant for hospitals is up because of the increased number of beds. But in case of items four, five and six, the grant is exactly the same as it was in the supplementary estimate of last year. It will remain there in order that we may review it and keep it consonant with the need.

Mr. Chairman, if I may, while I am on my feet, No. 3 was a $400,000 item that is going towards the cancer treatment and research foundation to help to build a facility in Hamilton.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the cancer treatment and research foundation, there is in this year's estimates a vote which has been passed—I am not trying to reopen it—of $1,200,000. Now is it anticipated in the future that this will be dealt with in the regular estimates, the grant for this particular organization?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this particular grant will not reappear. This is a one-shot deal, if I may put it in the vernacular, to build this facility in Hamilton.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, might I ask the hon. Minister a question regarding item No. 5 in vote 715: Ontario Society for Crippled Children for convalescent camps, $48,200? In the regular estimate there is a grant of $6,000 to the society for crippled children. I would like to ask the hon. Minister about the work with crippled children and to what extent the government does support it because there came to my hand the other day an appeal for the Easter seal fund. They say this, that "each contribution for Easter seal campaign helps to give crippled boys and girls the many things they can obtain in no other way—the professional care and treatment of medical specialists, nurses, therapists, the advantage of speech correction, corrective braces, artificial limbs, camp holidays and other valuable services. The crippled children in our area are included in the more than 16,000 crippled children in Ontario who need care and treatment," and so the appeal comes for contributions.

Now, I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell us whether the government does take any real responsibility for the crippled children in Ontario. It seems to me that if this is true, if this is all done on a voluntary basis, without any systematic assessment of the need and treatment of the need, then there is a field here for very direct and very needed action.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give the hon. member the exact amount of money but I can tell him that the government is very deeply involved in this programme.

The $44,200 and $6,000 which appeared in my regular estimates between them go to provide 75 cents per day maintenance at the convalescent camps and for capital bed grants again or for place grants of $150 per year. That is what these two grants are for.

Then, concerning the crippled children's centre in Toronto here and in other places: They can elect to come under health grants or assistance under the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. There is a place in Toronto, one in London, I believe, and I think there is one other in the province elected to come under the Ontario hospital services insurance plan, and therefore for in-patients a per diem rate is provided. For the building they qualify for capital construction grants just like any other hospital. They also qualify for out-patient grants just like any other hospital. Now, this year, as announced in my estimates, we are involving ourselves to a far greater extent with these out-patient services either through the hospital insurance plan or through grants, whichever is the more advantageous to them. I may say they are very good business people and we find they are very persuasive.

In addition to this there has been a long-standing grant provided by this government. This government's share is about $168,000—I am quoting the figure from memory and I may well be wrong, but I am not far wrong, of that I am sure. I believe it is $168,000 per year to be given to the crippled children's centre for work among cerebral palsy children. This grant is matched by federal money so it is over $300,000 for that.

Mr. Young: I want to thank the hon. Minister for the answer and I would take from his answer that this phrase, they "can obtain in no other way" is a bit of salesmanship rather than actual fact.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, no, Mr. Chairman, I think that this is very well based and I believe it is very well put because the organizations which stimulate or support the Easter seal programme provide a great variety of services. They transport them, they look after entertainment, they provide special braces, and just as they say, they actually do provide things that are not available to the children in any other way.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF LANDS AND FORESTS

Vote 1117 agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, TREASURY DEPARTMENT

Vote 2306 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE

On vote 1801:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): I would like to make some inquiries with regard to item No. 2, designated as travelling expenses in the amount of $12,000. I am assuming that figure covers the anticipated travelling expenses of all personnel of the main office such as the hon. Minister (Mr. Cecile), the deputy Minister and their staff. I notice that in the public accounts for 1962-63 the actual amount spent by the hon. Minister on travelling expenses was what I would regard as the modest sum of $1,200. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, if it is anticipated that the figure for travelling expenses for the hon. Minister will be approximately the same in the coming year. If not, what allowance is made for the hon. Minister's travelling expenses in the total figure of $12,000 for the coming year?

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Chairman, I do not anticipate spending any more on travelling expenses. As far as I am personally concerned, as is known, I am not a great patron of the airplane, and I use the train when I can but in my particular circumstances I also use the automobile a great deal in travelling and as far as I am personally concerned these expenses will not be any higher than they are now. As a matter of fact, I might say that in some instances I provide myself with my own transportation without even thinking of The Department of Public Welfare to reimburse that.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a brief comment with regard to item 1, and in regard to general policies of this department. The hon. Minister emphasized repeatedly in his introduction that they were under review and he expressed great hopefulness with regard to what was going to be achieved. His repeated emphasis was on research and he paid a very justifiable compliment to the competence and to the dedication of his staff in seeking to implement these changes.

But the interesting thing is, Mr. Chairman, that when my colleague from Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) presented his introductory statement on behalf of this group in the House, he commented in lines that can be described only as a projection of the research and the study and the various papers that are presented to this government and this department by its consultants and advisers.

As a matter of fact, practically all of his comments were a restatement or at best a projection of the comments of the deputy Minister in his report to the hon. Minister; of many advisers such as Bessie Touzel and John Morgan, advisers and consultants of this department; or reports contained in the needs and resources report of the Metropolitan Toronto social planning council. In other words, from all these people advising the department, what my colleague stated is merely a projection of what they had stated.

Yet when he had finished, the hon. Minister got up, Mr. Chairman—and I want to return to this now—and what he said was about as cheap and unworthy a comment as I have heard from any Minister of the Crown for quite some time. He dismissed the whole thing, if I may borrow his phraseology—as “the gospel of the socialist point of view.” He referred to it as being deplorable because in his conception of socialism, it involved paternalization—this is an interesting word in both French and English—yes, paternalization.

I can think of nothing that is closer to establishing a paternal approach than the kind of welfare which seeks to perpetuate, or results in the perpetuation of dependency, instead of the removal of dependency; or the kind of welfare that keeps people bordering on subsistence so that they are regimented by the very existence in which they are living.

Yet this is what the hon. Minister dismisses. In fact, he ended up with the cheapest of all his comments by saying that there are only three places in the world where you will find a perfect man: in an Ontario hospital, the cemetery or the NDP. I do not object to the hon. Minister getting up and making cracks about our socialism. If the hon. Minister is in effect saying that progress means socialistic measures, fine. This is not new.

We have listened many a time to some Ministers of the Crown, sir, who dismiss something as socialism on the one hand, and then are willing to adapt it and put it into effect when they think it will get votes at election time.

But the thing that becomes very obvious, Mr. Chairman, is: That this department is headed in the right direction. Public money is being spent on getting reports that are good reports; they are reports which are leading in the right direction.

It becomes more and more obvious that the man who is the chief roadblock to these competent officials of the department being able to achieve an effective purpose, through the expenditure of public money, is the hon. Minister himself. He is the man who is frustrating it. It is all very well for him to go around the province and read speeches which have been prepared by his competent staff, but when the hon. Minister is on his own, for even two or three minutes—the fleeting period between the time it took for him to get up and make his comments and his advisers to get up here—he utters the kind of cheap, unworthy comments he did here in the House the other day.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that as far as I am concerned the hon. Minister's statements make him unworthy of the confidence of this House. I am not stating anything new. The hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) has said so already. What I would do, Mr. Chairman, in light of this—and I would have done it a lot earlier if there had not been so much happening in the last, intervening three or four days—is indicate our lack of confidence in the hon. Minister, because I am convinced he is the greatest single roadblock to progress in this department.

We cannot attack the statutory estimate covering his salary, but what we can do to express our lack of confidence—and I now do it—is to move “that item 2 of vote 1801 be reduced by the $1,200” the hon. Minister is going to spend on travel expenses.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

It is moved by Mr. MacDonald that item 2 of vote 1801 be reduced by $1,200.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): May I speak on this motion, Mr. Chairman?

I would say, sir, like the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party, that I certainly have some misgivings in connection with the vigorous leadership applied to this department. I was just reading through the estimates of March 18 again, and I notice there that in some of the answers which are given—I do not know whether they are vague because of the hon. Minister's legal background, and given in this fashion purposely, or not—it certainly seems to be such a vagueness that it is purposely done to avoid answering questions.

I think, for example, that the hon. Minister was asked about mothers' allowances. He was asked what he was going to do up in Ottawa, in connection with the whole question of division of power and working together with the federal government; and the hon. Minister said that some of the things he might discuss are: “disability pensions”—and I am quoting the hon. Minister—“old age assistance and mothers' allowances, and also all the programmes that we share in equal participation—”

On page 1776 of Hansard of March 18, 1964, you will find the following query addressed by me to the hon. Minister:

Mr. Thompson: Could you clarify one of them? Mothers' allowance. How are you going to deal with mothers' allowance? What is going to be your stand when you go to Quebec?

The hon. Minister replied:

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to deal with that particular problem when in Quebec city.

He further said that he was not going to deal with mothers' allowances at all.

What I am trying to point out is that previously he had mentioned that mothers' allowances would be dealt with. When we asked him how he would deal with them he replied that he did not expect that would be included in the agenda. I offer that, sir, as an example of the vagueness or the swift footwork with which the hon. Minister operates, when his estimates are presented, in order that we get no answers about this.

We raised questions about research. Both Opposition parties raised these questions. We were told that he is vitally interested in research, and I am reiterating in a sense the remarks of the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party. Then, when we asked him to be specific, to give us concrete examples of where he was going to apply research, he tells us vaguely that research is applied all the time.

Then we asked him if he had a research project. The deputy Minister suggested there should be new thinking, but could he specify what the new thinking is and how it applies to the department; and again we get no answer. In other words, sir, in this department we must come, unfortunately, to the conclusion that the hon. Minister is either trying to dodge questions or he does not know the answers to questions.

I would be very inclined to agree with the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party, that we should cut the hon. Minister's expenses. On the other hand, I think this: One of the problems may be because the hon. Minister needs these travelling expenses in order to travel around more, to visit the institutions, to get out and see some of the children's institutions—then he will be more versed in connection with the problems, and he will be more vibrant in the House, more decisive. We will see new blood come into the department. For that reason, sir, my party feels that the travelling expenses are justified expenses if they are used properly, and we would not vote in connection with it.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentlemen on the Liberal benches can take whatever position they wish. We have put forward this motion as an expression of no confidence in the hon. Minister.

The travelling expenses, admittedly, are neither here nor there; but this is the only way we can bring to a head the question of confidence in the hon. Minister. I think there are full and sufficient grounds for the House to express no confidence in him, and I do not think all the travelling in the world will make him a good Minister of Public Welfare.

It is obvious he simply has no comprehension of the kinds of problems involved in this department. He is completely out of touch with all modern thinking on the subject. The contrast was put very squarely when these estimates were last before us on March 18. My colleague, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Scarborough West presented a proposed programme to the House, setting forth what we consider to be desirable objectives within this field. I would say that it represented a programme of enlightenment; over against it the hon. Minister put his own obscurantism. It was a straight choice between enlightenment and obscurantism.

The hon. Minister described it as a choice between Socialism and Conservatism. If he wants to put it that way, it is fine with me. I do not care about the terminology, but I am concerned about substance. It is quite obvious that the programme that the hon. member for Scarborough West put forward, and which the hon. Minister dismissed with cheap gibes, is the kind of programme the government should have before it. I believe that the department has been, and is, continuing to move in the direction of the objectives enunciated by the hon. member for Scarborough West; but all the time, as it tries to move forward, it is dragging along an anchor in the person of the hon. Minister. He is holding back, clinging to 19th century concepts of welfare, encouraging dependency, treating welfare as if it was a dole instead of a method whereby human beings can be assisted to become self-supporting, self-reliant individuals again.

There are very few—as the department's own studies have shown—who, if given a proper opportunity, if they have the proper services and facilities available, cannot become self-reliant and self-supporting individuals. This should be the total philosophy of our welfare programme, instead of the antiquated 19th century, charity handout approach of the hon. Minister.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the government find some less challenging and less responsible portfolio for the hon. Minister of Public Welfare, and should put in his place, in this department, in this portfolio, someone with some comprehension of modern thought in this field. I do not think we can ever develop an adequate welfare programme in the province under present circumstances. Therefore, in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the hon. members on the Liberal benches, and other hon. members, can make up their own minds. But I think that the case has been made out clearly for a vote of no confidence in the hon. Minister; as far as this group is concerned, we are going to indicate it by our votes, and other hon. members can do as they see fit.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, speaking to the motion, it is an extraordinary fact when a Minister of the Crown, in effect, rejects every report, every piece of advice, every stratagem, every programme, which his own department presents to him. I say, with no particular shame, that the basis of my remarks last week were founded on the reports and programmes submitted by his own department and by those consultant agencies with which he is frequently in contact. And indeed, when one reads in the reports of the department the words of the deputy Minister and I want to quote them again:

In the administration of welfare programmes today there is primarily need to revise our thinking. It is not enough merely to maintain persons on public assistance.

When one reads that in a report of the hon. Minister's department, and then requests a reply, and all one receives is a totally elusive response, then it is incumbent on the Opposition to express non-confidence in the hon. Minister. His remarks completely refute those of his own department.

I am frankly very interested in the approach taken by my hon. colleague from Dovercourt, because the hon. member felt constrained to put things rather more strongly last week. I want to remind the hon. member for Dovercourt—who does not think that a non-confidence motion is justified—of his own remarks. He asked the hon. Minister, what are the new approaches to the grave problems of welfare? The hon. Minister gave a reply which is rather interesting. The hon. member for Dovercourt said, "This is almost like an itch, one can keep itching away all the time just on research. At some point you need action." We all chuckled in agreement.

Then the member for Dovercourt asked, where is the research and how are you going to apply it? The hon. Minister again gave an answer which disregarded the question. Finally the hon. member for Dovercourt—I do not think I am misinterpreting—pressed to the wall, angered by the lack of response, right in his anger, said, "We are talking about men and women and children who are suffering, who are not getting the opportunity and you are taking the most dilettante approach."

I will say to you, Mr. Minister, and to the hon. member for Dovercourt, that when such passion, such feeling can be expressed on this side of the House, when a Minister can take a position totally incompatible with the specific evidence of his department, then we must make some move in expressing a lack of confidence, however immaterial, however small that move may be. The point is that the $1,200 expense money represents a matter of principle, the principle being that the hon. Minister is not worthy to hold this portfolio. His position is antediluvian and we need a 20th century approach to welfare.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, it is really amazing, the nitpicking that our hon. friends on the left indulge in on such frequent occasions.

Mr. Chairman: You are speaking—

Mr. Singer: Oh, indeed I am. I am speaking to the nitpicking qualities expressed in this motion and that the great emotion that the hon. member for Scarborough West—

An hon. member: You forgot to call him a backbencher.

Mr. Singer: —can bring, I am sorry I missed the—

Mr. S. Lewis: I am not one of the Chicago gang.

Mr. Singer: If the hon. gentlemen opposite would rather make the speech, I will be perfectly happy to listen to them as soon as I am through.

Mr. MacDonald: As usual, you have missed the principle in the motion.

Mr. Singer: It is very difficult. I do not know whether the barracking is coming from over there or from here. I was going to defend you fellows just for a minute or two.

An hon. member: Believe you me, you need it. You need the defence.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, meanwhile back at the motion. I was going to say that this motion really expresses a sense of futility which the group on our left feels called upon to put forward from time to time. Certainly our views on the functioning of this department do not express to any extent whatsoever that we are satisfied with the way this department is being run. My hon. colleagues from Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), and from Dovercourt have set forth their views which are the views of our party in a clear explicit manner. We believe there is much that can be done and much that must be done in this field of welfare, by bringing new direction to it and so on.

But what purpose this motion has in this expression, completely escapes me and completely escapes my hon. colleagues. To get on with the business of this House, certainly we are called upon to express in our opinion what are reasonable and logical objections to government policy. My substantial objection to the direction in which The Department of Welfare moves, is similar to that which seems to run now through so many government departments. It was expressed to some extent in the ill-fated section 14 of Bill No. 99.

It is a direction that "we know better in government, because we have a Cabinet portfolio or a Cabinet mantle around our shoulders, we know better than all the people and we are going to do what in our mind is best, we are dictators, albeit munificent dictators, we are going to be pleasant about our dictation. There is no real reason to pay any attention to the studies that have gone on in the various fields we are charged with."

There is no real importance to pay attention to a man like Professor Morgan, for instance, who for many, many, many years has set forward the idea of having a common system of welfare grants, not trying to departmentalize grants for blind people, grants for widows, grants for this person and that person. There is no real purpose in going at this because the government does not think with this sort of an idea, expressed by one of our best informed educational people in the welfare field, so forcibly, so ably, so succinctly. We agree that the functions of this department in the light of present-day times are not being carried on properly, but we are hoping that somewhere along the line our pleas directed to this hon. Minister and to the whole department and to all of the departments of government, will perhaps fall on some little bit of fertile ground and that a little bit of progress will be made, at least until the next election. This government will be charged with supplying a Minister of Public Welfare and at least until the next election we would hope that the travelling allowance voted to the hon. Minister of Public Welfare will be used by him for the best possible purposes. We cannot support this motion for these reasons.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I am very interested to hear the remarks of the group on my right.

An hon. member: It is not a group, it is a party. A very honourable party.

Another hon. member: The right wing party of the House.

Mr. Young: The hon. members to my right, if I might be permitted to say so. My hon. colleague from Scarborough West pointed out that the speech he had made last week in this House was based primarily upon reports from this department, from its various agencies and staff. In reply to that, we have these words from the hon. Minister and I quote:

You have full right to have these views and express them but unfortunately I am not in that thinking group, although I appreciate the statements that were made in this respect. And I must confess there are some good things among them, things that we feel we could associate with our thinking in the matter and which we will be pleased to take into consideration and possibly use. But until such time as the people of Ontario are satisfied to have a socialist government in Ontario by which they will be regimented and for which they will be paternalized, well until then I will leave it up to the people.

These are the words of the hon. Minister. In other words he is saying that until such time as there is a government which represents this group the reports of his own department will not be implemented.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these are strong words from a Minister of the Crown and this group feels very strongly about what he has said. When the hon. members to the right call our motion "nitpicking" I do not know what they want done. Perhaps they would cut off the whole appropriation for this department. But if they did then they are handicapping the staff of that department which is faced with a challenging job and which is determined to do a good job in spite of the hon. Minister dragging his feet. And so there is only one place that we can reach the hon. Minister and still say we agree with the department estimate of the job, and that is to move that the expense allowance be cut off. The hon. Minister's salary is statutory, we cannot touch that, and so we are distinguishing between the Minister and the department.

It seems to me that when the hon. Minister cuts this whole business off by saying it is socialism, this is an old trick which has been tried for years to dismiss an argument which is basically sound. I think here in this House that argument should be outmoded. This motion which has been made today should be passed as an expression of our lack of confidence in the hon. Minister who cannot take the advice of his own department.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): When the motion was first introduced, Mr. Chairman, the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party stated his real reason for it and that was, he said, that the words of the hon. Minister were irresponsible when he compared the members of his party to inmates of an Ontario hospital. I agree with him that this is so. I agree with the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party that the comments of the hon. Minister were irresponsible—but I would also say that the motion was introduced more or less as a slap back at the hon. Minister and it is based on these reasons only and for that reason, which we consider unimportant, we are not supporting the motion.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I cannot help but vote against the motion. The motion is too picayune. The idea of deducting $1,200 from the hon. Minister's expense allowance is a very insignificant way of approaching this, sir, or an unimportant way of approaching this.

For one thing, Mr. Chairman, we do not know if this hon. Minister is going to be the Minister after April 1. Are we going to deduct $1,200 expense allowance for the next individual who is going to be the Minister?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Newman: The way that the Ministers have been changed around recently and the way they will change around in the near future, we may be jeopardizing a man who has intentions of doing a very good job by deducting this $1,200.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I make a brief comment—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Nipissing has the floor.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that since—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: With these fellows as friends you do not need enemies.

Mr. Troy: Praying for your gavel, sir.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Troy: Thank you, sir.

It seems to me the hon. members to my left, our hon. colleagues to the left, are reluctant dragons. If they feel that the department itself is of very high calibre it seems to me that it would be very good business to give the hon. Minister some travelling expenses so that he can get out of town—

An hon. member: A one-way trip to South Africa.

Mr. Troy:—and be away from the department altogether and let the department run itself.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken I want to make one brief word of clarification.

I recognize this is a serious motion. I trust that in my introductory comments something of the seriousness of what I was going to say was obvious. The motion is a simple matter of no confidence in the hon. Minister and there is no other way to express it during these estimates; no other way of expressing it.

Mr. Thompson: There are all kinds of ways.

Mr. MacDonald: Now the first person to express no confidence in this hon. Minister in his own words, very forcefully and with passion, was the hon. member for Dovercourt on the first day of the estimates. Now we have had another indication of a lot of bark but no bite from the Liberals. It will be interesting once again to see the forces of reaction lined up when this vote comes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the motion to delete item 2, the $1,200 for travelling expenses. I feel that the group on our right, and I consider them a group at this point, are not acting like a responsible party in Opposition to the government.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: They do not understand, and this explains their ineptness over the years to provide the type of Opposition that is needed in a Legislature of this type. This is one way, if they will study the procedures that are available to the Opposition to express a principle and a no confidence approach.

Certainly the remarks of the hon. Minister following the remarks of the hon. member for Scarborough West would discourage any member of this House who has a responsibility to represent his constituents in regard to public welfare. I have always felt some pride when I get a request from a constituent in regard to their problems.

What does it make one feel, when they approach a problem of a widow on mothers' allowance and they call you to tell you that they were very pleased that three or four days ago they received a notice that they had now been given a small army pension of $12 or $13 a month? Then you find out within a few weeks that they had been notified they would either have to refuse to accept that little bit of extra money or it will be deducted from their mothers' allowance.

How does this make a member feel when he is aware of a case of an emotionally disturbed epileptic who is in and out of the Ontario hospital three or four times a year and when the person goes in her allowance is cut completely, she does not even have a dollar bill in her purse to go down to the tuck shop and spend as one would like to do? She has to depend entirely on relatives and if the relatives have no money they have to just go without.

The Liberals have expressed their interest in the welfare of the people of Ontario in this House for years, but now, when they pretend to throw the lifeline out to the people of Ontario, it ends up that before they get it back in they get a knife and cut it off. It is about time the Opposition in this House accepted their responsibilities and criticized in a sound manner and took every opportunity to express opposition when they find the department is not doing the proper job.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour—

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, before the motion is taken I would simply like to say that I have tried as a member of the Opposition to detail criticisms. Someone has been kind enough to suggest that I have done it with passion and eloquence. But, sir, I am not going to sully my criticisms by aligning myself with a picayune effort such as this.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! All those in favour of the motion please say "aye".

All those opposed please say "nay".

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the motion, please rise.

All those opposed to the motion, please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the ayes are seven and the nays 86.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

On vote 1801:

Mr. Troy: Yes, sir.

In the statement to the House, the hon. Minister referred to what they were doing in regard to Indian services. He said there is one racial group in Ontario which has been the source of much concern. I refer to our native Indian population, and particularly to those Indians living in northern areas where there has been little opportunity for association with civilization.

Mr. Chairman, the Indians north of the CNR are treaty Indians who get their treaty money from this provincial government, they are not the responsibility, as far as that is concerned, of the federal government. That is one thing that has been their responsibility for years.

Also, one would seem to think that it is only in the last few years that the Indians from north of the CNR and those areas have come into such areas as Red Lake. They have been there ever since the mines were opened up. They have drifted into those municipalities and it has been the government's responsibility. Once they get off the reservation they do not become the federal government's responsibility at all.

The same thing applies in Batchawana, they are not registered Indians, they are the responsibility of this province.

Many of the Indians in Moosonee are your responsibility. They are not treaty Indians, nor are they registered Indians.

If the hon. Minister would prevail upon the Cabinet to get rid of some of that land that is controlled by the ONR in Moosonee and give these Indians up there an opportunity so that they can buy land, and then they will build homes that will be suitable for them. It is mentioned here that they live in squalid shacks and so on; naturally, because they do not own the land. Now with the air force in Moosonee, with that very fine establishment up there, these Indians can get employment. Give them an opportunity to buy a piece of land and then they will improve their lot.

The hon. Minister mentioned too, about the bands in southern Ontario doing very well. Well, I assure him that the Nipissing band, the Ojibway band in the Nipissing area, have done extremely well. It just shows you what Indians can do. These Indians have taken that area and they have made subdivisions of it, they are leasing lots at $100 a year for some lots, some $75, so that they will be having an annual income of anywhere from $30,000 to $40,000. They are a very progressive band and this proves what can be done if you show some interest in them. But when you say it is just a matter of recent years, these Indians have been the department's responsibility for years and years. And now we are getting a great hullabaloo about it.

I must compliment the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) who at long last has done something. He has an Indian committee set up with the Indians themselves running the show. Also he has seconded to that committee a very fine employee of his department, Mr. Cam Currie, who knows the Indian problems. He was a Hudson's Bay employee before he joined the Indians. He has joined The Department of Lands and Forests, he knows the Indians in various sections of this country and through his great help we have a very fine trappers' auction in North Bay now. But this committee, I understand, will also have no interference from the department except to get advice when they need it. But to say that these things—

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Would the hon. member let me interject there, that we are also going to have the assistance of Chief Armstrong, the captain of the next Stanley Cup winners.

Mr. Troy: Well, I do not know to whom the hon. Minister refers. Where does he live, this fellow?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Is the hon. member a Canadian supporter? I am talking about the Maple Leafs.

Mr. Troy: I certainly hope that the particular one the hon. Minister refers to—I am glad to know he is going to join the committee and have something to do with it. But if he has no more success in the committee, than he will have in the next few days, God help the committee.

The point is though—do not get me off this subject. Seriously, I say again that it is a long, long time—we have let this thing go for years and years. These Indians have been the responsibility of the provincial government, not the federal government at all in certain areas. In Batchawana I understand they are not registered Indians, therefore they are not the responsibility of the federal government, they are the responsibility of the provincial government. I say again, if you will induce the government to make some changes in regard to Moosonee so that the Indians may be able to buy land and build homes. The same thing applies in Red Lake and other mining areas. They came there when the mines were opened. I am sure I will get support from the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope), he knows that section. They have been there for years, and not much concern has been given to them.

Now we are getting it, but I again plead that the hon. Minister not only assist them in Red Lake, in Batchawana, in Moosonee, but in other sections of the province. We are finding now that the Indians are coming to our high schools this year. In the city of North Bay alone we will have some 18 young Indian students graduating from the three branches of our educational system in the commercial, academic and technical schools and I hope that you will make use of these and see to it, particularly The Department of Lands and Forests, that you will give every opportunity to young Indians to become employed by the department as rangers, as scalers, and in other ways, because that is the life that they know best and a life that they are happiest in.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, I should like to pursue just a little further the matter of research. I notice in the first instance that there is, as has been pointed out, no individual estimate for research in this department whatsoever, despite the fact as the hon. Minister himself pointed out, it is an ongoing process.

Secondly, he said it was scattered through the estimates and I am prepared to accept that, except that it certainly is not discernible to the naked eye.

Thirdly, the two projects on which much discussion has been based, the long-term chronic cases and the special unit for over 50, are in the words of the report—and I found this most fascinating—"supported by federal funds under the national welfare grants programme". Now, in view of the fact there is no individual research listed in the estimates at all, and such research as has been done is supported by federal monies, can the hon. Minister be a little more specific as to precisely what kind of research the department is engaged in with provincial monies?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I will answer the hon. member for Scarborough West that this research he is speaking about—

I hope that is the one he means, the one that was sponsored by the province, in many diversified fields in respect to long-term welfare recipients and mothers' allowances cases—is research as between the city of Toronto and The Department of Public Welfare.

As you know, there has been a pilot project where a certain group was investigated along these particular lines to see what they were doing during the day and what they were doing in the way of looking for work or what they intended to do. They were followed very closely by those who were looking at this project from the department and also from The Department of Welfare from the city of Toronto. That is one project; I trust you had that in mind at the same time.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, it said in the report that that particular project was supported by federal funds under the National Welfare Grants programme. This is the study of long-term family cases, I imagine that is the one you referred to.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, I am interested in knowing which precise projects are under provincial funds in the research you mentioned through your department.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I suppose it would be a repetition of what I have already said. This has been initiated by the province and we are receiving, under the general welfare agreement which we have, parts of the monies from Ottawa. It is really one and the same project that we speak about. I was wondering what you meant by having a special Ontario programme and one fostered by Ottawa and Ontario. What we are doing from Ottawa is recouping some of the money that was spent, that is really what it is.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Minister, I would just like to add to that if I could. If I could I would like to add to the question that you have just answered—may I do that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to add, sir, that you spoke with great vehemence about your research and the necessity for research. I am going back to the last session. The hon. member for Scarborough West is asking: Where is the responsibility that you place on research? You, as the head of The Department of Public Welfare—not what is done in co-operation with Ottawa—but what research do you actually do? You have told us that this is vital to the department. And the question has been asked: Give us concrete examples of research you are actually encouraging.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, do I understand from my hon. friend that he is asking what we are doing with respect to research in the department, over and above these special research projects?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, sir.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I think I can answer this by stating that there is no specified amount in the estimates for the specific purpose of research, as my hon. friend might have in mind. Basically, research is included in the estimates, as they are now. I do not think I can express myself any better than to say this: Every branch of the department, while it is doing its administration, is also doing research by means of everybody in the field—it might be a field worker, it might be an administrator or supervisor. It is a continuous matter of research. As you know, we have tried many things. The research might even go as far as individual cases which are presented to us and which are a matter of study, and also as far as finding out what the situation might be, or what might happen if something else should come into the picture.

It is a very interesting subject, in the sense that it is continuous research. But to pinpoint a certain group of people, as we have had in this Toronto and provincial research, is difficult. It is not, in a definite way, in the estimates of the department.

The other research about which you might be thinking has now been completed, except for one last meeting, I understand; this is the committee on child welfare which, I hope, will be reported here in the next three or four weeks. I hope I have answered this in the way you expect; that is, we have no specific research department. Every branch of the department, indeed, every person dealing with every case, whether it be an individual or a group, is a research department.

Mr. Thompson: Just to follow up on this, sir, and I appreciate your efforts to clarify it for me. As I understand research—I do not think you understand it on the same basis, sir—my understanding is that you collect facts, you examine situations, and you have competent, trained people to look at these facts and try to relate cause and effect to them.

You say you have that in different departments, that you are doing this continuously. Could you tell us who the research people are, in each department, and what their qualifications are, to do the research?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I was trying to tell the hon. member that I felt everyone who is the head of a department or section was doing some research. I confess to you that, if there are any specially designated persons in each group, I would have to find out who they are—and if they have a specific job to do in this respect. My understanding was always that the head of every branch in the department is a research worker in his own right.

Mr. Thompson: Could I pinpoint this to one department? You say that the head of every department is doing research projects. Could I take, for example, the day nurseries branch? What is the head of the day nurseries branch doing with respect to research?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am sure you know the person who is the head of that department—Miss Stapleford. She is an expert in these matters, and I am sure that research is done for the purposes of establishing standards—I remember we talked about this last year—for the purposes of establishing what would be required for people working in these particular institutions. Naturally, again, I would say that she is the research worker and the advisor in this respect, for any regulations which might be drawn up under the Act, or any inspections which might be made of these places. At the same time she will be providing herself with the knowledge and co-operation of these people who are in this particular field.

But, if you ask me if I have a special research worker in that particular branch, well, I must confess to you that I cannot give you that information. I thought you meant it in a general sense. What I meant to say is that I do not know if we have a person specially designated in The Department of Public Welfare to be a research person—I am not saying that it would not be a good thing—who would look into all these programmes and advise us accordingly.

Naturally, as you stated a moment ago, we do take full advantage of all the groups such as the groups you mentioned, and the persons who are expert in the field; and we work with them in that particular respect.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow upon this particular question. The hon. member for Dovercourt chose a rather interesting sub-estimate when he mentioned day nurseries. In the last annual report of the department, Mr. Chairman, for 1961-62, under day nursery expansion, it says—I am quoting from the report:

A study will be commencing shortly, which will give greater understanding in creating additional facilities, and so on.

Is one to understand that this study is done by the person who also administers the entire department? Or is the study not done by anyone you can specifically name? Or has the study, in fact, commenced? If so, is there a special group—and might we know who is in it?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned a moment ago, Miss Stapleford is the one who is heading this particular branch of the department. She has been doing the research, the study of the needs and what is required along that line. As you will recall, I think there was an amendment to the statute last year, giving her wider powers to go into this field, with some help of her own choice.

If my hon. friend would allow me, or would wish to have this postponed, I can consult with Miss Stapleford and get any names she might have—of a group of that description.

Furthermore—I should not have forgotten it because it is a very important research department—we have geriatric studies made, as you know, in conjunction with the city of Toronto and also, I think, at Western Hospital. There, we have certain beds designed to conduct that research, and we have some very able doctors doing that; it is a continuous matter.

The other thing I spoke about a moment ago, in respect to the city of Toronto, was in reference to long-term assistance cases. This, I understand, is in the process of being completed also. We will have some results which will be very interesting.

I hope, as was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, that there will be a select committee of this House appointed for further study of the aged. I am sure this will be a very considerable area of research when it comes about.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Chairman, in this $90 million budget The Department of Public Welfare is presenting to the House, the major portion is administered at municipal level. In this particular section, 1201, I wish to show that there are many inequities as interpreted at local level. Not many of us are authorities on unmarried mothers but the law, as it is now constituted and administered through the department, is that an unmarried mother receives welfare allowance if she has one child out of wedlock; but if she has another child she is cut off allowances. Now this is a great cost to the municipalities and I suggest to the hon. Minister first that morals cannot be legislated, so why cut her off? Her morals are not going to be improved by so doing!

Second, on the cost of drugs, I would like the hon. Minister's answers to these questions regarding the reason or the intelligence, or lack of it, in the ministration of these. The cost of drugs for adults who are sick or children who are sick, is now fully paid for by the municipalities. This is another great drain on the taxpayer; and it has no relation to real estate tax which I constantly put forth to this House.

In regard to artificial limbs under this section 1201, Mr. Chairman, the position as it is now set forth in the Act splits the cost at 50-50. Currently, in Owen Sound, we are faced with providing a $500 artificial limb for a double amputee. It is going to cost us $250. There is no sound basis for change here.

The Child Welfare Act is the biggest drain on our municipal welfare budget at local level—

Mr. Chairman: Order. Are you speaking on 1201?

Mr. Sargent: I am speaking on section 12, Mr. Chairman, of vote 1801.

Mr. Chairman: You said 1201 on several occasions. Continue!

Mr. Sargent: I am speaking on vote 1801, Mr. Chairman, on page 100, section 12.

The largest cost to municipal welfare budgets, Mr. Chairman, is the cost of The Child Welfare Act. This is now paid 60 per cent by the municipality and 40 per cent by the province.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, might I tell the hon. member that the vote here is strictly for capital construction. The 60-40 per cent he speaks about is under the other vote. This vote is for capital construction—buildings, for example. Here the government pays 25 per cent of the capital construction costs.

Mr. Sargent: It is all welfare and I think the whole system is wrong. I think that it should be on an 80-20 basis as other welfare is.

Getting back to unmarried mothers, I would like to hear the thinking of the hon.

Minister on this very moral and economic question at municipal level.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, again I would like to follow on the heels of the suggestion—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. S. Lewis: I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I would say to the hon. member for Grey North, if there are any restrictions, as he mentioned, on unmarried mothers, I do not know about it. I would like him to point them out in the regulations.

Mr. Sargent: The hon. Minister should know if there are restrictions there, that is his department.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, I do not think there are any restrictions there in this respect. As a matter of fact, I think that when this Act was passed—

Mr. Sargent: Then the welfare administrators of Ontario are very wrong, because that is one of the things they are after; it happened in our city.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, again I would like—

Mr. Sargent: May I have my answer?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, the other questions, if I remember them, deal with matters of drugs, for the aged, I imagine.

Mr. Sargent: And for people who are sick and for children.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I appreciate my hon. friend's question. You know that with the aged there is a supplementary payment that can be made of up to $20. When there is need this can be used for drugs; and I am not saying that is sufficient, mind you.

In the other cases that the hon. member speaks about, general welfare cases, these are matters which are being discussed right now with the government at Ottawa to see what can be done. I appreciate, as I am quite sure that the hon. member for Grey North does, that this is a very difficult field for the people to deal with, because drugs are one of the most expensive items. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that we are looking into this very seriously and we have been doing so for quite some time, trying to find a way in which we can provide these services without causing too much harm one way or another.

As a matter of fact we intend to discuss this with the federal authorities because we have asked and we have been told that they were quite willing to discuss this matter with us in a general way under The General Welfare Assistance Act.

As far as child welfare is concerned, I would remind the hon. member that before these grants there was nothing. These grants were increased as time went along with the result that today we pay 25 per cent for capital grants in construction for child welfare, and as will be stated in the following grant, operational cost sharing has been raised to 40 per cent.

I have no objection to what my hon. friend says, but surely he does not expect to relieve completely the obligations of the people in these matters. I would hate to see the day when everything would be controlled by a department of government in respect to all these. I am not saying that it is enough, but we have to do this work with the means that are at our disposal and at the same time try to conduct the programme as well as possible, especially that of child welfare.

I am quite satisfied that when I have a report from the committee which is now having its last meeting to make out its final report, they will be able to guide us along those lines. I appreciate, with my hon. friends, that it is a very difficult area and one which we must go at very carefully because of its implications.

It is not only care for the children themselves and their protection, but also the cost of this in the home.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I want to, finally, follow on the remarks which the hon. member for Grey North raised at one point on the question of unmarried mothers and again ask the hon. Minister a specific question. I may remind him that back in 1951 the Canadian Welfare Council recommended that provincial governments assume financial responsibility, total—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I do not want the hon. member to raise his voice but as there is a little buzz in the House I would appreciate it if he would raise it a little higher.

Mr. S. Lewis: I would not want to seem as though I were indulging in shouting. The Canadian Welfare Council back in 1951 recommended that provincial governments assume full responsibility, full financial responsibility, for the maintenance of unmarried mothers and their children and since that time the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Quebec and Newfoundland, have followed precisely that policy.

I think, Mr. Chairman, the principle embodied in that policy is a highly intelligent one. At the moment, the unmarried mother to escape the odium and stigma, frequently from insensitive people in her own locale, moves from a municipality far afield, to a major urban centre. The nature of the financial arrangements require that the municipality of origin be charged with the cost to look after the unmarried mother and child, so that all the effort the mother went to to rehabilitate herself and remove the stigma attached to the unmarried factor, is brought back to her and is frequently sensationalized in the community of origin.

Taking this into account, it has again and again been recommended that if the provincial government assumes this financial responsibility it can remove the so-called "immorality" that is attached to the act and give the unmarried women a dignity which they are presently denied. What it would mean for the province is that instead of paying 40 per cent of the cost for children born out of wedlock, it would pay 100 per cent of the cost and instead of paying a mere $100 a month toward welfare workers in this field, it would pay the full cost toward welfare workers in this field.

I say to the hon. Minister that surely unmarried mothers in the province deserve the self respect which would be given to them if the government took this step, a step which has already been taken by five other provinces at least and is contemplated by several more. So I specifically ask the hon. Minister what he thinks of the recommendation in the study of needs and resources, the Toronto Metropolitan study, recommendation 146 of which says:

The province of Ontario should assume responsibility for the total cost involved and the maintenance of and services to unmarried mothers and their children.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I think that the remarks that were made by my hon. friend from Scarborough West are rather welcome remarks. I think they are refreshing for the simple fact that there are so many schools of thought in this respect. I even receive some correspondence at times which is absolutely opposed to what he has said. Sometimes I have had to answer this in as nice language as possible to explain why we, as you know, have helped in that field by providing them with mothers' allowance, providing they would take care of their child or children. Now, I think it is very refreshing to hear that because I can assure the hon. member that my line of thinking is quite exactly the same in respect to the problem he posed a moment ago, in respect to unmarried mothers.

Mr. S. Lewis: Could I add to that, Mr. Minister, by asking whether you think the precise recommendation has validity, and is the government prepared to contemplate assuming total costs? Quite apart from whether or not the idea is refreshing or worthwhile, does the hon. Minister endorse it and does the hon. Minister feel that these girls deserve this particular government action?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that I do endorse that because I think there might have been a time when this was considered very dishonourable. Naturally, I am not one that would wish to promote the idea of laxity, however, I am quite sure that help is being given. There is not only the fact there is a mother to look after but also a child, and it is certainly no fault of his. I can assure the hon. member through you, Mr. Chairman, that I endorse his thinking in this matter and I think that a better day will come, and I am very sure it is close at hand. We have progressed already in that field and, as I say, it is a matter dealt with by many groups, the church groups and other groups, and I think that the thinking today is exactly along the lines my friend has mentioned and we will go along with that completely.

Mr. MacDonald: There has recently come into my possession the plans of the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada. This is an organization in which I have been increasingly interested and impressed with the work they are attempting to do. They apparently have taken as a basis of their operations the nine economic regions in which the province has been divided by The Department of Economics and Development and are taking three regions each year for the next three years to do a study in co-ordination with all the agencies interested in Indian affairs. Now the question I wanted to ask the hon. Minister is twofold: One, is it the intention of the department to participate in these regional studies which will go on over the next three years? Secondly, I do not see the Indian-Eskimo association listed among the organizations that are in receipt of grants.

Does the government intend to make a grant, or has a grant been requested from the Indian-Eskimo association for this work that they have mapped out?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I wish to advise the hon. member for York South that the director was in just recently. We have offered to him our full co-operation in this research. Now I am advised that the study that you speak about is under The Department of Education.

Mr. MacDonald: Falls within The Department of Education?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Dovercourt.

Mr. Thompson: My hon. friend is going to speak on Indians and I have conceded to him.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, continuing the subject of Indians, I understand the province of Quebec has taken over the Indians and Eskimos within their jurisdiction, and I know the hon. Minister will be having a meeting in Ottawa some time soon. Will this government take over the responsibility of the Indians as has happened in the province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I think that if my friend will watch that very closely, he will learn that the province of Quebec is actually in negotiation to do that and, when we go to Ottawa, we will propose doing the same. As a matter of fact, I made a tentative arrangement, or a date, if you wish to call it that, with the Minister at the time, hon. Mr. Favreau, when we had the conference in Ottawa, and I am assured that his successor will deal with this problem with us. If I remember rightly the meeting was set for the month of May.

Mr. Troy: I knew too that it was just in the stage of negotiations and I hope that this government will also negotiate.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister tell the House whether he favours the assumption of the responsibility of the Indians by the province? Does the hon. Minister favour the province taking over the responsibility for the administration of these people?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is a very difficult question, Mr. Chairman, to answer fully, in the sense that there are so many things involved—property rights and things like that. My personal impression of this with the contacts I have had and with the committee of Indians we have working with us—we appoint them every year and will be doing this again pretty soon—it has been favourable to what they have advised me. It is a question, I think, of education and I mean not only education by going to school, but trying to promote the idea. What the Indian hates the most, I think, is the word “integration.” He does not want to be integrated. He wants to feel that that has been done a long time ago and that he is just an ordinary citizen, and also at the same time, I believe from the contacts I have had with the committee and the people in that field, likes the idea of being the special subject or the ward of the Queen. This is one of those things which is to the advantage of the Indians as we know them, as for instance those in your area who are getting the same services as other municipalities. I hope we have been successful in that and I think we have but I am speaking of those from the areas mentioned a moment ago, like Red Lake, for instance, where we have a project which I believe I mentioned in my remarks, which has been in conjunction with the municipality, and it seems to have had some measure of success. I can assure you that it is a frustrating deal in the sense that it is long term and we have to look at it from that standpoint. It just cannot be done overnight. I think the federal government feels the same way about this. They realize that there is a big problem. Now, should the blame be on a particular department, either of this government or of the federal government in this respect? This is also very difficult to define, but I think we are making progress, but progress slowly.

At the same time, if I may use, sir, the good old Latin expression that I am sure you have heard “festina lente” and I think we are succeeding gradually. As I stated in my speech there have been 1,000 children that have been up for adoption and have been adopted. As a matter of fact, I can only express this, sir, to you, and I do not like to do these things, but however, just to show the position we are now in and what success we have had so far. I have here a letter which is dated on the 17th of March from the reeve of Red Lake which states that,

The council of the municipality, all rate-payers and especially all acting committees wish to thank the continued efforts in assisting us with our problem of rehabilitating our local Indian residents.

So really, the word is rehabilitate more than integrate, I think.

It is a consolation and indeed assuring to know that this work is continuing to be accomplished. The housing situation, if we could conquer that, I think we would do a great deal. Actually some of the Indians have been taken into the labour force now and I suppose the example and the experience that you will acquire will lead us to some success in this matter.

Mr. Troy: I think, Mr. Chairman, that the word is not gradually but slowly that you have been working in this. We have in our area of Parry Sound, a reserve—the Dokis Indian reserve. It is a fairly wealthy reserve. I would wish, Mr. Minister, that you would prevail upon The Department of Highways and The Department of Lands and Forests to do something about the road communications going into that reserve. It goes through the riding of Nipissing. We are getting very fine communications in the telephone field; but still the road into the reserve remains a mud-and-bush road.

The Indians, themselves, have spent somewhere in the vicinity of $100,000 to build that road. Each year, from the band funds, they contribute a certain amount. They get very little assistance from The Department of Highways or The Department of Lands and Forests. They give timber licences to bush operators in the area and they pay nothing for the upkeep of the road. So would you, now that you are showing concern for the Indians, then see if something can be done so that communications by road will be comparable to communications by telephone?

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, may I come back? I am reading the last Hansard, of March 18. I notice there, where I suggested there should be some kind of co-ordinative programme, such as the one President Johnson enunciated, to have a war on poverty. He was suggesting that they were going to encourage a number of organizations to help Americans who, generation after generation, seem to become welfare cases. You have done a study on this, sir, on a certain hard core group. In the discussion on your estimates on March 18, I was asking you whether you had thought of a co-ordinative approach to this, a sort of a “new frontier” challenge to idealistic young school teachers and others, in getting different departments to look at it, in going to an area where you have a hard-core problem. It would seem to me that you could look to the children, so that there will not be another generation coming forward to be welfare cases.

I say this, because I notice in the United States that they are obviously attracting a group of idealistic young Americans to tackle this very serious problem. I am wondering, sir, whether you have looked at this at all. I had given an example of—going away out to B.C.—the Doukhobors. Here is a problem group, in a sense, for reasons other than that of poverty, for religious reasons, and yet the community in B.C. concentrated on the children in trying to raise their rights by giving them educational opportunities.

I think they did this, really, with a disregard of one of the sacred cornerstones in our civilization—that is the sanctity of the family.

But I am wondering, sir: Is there any new fresh approach on this? Is there any new approach by which we could inspire a group of idealistic young social workers and teachers and others to have a corps formed, which is going to work with unfortunate Canadians to help them—not just give them financial aid to continue eking out an existence, but to give them an inspiration and an opportunity so that the younger generation, particularly, will move out of this and take its full place in our community?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I could not disagree with what my hon. friend has said. The approach that could be made, from The Department of Public Welfare, for instance, I suppose, is a co-ordinated effort with groups which already exist, like the United Appeal people in Toronto, or the different groups who specialize in that kind of study, like the welfare council and that sort of thing. But, as you say, I quite appreciate that it is a matter of co-ordinating the teacher in the school as well as those groups I mentioned a moment ago. I think that social groups of all kinds—religious and so on—should be interested in this matter.

Unfortunately, and I am not saying this discouragingly against anyone, most of the time, when these cases reach where we stand, they are in particularly dire need. This is why we have undertaken that specialized study with the units now based in the city of Toronto.

I think, in that study, we have looked at each individual case—where a person was followed throughout the four or five or six months he was on relief. Some of them were educated along the lines, you indicate, to go back into the economy of the city or the village where they had worked. Sometimes it might be easy enough to get a chap a job, but it might be more difficult to keep him on that job, for some reason or other. That is why, at the same time, we also have to look at this other picture. You have got to be generous, but not too generous so as to permit him to stay on welfare; because why should he work if he has so much?

This has been the study we have been doing. I cannot tell you what the result will be as yet, because it is too new; but we certainly have some great ideas along that line. We can pass them on to the welfare departments of the different municipalities, and the cities themselves, and work in co-operation with them. The plan we spoke about when we had these estimates before us—of the larger units, county units—would be, I think, a field where we can have more co-operation in this respect, and we would be in touch with more people. These studies we have, I think, are very revealing.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, I appreciate very much what the hon. Minister is saying. Just to re-emphasize this, if I could, I am thinking of a group in my own constituency who had asked me to go to a meeting they were having. I went to the meeting. The group are new to this country. They told me that one of their problems is that they are living in rundown houses, but that there is a single landlord who, apparently, is renting out these houses. He thinks a change is going to take place in this area and he does not want to improve the houses to any great extent.

The first thing is that, from the point of their housing environment, they live in a depressing, dilapidated condition. I think that, surely, we should talk to the housing authorities. So we go to the housing authorities to demand that the standard be raised with respect to this. Then the next thing is to encourage this group, with their children, to impress on them the need for staying with education. This is the key by which they can advance themselves.

Then you go to the school and talk to the school teachers, trying to describe some of the cultural backgrounds. And then, in one case, because of lack of overall social legislation, one fellow had workmen's compensation which was inadequate—so he was going to get on welfare and so on. It seemed to me, as I looked at this, that there was no co-ordinated approach. There was bad housing. There was the need for encouraging the enforcement of education. There was the need to encourage job retraining. And I could not help feeling that, instead of just doing this in a kind of piecemeal approach with one government department looking at its own narrow preserves, if when we are encouraging people to move upwards, we had a very broad attack, we could be much more effective.

I see what the hon. Minister is suggesting with the county units; he is hoping that the county units would be in close liaison with the health units, and with other areas. But I would just like to suggest that the only way we are going to tackle some of this is by having constant co-ordination between various levels of government.

Mr. Troy: One question, Mr. Chairman, before we finish this: Is the committee on Indian matters, to which the hon. Minister refers, the same committee to which the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests referred? Or is this a special one?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, it is not. This committee was formed a few years ago, much before the other committee the hon. member speaks about.

Mr. Troy: Are there Indians as members of that committee too?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: They are all Indian members, and the chairman of that group is a very able person.

Vote 1801 agreed to.

On vote 1802:

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, on vote 1802, under the child welfare branch. One year ago I asked the hon. Minister if he would consider the use of a social worker in schools in an attempt to improve the welfare of the individuals attending. His answer was not satisfactory to me. I thought that possibly he should have had some type of research into the benefit of the social workers in the school. I can see it having a marked effect on drop-outs, it can have a marked effect on the opportunities that the individual would have. And I think this hon. Minister should be prepared at this time to give us some answer as to what his thoughts are concerning the use of a social worker in the schools from the welfare angle.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, the only answer I could give, I guess, to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville is, as he will appreciate, we are not against that, we encourage it. But it is entirely a matter for school boards and for The Department of Education in the particular area, to deal with that. And usually what we try to do when a request is made along that line is to guide them or advise them as to the ability or the capacity of a person of that description. To this extent we are willing and pleased to get into it, but it is really a matter of concern to the local people.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, of the hon. Minister then, at what age is an individual cut off assistance from the department—one attending school? Is it 18?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, might I ask the hon. member if he is talking of mother's allowance cases?

Mr. Newman: Yes, mother's allowances.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, mother's allowances, as the hon. member probably knows, have been amended. This was announced some time ago. Last year, I guess, the amendment was made in this Legislature that a child was qualified as long as he attended school and the principal of the school stated that he was a proper subject to be at school. The age limit for a beneficiary was dropped as long as he was in a secondary school and was living at home.

Mr. Newman: I thank the hon. Minister, I understood it was 18, and I had some concern over it being detrimental to the education of the youngster, but this is good.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I would like at this time to say a few words about children's aid societies. I have been for many, many years associated with the Children's Aid Society of Ottawa and I know of the problems of the children's aid societies.

There are 55 societies operating through the province of Ontario, some of which have been operating for over 50 years. This is an amazing record when one considers the obstacles they have had to overcome, because of totally inadequate financing. For many years, their main function was to find foster homes for children committed to their care as wards. This was what was expected of social agencies and the society was assured by law of funds for this work.

In recent years, the concept has changed. Today the emphasis is on keeping a child in his own home with its parents to protect him from becoming neglected. This concept is acknowledged and accepted in law for The Child Welfare Act requires that a children's aid society must have among its objects the protection of children from neglect, but it—I refer to the Act—ignores completely the necessity for providing the funds with which to employ staff to do this work.

The child who is damaged by removing him from his parents can be maintained by the society and funds for his maintenance come from the taxpayers. To finance a programme designed to make separation unnecessary—and this is surely best for the child—the society must rely on free will offerings from private sources. The government does subscribe some to this great work but the amount is so minute and insignificant, that it is hardly worthy of recognition.

A society with ten workers and a budget of roughly $150,000 may qualify for about $7,000. It is not only in the interest of economy but more important still in the interest of our most important asset, the children of our province, to plead for an immediate revision of the present system of determining the grants so that every society would be assured of obtaining from the provincial Treasury an amount sufficient to provide workers capable of giving the services the community needs.

Community needs are not being met now, nor will this be possible until our legislators adopt a more realistic attitude to the whole field of welfare. It could well be economically suicidal to continue as we have and until some action is taken to properly and adequately finance the services needed, we can expect the problems to increase and the cost to continue to increase.

There seems to be evidence, Mr. Chairman, on the part of the present government of a desire to eliminate or replace these societies which have been providing noteworthy services to every corner of this great province. A perusal of the legislative debates of Ontario readily establishes this. Press reports indicate that employees of this public welfare department have been responsible in more than one area of Ontario for creating unrest and disunity and discontent among the people and—if we are to believe our newspaper reports—this is still going on. And if you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, to quote you from this article in the Toronto Globe and Mail of March 3, 1964, which is entitled, "Welfare Row in the Nickel Belt." I am not going to read this entire article but let me just take one paragraph, which says:

Rightly or wrongly some officials of the local children's aid society regard the plan for consolidation as the government's first step toward taking over the children's aid society itself.

Now I am sure the hon. Minister and his advisors have seen this article in the Globe and Mail.

Involved in this row, I think, are the International Nickel, the local welfare unit and, of course, the children's aid society. Mr. Chairman, this is truly indicative of the government's attitude toward welfare. Its one purpose seems to be to control and to reduce costs. If needs are to be met these services must be maintained, and if services are to be maintained costs cannot be reduced. We need to direct our efforts towards making it financially possible for children's aid societies to expand their services in order that these may be met, for to ignore needs, or to refrain from attempting to meet needs can only mean greater costs in the long run.

The wellbeing of the children of Ontario is threatened because of present government attitudes. The only advocate a child has is our children aid society; any attempt to weaken this body or to force it out of existence will result in children suffering. We have what could be the best social legislation in the world. It is rendered useless and ineffective because the society required to effect the legislation is hamstrung because of lack of finances. As a result this fine legislation is little more than mere window dressing. We cannot adequately meet human needs by simply passing a law. We must give effect to our legislation as it relates to child and family services by making the necessary funds available to children's aid societies to do the job.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, a breakdown and its effect on children is one of the worst blights on our Ontario society today. Worse still, little is being done to cope with the problem beyond what our children's aid societies are able to do on the little money they can beg from the public or squeeze out from the United Appeal funds. The need of our time is a truly independent, long-range examination of welfare in all its aspects with a view to determining needs and deciding how these needs can be best met.

Mr. Chairman, after this general statement may I ask the hon. Minister, through you, for an explanation of an item of $20,000 for a demonstration project for preventive services to the city of Ottawa? I have just made a plea for local children's aid societies to obtain from the provincial Treasury an amount sufficient to provide workers capable of giving the services the community needs. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that this sum of $20,000, plus another substantial amount, should be granted to the city of Ottawa and county of Carleton Children's Aid Society, which is better equipped to render the preventive services than a newly organized group in the city's social service department.

Not only, Mr. Chairman, do I suggest an increase in grants for preventive services to Ottawa, I feel that all societies in this province should get additional grants.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Racine: I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, and the hon. members of this House, that over the years each dollar spent for preventive services has saved many dollars to this province and to the municipalities for the cost of caring for children.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to hear the hon. Minister say that the Minister's committee will present its report within the next few months. At long last!

If I remember correctly, this committee has been appointed for over three years. I would like to say, however, that most people interested in child welfare in this province feel that this was not the type of committee that should have been appointed because of the danger of political interference. This leads me to think that this was the cause of the delay of the committee in completing its work.

May I also make a few comments on the adoption programme of this department over the past five years. I note with great interest the increase in adoptions during that period and I would like to congratulate the hon. Minister and his staff for this wonderful job done.

Now the hon. Minister mentioned the fact that a very complete programme of advertising in the newspapers of this province had brought on a very large increase in adoption. I would like, Mr. Chairman, to pay a tribute to voluntary organizations who have rendered a great service to this province in the last two years in respect of adoptions. I would like to praise the efforts of the Catholic Women's League, and La Fédération Des Femmes Canadiennes-Francaises, which have done such a tremendous job in reducing the number of Catholic children in the care of children's aid societies. I read in one of the Toronto newspapers that the Catholic Children's Aid Society of Toronto has not at this time any surplus of adoptable children. This is, Mr. Chairman, a tremendous improvement, because some years ago there were a number of children to be adopted by that society.

I can assure you also, Mr. Chairman, that the conditions in the Ottawa and Carleton county society have been considerably improved and are getting to a stage comparable to that of the Toronto society.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, we owe a debt of gratitude to these two organizations and I would suggest to the hon. Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, that these organizations be requested to carry on this work as a continuing project for the years to come. May I also suggest to the hon. Minister that an amount should be put in the estimates to cover the cost of pamphlets in both English and French in order to stimulate this programme of adoption.

In closing may I call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that there is a need for a much larger number of qualified social workers in this province, and I only repeat what has been said by many of my confreres in this House. It seems to me that it is the responsibility of The Department of Public Welfare to see that facilities are created so as to permit the training of a much larger number of people to do the job in the welfare field.

However, I feel the grants mentioned in the estimates for the Toronto and St. Patrick schools of social work are very inadequate and I would suggest the entire programme of grants be reviewed in order to give these schools a larger amount that would permit them to do a more thorough job of preparing social workers so badly needed in this province.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to reassure the hon. member, as well as every hon. member of this House, as well as every children's aid society in Ontario. I said that two years ago, I repeated it last year and I repeat it now. It was never the intention of the department, and surely not my intention, to ever do away with the children's aid societies. They have done too much, a great job in this province, for us ever to do that. I can assure the hon. member that at least as long as I am Minister the children's aid societies will not be disbanded.

However, there might have been some who thought so, due to the fact we were going into the larger units that it would affect them. I thought it would really help them, and that they could help too in that particular sphere. So I can assure the hon. member that no such thing was or is contemplated.

Now the hon. member spoke about the protection services. I think this is the thing that is here now and it is really the thing for the future. As a matter of fact, I trust the report that will be submitted to me from the committee will have this as the feature of it, because I believe this is the best way of dealing with the problem we have in respect of children.

I did not get exactly what my friend meant by the committee being a political committee; it seems to me as I look at the names of those on this committee, that I cannot very well agree. I think we have a lot of experts, as for instance—if you will permit me, Mr. Chairman, I would like to give their names. The chairman is Mr. Charles Foster, the former commissioner of the civil service commission; Rev. Swithun Bowers, OMI, director of school of social welfare, St. Patrick's College; Mr. W. J. Griffiths, board of education, Port Arthur; Mr. Eric Hardy, consultant to municipalities; the hon. Charles McTague, former supreme court justice; Prof. John Morgan, school of social work; Mr. R. A. O'Brien, editor of the Whig-Standard of Kingston; Mr. J. C. Saddington, vice-president, Ontario Association of Children's Aid Societies and Mr. R. J. Smith, commissioner of welfare housing, Metropolitan Toronto; Miss Bessie Touzel, executive director, Ontario Welfare Council; Mr. R. J. Whittington, director of Chatham Children's Aid Society; Mr. C. A. Whitman, former welfare administrator of Belleville, and Miss Doris E. Young, director of Welland Children's Aid Society.

I thought, Mr. Chairman, that this was certainly a well versed group and I can assure the hon. members that never at any time have I told them what I wanted. I am quite sure that they know their objectives were to study child welfare legislation, to study actual practices in the whole field of child welfare with specific attention to the children's aid society and to recommend to the Minister any legislative or practical changes on any matter relating to child welfare. It can be imagined that their field is completely open and I am quite sure that the knowledge of these people has been added to by all the people who have been before them. They have received many, many briefs from organizations, public and private, and I am sure all these organizations are at least concerned about the responsibility of child welfare. I am sure their treasury of information is great and that we can look forward to their recommendations. As I said, they were appointed in 1961, and that will be three years next May.

I would like to make a statement in respect to what my hon. friend has mentioned, Mr. Chairman, in respect of the city of Ottawa. I feel sure, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Ottawa East will be pleased that we are making available to the social services of the department of the city of Ottawa, the sum of $30,000. As a matter of fact, he has expressed that pleasure. This grant will be for the purposes of a pilot project in which specialized services may be rendered on behalf of children for the prevention of child neglect. You will know that in a city as large as Ottawa, many cases come to the attention of the municipal social services department and in the nature of their work the staff has knowledge of these families and they benefit more or less from constant preventive services. Miss Amy Leigh—I hope I pronounce the name right—one of Canada's finest ladies in this field, when reporting on her study of the Ottawa social services department made the following remark and I quote:

In many cases known to our workers it is apparent that the children are not receiving the parental care, nurture and guidance from their parents to which they are entitled, either as human beings or in law. Our workers should know and work more closely with their families, spotting as early as possible the kinds of factors that could lead to neglect and delinquency and endeavour to prevent the family situation from deteriorating. This kind of service is not only time-consuming but requires knowledge and well developed skill.

This whole matter, Mr. Chairman, was discussed within our department along with Her Worship Mayor Charlotte Whitton, Miss Amy Leigh and the new welfare administrator for the city of Ottawa, Mr. Godfrey. It was agreed that the programme as presented by Miss Leigh would be a desirable venture for a one-year trial period. The amount of the grant that we are making available is to be met by the city of Ottawa, in acquiring specialized staff to deal with the necessary services for children and families who come to the attention of the social service department. I am certain that the Children's Aid Society of Ottawa will work with this group and that a favourable relationship will develop in this process of augmenting those services for children which are now carried out by the society itself.

I should just say in passing that the Children's Aid Society of Ottawa with almost 100 members of staff is responsible for the expenditure of upwards of $1.5 million yearly with 92 per cent of that coming from public taxing sources. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I am advised that as to the expenses of the children's aid society, between 90 to 100 per cent of them came from public taxing sources. A per diem rate of $2.91 is required to provide for a ward of the society. There are between 1,100 and 1,200 children in care, most of whom are placed in foster boarding homes. I am anticipating that the report from our advisory committee on child welfare will deal with the prevention services in particular. In the meantime this pilot venture in the city of Ottawa should be productive of good results in harmony with the work of the children's aid society. Also, the acquisition of special staff by the city of Ottawa for work in this area should go a long way toward relieving the need, as raised by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) the other day, for counselling services to families.

I should just repeat that in my view the whole community is responsible to a degree in giving what services are needed whether to a children's aid society, governmental unit, the churches or other private organizations, all of whom have knowledge of the families and the problems relating to children and their proper care.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that my good hon. friend from Ottawa East appreciates that this is a pilot project and we hope that the results of it will be favourable and we can go from there. But I can assure the hon. member again that as long as I am standing here the children's aid societies of Ontario will remain children's aid societies.

Mr. Racine: I appreciate very much the answer that the hon. Minister has given to me. Now I still disagree about the opportunity of having this pilot project in Ottawa because I think that this is duplication of work by two bodies. I mean the children's aid society at the present time in Ottawa and in other areas is doing a very good job of prevention with the little amount of money that is being given by the department, by the municipalities, and I would say as a matter of fact that the largest amount that is being spent in Ottawa by the children's aid society comes from the community chest of Ottawa.

Now I am referring, Mr. Chairman, to the amount of money spent for preventive services. And I have here the figures of the amount of money that is being given by The Department of Public Welfare for 1963 for preventive services and it is $34,211. Now the city of Ottawa provides the sum of $12,000, county of Carleton, $2,100, and the city of Eastview, $1,000, which makes a total of a little less than $50,000. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, I have not got the total figures, but I would say that the preventive budget of the Children's Aid Society of Ottawa for 1963 amounted to somewhere in the vicinity of $165,000, which means that the public of Ottawa, the contributors to the community chest, have contributed well over 70 per cent of the cost of preventive services.

And I would like to add, Mr. Chairman, that I appreciate the fact that the total budget of the Children's Aid Society of Ottawa is close to $1.5 million. Now, of course, we must appreciate the fact that the amount payable for the wards is statutory, we have no choice about it, we are just agents, the judge will make a child a ward of the society and the children's aid society will have to assume the responsibility for that child, will spend the money for its care and eventually will send the account to the municipality and the municipality in turn will get reimbursed for a certain proportion of it. But the point I would like to make is that we are not—and this is not only my feeling, Mr. Chairman, this is the feeling of anyone I have met over the years who was interested in children's aid society work—spending a sufficient amount for preventive services.

Going back to the pilot project in Ottawa, I appreciate the motivation behind this grant but I still feel that it is a duplication and that the children's aid societies, in Ottawa and other areas, might have done a better preventive job if they had been given that money.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I might say, Mr. Chairman, that at this moment I can assure the hon. member that this is the information I have—and I think it is right—that from private sources, in the overall picture, preventive or otherwise, it is eight per cent. The rest of the society's funds—92 per cent—comes from public sources.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, as my friend, the hon. member for Ottawa East has said, the advertising programme carried out for the children's aid societies this year was quite successful. I understand, though, that the hon. Minister ran out of money and had to abandon the programme.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Whoever gave the hon. member that information misinformed him.

Mr. Troy: Well, it is very unfortunate, because she is a very fine social worker. I believe it was a Miss Charleston; is there a Miss Charleston in the hon. Minister's department?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that there are two more advertisements going in in the next few weeks. There will be two this week, sir, and the programme is continuing. I can assure the hon. member that we will not be stopped because of lack of funds; I do not think that is quite correct.

Mr. Troy: The hon. Minister will admit though that there was a hiatus anyway?

Mr. Thompson: I wonder: would the hon. Minister be good enough to clarify for us the grant to the retarded children, The Retarded Children's Act? Could he tell us just what he does with that grant; what is the purpose of it?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That subsidy is in the operation and maintenance and cost of the homes for retarded children; as you know, this is a new Act which was passed, I think, during the last session of Parliament. Is that what the hon. member wanted to know? This is not for capital monies, it is maintenance.

Mr. Thompson: Maintenance?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes. There is one home, as you know, in the city of Toronto. The only thing I can say about others is that I am advised that others are developing; but what is in actual existence right now is one in the city of Toronto.

Mr. Thompson: Yes. Could I ask: Is the situation this? That a home is built for retarded children by the municipality, then it applies to the department for maintenance grants? Would the hon. Minister mind explaining it to me?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, this is a home built by private organizations. It might be an association of parents and teachers, or a social service club, or a group of people who are organized, or form themselves, into a legal group, so to speak. It is handled on the same basis as other charitable institutions.

Mr. Thompson: And why are these groups building homes for retarded children? Why are voluntary groups building homes for retarded children? Is it because we do not have government-sponsored homes for them, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I think I can remember when this was passed, explaining to the best of my ability, which was not very good I suppose at the time in committee, that these homes were a sort of residential centre. As you know, in the province of Ontario, in some places, there are classrooms for retarded children supported by the local board of The Department of Education. Then there are these groups of boys and girls who could be taught something, if it is only a way of tying their shoelaces. They can be taught something and should stay at home. Others cannot stay at home and cannot go anywhere; medically speaking; they have to be sent to an Ontario hospital.

There was the in-between group, those who could not stay home because of family conditions. They could not stay at home, because of other conditions, but at the same time they could be taught something. These homes would be more or less like a residence for those children who could not stay in their own home but could learn something—a sort of a school residence. That was sponsored by the parent groups in the different municipalities.

There is no restriction as to whether it can be operated by any municipality or by any group, as long as they can get together as such. It is really the local branch associations which operate day schools for retarded children. As well as the day school, this provides a residence also for these children.

I hope I have made myself clear on this.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, I appreciate it. The point I am making is: How many municipalities have such homes?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: So far I am advised, Mr. Chairman, and I stated it just a moment ago, the city of Toronto is the only place where there is one. We have had discussion with some other municipalities, but there is definitely no other in operation, except the one in the city of Toronto.

Mr. Thompson: I would suggest that there must be a real need for this type of home. I know, for myself, that in my own riding, the problem of getting retarded children into Orillia. It is only through the good services of the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) that, in two cases, it has been possible to get a situation alleviated for a family and have the unfortunate child placed in Orillia.

I understand this is, unfortunately, a widespread situation. These are not children who would go to Orillia; but there are children—I am sure there are many such cases—who cannot possibly stay in the home and yet are not ready to go to the institution.

I feel that this is a real social need. It would seem to me that if the only such operation which is getting help from you is the operation in Toronto, then there should be a very real question asked. Why are there not, in other municipalities, applications for such help from you? Could you tell us if you have had applications from other municipalities?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, the only thing I can say is that the legislation is there, and we try to encourage it; but, certainly, I cannot force it on the people there. I can say that, in my own area, my own home town, there is now a group discussing this very seriously. They might have a home in the next year or so. It is my sincere hope they do. The Act is there, and it is available to any of these groups which want to use it.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister, through you: Is the grant to an employee, or to the children's aid society for an employee, at the level of $100 a month at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: For prevention—

Mr. S. Lewis: For prevention.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: For protection, yes!

Mr. S. Lewis: Yes. And has it been that way since 1956 without change?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, Mr. Chairman!

Mr. S. Lewis: In view of the fact of the very cogent case placed before this Legislature by the hon. member for Ottawa East, and in view of the desperate needs in this area—not to mention the rising cost of living—does it not make sense for the government to revise such contributions to the children's aid society once in an eight-year period?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: As I stated a moment ago in my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I was hoping that this would be a feature of the report I hope to get, and my recommendation would be forthcoming.

Mr. S. Lewis: We will look forward to the recommendation in the next session.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Do we always have to get something in?

Mr. S. Lewis: May I ask the hon. Minister—regardless of the submission of the report, I am sure we are all inclined to feel that it is too late—can this Legislature expect a specific increase for children's aid society work?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, the only thing I can say to the hon. member for Scarborough West is that I hope I can do that as well as he expects, because I believe, along with him, that it deserves being looked at.

Mr. S. Lewis: May we know?—I would like to follow it through, Mr. Chairman, because I am fascinated by this point—might the hon. Minister inform the Legislature where the delay lies? I again refer you to the report of your department, page 13: there were 186 children studied and only one out of six, I believe, were placed in permanent foster homes. One out of every three could anticipate being placed in five or six homes.

The committee has been sitting for three years, and for three more years we have been allowing irreparable damage to the lives of young children. One of the problems is that the children's aid society does not have enough money to function. One therefore asks, Mr. Chairman, on the basis of the hon. Minister's own study already completed, on the basis of his own sentiments, on the basis of what is likely to be contained in the advising committee report, why can we not now have the increment? Where is the impasse?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The only answer I can give to this, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that this is an all-encompassing report.

Our committee has been sitting for two years, or two-and-a-half years. What is the matter with it, why has it not reported? I am quite sure that it is because it might have to take the time to hear these presentations. These people are not sitting every day in the week. They sit once a month and hear these representations and then they have to study and digest them and, I suppose, make their recommendations. I am hoping that it will be an all-encompassing thing.

The hon. member is asking me why I do not do this and why I do not do that. If I had intended to do these things on my own I would not have had that committee; but I want to have a good picture. As far as irreparable damage is concerned, I never believe anything is irreparable in this way.

Mr. S. Lewis: I had not intended to intervene again, but I shall now intervene because if the hon. Minister does not think that there is irreparable emotional damage to young children moved time and time again from foster home to foster home, then I suggest to you that something is profoundly wrong in your thinking.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I have been one of the first ones to deplore that.

But then as I have said again and again, I would only hope that all is not contingent on the department in this regard. After all, we have many good public bodies like the children's aid societies and that sort of thing. I am not blaming the children's aid societies any more than I would be blaming any other group in this matter, but this is also a very pertinent question. I do not believe there is completely irreparable damage, to use that expression, but there is one place where I agree with you, it could cause damage, that is true. I hope we will find something in that report which will not only guide the department, but will also guide the children's aid societies and other people dealing with children.

This is one aspect, I agree with you, that is very deplorable.

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, first I would like to clear my statement about the committee. I have not said, and I did not intend to say, that this was a political committee, but I said that I deplored the fact, and I am not the only one that does, of the type of committee. I think another type of committee might have performed much quicker and brought in a report much quicker than it did, because on that committee I had several very close personal friends and I do not want to let anybody think that I implied those people were appointed because of their political faith.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister just one question and perhaps this might be answered in the report of the committee. What is being done about the placing of hard-to-place children? And I think you know what I mean, Mr. Chairman, I mean children of mixed racial origin and other children, maybe crippled children. Now I know those children are very hard to place and perhaps the considerable amount of money that we have to spend for the upkeep of children in this province comes from those children, that particular class of children.

Now, if I could make a suggestion to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, that perhaps we should think in terms of giving a grant to a family that would adopt that kind of child. From my experience in the past, sir, those children have been placed in foster homes and the people have been very happy to accept those children. Now, what I mean is that it might be possible to reduce considerably in this province the number of children that are thus placed, if the adopting parents were given a grant from the department for a period of time, in order to reduce the number of those children.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, Mr. Chairman, my only answer to this is that all our advertising has been slanted to that very point, the hard-to-place children. The other idea that the hon. member has expressed is certainly an idea but at the same time it seems to me that if I should adopt a child, I want to assure the children's aid society, and I am sure the children's aid society would request, that the child has got a good home, that it should be maintained properly with all the amenities of life, whatever those might be.

Now, I am not suggesting that the idea is wrong, but I would not like to receive something to do what I consider is my bounden duty to do.

Mr. Racine: Well, I would like the hon. Minister to give it a thought, Mr. Chairman, and I think his advisers, his professional staff, might find a lot of value in this suggestion.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, under The Department of the Provincial Secretary, I brought up the question of birth certificates for children who were adopted, children who were born in England, and I did not get anywhere, but I understand that the director of the department of child welfare feels along with others, that just a simple amendment to the regulations would serve the purpose. You do not have to worry about getting in touch with the British authorities, all you have to know is as long as the Minister has a certificate to show that a child was born at such and such a place on such and such a day, whether it was England, Ireland, Scotland or Wales, it is just a simple matter to issue a certificate in the name of the adopting parents as is done in this province already for children born in Ontario. Would the hon. Minister discuss that with his director of the child welfare branch and also, then, with the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko)?

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have a point I wish to raise, perhaps you will not wish to call it for the present, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: It is now six of the clock. I will now leave the chair and we will resume at eight of the clock.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the hon. Prime Minister, will there be a Budget debate tonight?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Chairman. When we complete these estimates, I would like to take some of the bills that are in the committee stage tonight.

I want to get them through the committee stage, third reading stage and I would like to get Royal Assent to some of the bills that have been fully processed before we rise tomorrow. So this evening—

Mr. MacDonald: He is suggesting we will not get through these estimates tonight.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, I am flexible. I will be ready whenever you finish.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask the hon. Prime Minister, is it the intention to sit tomorrow morning?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No. My intention is to sit at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon and I would think the Lieutenant-Governor will be available at approximately 5 o'clock.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE

On vote 1802:

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, I will bow to the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy) who wanted to continue a point, if he can gradually incline himself toward his seat, which I believe he has now accomplished.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I brought up a problem to the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) with regard to adoptions of youngsters who are born in other lands, particularly in the British Isles.

Now, as you know, sir, The Department of Public Welfare has carried on for some time, a series of advertisements naming youngsters for adoption and it has been before the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko), but it went nowhere with him and I understand from someone who is very interested that the director of the department of child welfare feels that an amendment can be made to the regulations. All that is necessary is that the place is known, and to have a certificate certifying the birthplace of the child and its birth date, and then a birth certificate can be issued in the name of the adoptive parents.

I know that the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) is quite concerned about this problem and I think that if the hon. Minister can get together with the members of his department, particularly experts in child welfare, and with The Department of the Provincial Secretary, particularly the branch of vital statistics, that such an amendment can be made. I do not think it is too serious a problem, according to my best information.

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Chairman, I am advised that the law of Ontario does recognize the adoption here of a child coming from the British Isles. Unfortunately, the vice versa does not exist and we have made requests to have that passed but so far we have not been successful.

Mr. Troy: I do not think it is necessary, Mr. Chairman, even to take it up with the authorities in the British Isles; you have the certificate in front of you that says that the child was born at a certain place at a certain time. It shows the names of the real parents, certainly the mother, and then that certificate can be issued just as now, I understand, in Ontario, the child is allowed to have a birth certificate in the name of the adoptive parents.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I will certainly look into it again but I am told the problem is really the English law and not the law here.

Section 77 of The Child Welfare Act reads thus:

Every person heretofore adopted under the laws of Ontario and every person adopted under the laws of any other province or territory of Canada or under the laws of any other country shall for all purposes in Ontario be governed by this part.

Which we recognize.

Mr. Troy: I see that, sir. Perhaps with the amount the hon. Minister has been granted for travelling expenses, he might go across to the British Isles and clean this thing up.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I want to renew a subject that we were on a little earlier this afternoon, when we were discussing the irreparable emotional and psychological harm to children. In fact it was the hon. Minister himself who admitted it to be deplorable, in which case I suggest that his department or his ministry is subject to deplorable practices because wherever one turns in the child welfare area, one finds a pattern of neglect. Neglect, not consciously on the part of the people administering the department, neglect not consciously on the part of children's aid societies, but neglect with respect to the finances available to do the job.

I want to demonstrate yet another aspect of this. In the very field of emotional disturbance we were discussing, Mr. Chairman, institutional care for emotionally disturbed children is estimated to be running as high as $6,500 a year for treatment. I am quoting now from the needs and resources study for Metropolitan Toronto. Now the per diem cost that the department subsidizes under The Children's Institutions Act runs as high as $4 a day and as low as $2 a day, and at the very top amounts to no more than 15 per cent or 20 per cent of the cost to service emotionally disturbed children.

I reminded the hon. Minister last week that there were 44 such institutions looking after such children apart from the children's aid society. I simply ask the hon. Minister how does he justify the financial grants made in this area, let alone the area of children's aid societies, when coping with emotionally disturbed children.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am not disagreeing with my hon. friend in this respect except that I would like to point out that most of these cases are children's aid cases where they are paid 100 per cent. For the others—I suppose I did not mention that—the $4 that you mention is correct but that is also being adjusted to a higher amount. Exactly when it will be set up I cannot tell you at the present moment, but it is being adjusted and looked at right now. As far as most of the cases are concerned, they are under children's aid supervision.

Mr. S. Lewis: I want to pursue two points, Mr. Chairman. Suppose it was adjusted beyond the wildest expectations of this Legislature and it was doubled to $8. We would then be providing something like $2,920 a year for care for emotionally disturbed children which is estimated to cost $6,500 a year. So the government will still not be contributing even one-half the cost—and that is at the upper limits of the scale. At the lower limit of the scale you still would not be providing one-quarter of the cost and yet the hon. Minister described the harm done emotionally and psychologically to children as “deplorable.”

I suggest that there is some kind of inconsistency there, in the thinking of the hon. Minister. I want to go further. The hon. Minister constantly says that the children's aid societies receive 100 per cent. Since the three divisions under The Children's Institutions Act—I think they are divided into A, B and C categories; there is one, I believe, under a D category—come within the purview of The Department of Public Welfare, could you tell me, sir, how many children are in those 44 institutions? You probably have that figure.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I do not know whether I mentioned the 44, but if I did, I made a mistake, it is not 44 but 21.

An hon. member: The hon. Minister told me there were eight institutions for emotionally disturbed children.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I have the number of institutions; there are 12, eight and one. The one is for highly emotionally disturbed children. There are 21 altogether.

Mr. S. Lewis: Perhaps the hon. Minister could explain to me—I am reading from the Ontario Gazette, November 2, 1963, Children's Institutions Act, Regulations. There are four schedules involved. Under schedule one there are 23 homes. Under schedule two there are 12; under schedule three there are five; under schedule four there is one. My mathematics frequently are not excellent but I count that as 44.

The degree of emotional disturbance varies, I fully recognize that but I do not think that is the point at issue. All these homes look after young people with some kind of social disturbance or another; I wonder how many young people are looked after by these 44 institutions presently registered under the regulations of an Act within the hon. Minister's department.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Schedule one here deals with the organizations as such and then the institutions operated in two, three and four schedules.

Mr. S. Lewis: I will balance it and eliminate schedule one. Could the hon. Minister tell me how many children fall within schedules two, three and four? As you know, forms are filled out in triplicate, answering some 25 questions every month for renewed grants so the department certainly knows which children are looked after. Has the hon. Minister a figure?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that I have not got that figure but I can get it for the hon. member if he wishes to have it. But I do not have it here with me now.

Mr. S. Lewis: I will say to the hon. Minister that, frankly, I am amazed. It makes debate rather difficult because my suspicion, Mr. Chairman, is that when there are as many problems of emotional disturbance as industrial society produces, an accelerating number—whether it is under my estimate of 44 or under the hon. Minister's estimate of 21—working under an Act administered by the department, then obviously we are dealing with a large group of young people who desperately need trained psychiatric and social care, and who are receiving a per diem allowance from this government which simply is not sufficient. I would certainly appreciate knowing precisely how many young people are being thus discriminated against.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, Mr. Chairman, I will try to get these figures as soon as I can. If I can get them tonight I will, but I do not have them with me right now.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, if I could follow up on this again. I have listened with much interest, and I congratulate my hon. colleague in that he got some form of information from the hon. Minister. What seemed to be rather amusing was that he got different information from that given to me by the hon. Minister, when I asked the same question on the estimates on March 18, 1964.

I asked the hon. Minister how many institutions catered to the emotionally disturbed child. At that time the hon. Minister told me there were eight. I then asked what kind of staff there was; and after a great deal of difficulty the hon. Minister told me he could not get information on that. I am afraid, sir, that I have no alternative but to say, when a Minister comes with his estimates, when he fumbles around and tells us he does not know the number of institutions to which children—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): You said that last night.

Mr. Thompson: I said the same thing last night, and I will say it again and again about this government. It seems to me there is a complete indifference to the civil rights of the people, in connection with their welfare. If the hon. Minister of Mines wants to sit there cynically, and laugh and joke at this kind of situation, I say the hon. Minister is welcome to continue doing it; because, with another election coming, this kind of arrogance is going to be considered by the people of Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I am coming again to this: When a Minister comes into this House—I appeal to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr.

Robarts)—and we ask him about the institutions for which he has an Act which is meant to govern their standards, when we ask him for the number of institutions, we get two different replies from the estimates. We ask him for the number of qualified staff and he is unable to answer. Then when we ask for the number of children, again he cannot answer. I suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that his hon. Minister is inadequate.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Why did not the hon. member vote for the non-confidence this afternoon?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order!

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am informed there are between 800 and 900 children there. About 90 per cent of them are under child welfare, under the children's aid society.

Mr. S. Lewis: What is the figure?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Between 800 and 900. It varies between 800 and 900. At the moment I would suggest it would be about 835 to 840.

Mr. S. Lewis: Out of the 21 institutions?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. S. Lewis: Twenty-one institutions. Then we have now got a figure of 840 children, each needing, on the average, $6,500 worth of highly specialized care per year and being provided, by this department at the uppermost limit, with $1,420 and at the lowest limit, $710. I say to the hon. Minister: I am not interested in pronouncing on his adequacy or inadequacy—I think our group made that clear in its motion this afternoon. But I say to the hon. Minister that this is an intolerable situation which cannot be allowed to continue. It is not enough to give us assurances that reports will be coming down. It is necessary, even if by order-in-council, to do something about it, and to do it now.

Vote 1802 agreed to.

On vote 1803:

Mr. Thompson: I recall, when we had asked questions about the day nurseries branch in the estimates last year, that when we looked at the sum which was being given by the government to the running of this branch—and I notice that this year it is $290,000—we asked what kind of standards are demanded by the government when they give this grant to the day nurseries branch. I again ask the hon. Minister, because we did not get an answer last year: what kind of standards, with respect to staff, is required before grants are given to the day nurseries branch?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would point out—if the hon. member will allow me to tell him first of all—that I do not know if he asked this in his question, but I remember it was asked last year. In Toronto there are nine units, plus the co-operative nursery at Regent Park. It seems to me I recall, last year, that I said the standards were set out in the regulations. I do not know if my hon. friend would wish me to read these regulations here.

Mr. Thompson: Let me specify more. I am asking with respect to staff. What kind of qualifications must the staff have in connection with day nurseries?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: All right. A supervisor of a day nursery shall be a person who (a)—and this is written in the regulations—is sympathetic to the welfare of children; (b) has a specialized knowledge of and adequate experience in preschool methods of child guidance; and (c) is suitable in point of age, health and personality to occupy the position.

Additional supervisory staff, with specialized knowledge and adequate experience in methods of child guidance, shall be appointed. The number of staff in each day nursery shall be set out as it is set out herein in the columns, in the schedules shown as 2, 3, and 4—for the times set out in those columns, for the number of children respectively, and their ages as set out in column 1. Would the hon. member care to have the schedule also?

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate that very much, sir. Could the hon. Minister tell me if any of the day nurseries, to which you give grants, falls below the standard of staff set out in the Act?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: You will understand, Mr. Chairman, that we do not give assistance to all these nurseries. We license them and supervise them. I am referring especially to those where we share half the cost with the municipalities; those are the public ones as we know them.

Mr. Thompson: My question is: In connection with your staff, are any of them not up to the staff requirements that you require?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am assured, Mr. Chairman, that the person who deals with that, and inspects those day nurseries, says they are well staffed; and that the people in there are proper, fit and experienced people to be in those particular places.

Mr. Thompson: As far as you are concerned then, sir, all of them have staffs which are competent and up to the standards according to the Act?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: As far as I am informed, yes.

Mr. Thompson: I asked you, sir, in connection with day nurseries: Is it your policy to promote day nurseries or not, in industrial centres?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Oh, yes, very much so.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask you how you promote day nurseries? The policy? Could you tell us how you promote that policy?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: There are many ways you can go into that, either from the departmental point of view or in relation to the staff who work in the different welfare offices in the city and in the different areas—the cities, the towns, the villages—whoever may take advantage of that opportunity.

At the same time, we also meet regularly with the supervisors we have in the field—in the 17 regional areas we cover—plus the field workers that do that work. This, I am sure, is recommended and dealt with, through the different private groups in the city and in the town. As far as newspaper advertising is concerned, I do not think we have any in that respect.

Mr. Thompson: Then could I ask, sir, how many—in view of this aggressive approach you are taking to promote day nurseries—could you tell us how many you gave grants to last year and how many this year?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: As far as I can see from what I have here on this year and last year, I do not think there were any additions.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): After all that aggressive programme I thought you would have made progress.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, I might tell my hon. friend that we are one of the very few areas in North America where you have this programme and I think it is working pretty well.

Mr. Singer: No, but the hon. Minister was telling us what an aggressive programme he has, how progressive he is and his department is. We would have thought, quite innocently, Mr. Chairman, without trying to embarrass the hon. Minister at all, that there would have been a substantial increase.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): The hon. member is starting to get tired!

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister will have his turn, Mr. Chairman. I do not think it will come until after Easter, but we are waiting for him. We will get him later. Tonight, we have got the hon. Minister of Public Welfare.

I would like to know what progress you are making?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I might advise the hon. member for Downsview, and I appreciate his question, this is strictly a programme which is initiated by the municipalities, which we help by paying 50 per cent of their costs. I am not establishing the projects, but the municipalities are.

Mr. Singer: I thought you said you were giving policy leadership?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. Singer: Well, you are not giving leadership if you are not making progress.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough West has the floor.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I just make a final point on this, sir?

I appreciate the conflict you had in your opening remarks on the estimates. You say you had a question with respect to day nurseries, that these day nurseries may cause mothers to give up their responsibility in the home. You said in your opening remarks, sir, that you thought establishing day nurseries might mean that mothers might leave their homes, put their children into the day nursery and neglect their homes. Obviously, sir, from your remarks tonight, you have resolved that problem in your own mind. You have decided on an aggressive policy to promote more day nurseries.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I am a firm believer, I think I stated that in my opening remarks, I still believe that the home is the best place for any child.

I do not know what my hon. friend means by promoting this. We are. I do not know how better I can promote it than by telling the municipalities that we pay 50 per cent of their costs and all they have to do is to establish these day nurseries where they are needed.

I wish to correct one figure, however, Mr. Chairman, that I gave a moment ago. I do not know what the number was, but the total number of day nurseries that we have now is 30.

Mr. S. Lewis: Thirty day nurseries under provincial subsidy?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Those are the public nurseries, yes.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Minister, I suspect a quiet little basic attitude crept out when the hon. Minister said that he thought the best place was in the home. I do not think that anyone here would deny that that may be valid. But unfortunately, there are other factors involved.

In his departmental reports, I am sorry to bring the hon. Minister back to that so often, but in the report from his deputy Minister, the deputy Minister points out that 30 per cent of the work force are now women—692,000 in the work force in Ontario. He also points out, and I quote him now:

These day nurseries provide an essential service; and even greater facilities, particularly in the public field, seem to be desirable.

Now there is the recommendation from the department, but we find that in a full year between 1963 and 1964 not a single day nursery has apparently been possible, although it seemed to be possible by the department. Then on page 100 of the needs and resources study of Metropolitan Toronto you have, after a careful analysis of the needs of mothers to deposit children during the day when they are at work, this paragraph:

The lack of day care services for children of working mothers and incapacitated mothers, particularly in areas outside of the city, was emphasized as a most serious problem by public departments, child placement, and family counselling agencies.

Now I say to the hon. Minister that his programme may not yet be comparable to the trade crusade, but it does not even begin to be comparable to the most modest methods and efforts that are necessary to bring day care nurseries into existence.

In Metropolitan Toronto, out of 33 nurseries in operation, either public or private, only eight of them have any provincial subsidy whatsoever, because unfortunately the promotion of which the hon. Minister speaks is apparently non-existent. Moreover, the balance between the city and the suburbs is completely out of kilter. There is a vastly greater number of children in the suburban areas with very few day care nurseries under provincial subsidy. There are smaller numbers in the city of Toronto, and yet there are a larger number of day care centres under provincial subsidy.

Not only is there an overall lack but there is a totally disproportionate weight of service offered from area to area. I suggest to the hon. Minister that his contention that they are doing something about the promotion of day nurseries is completely without foundation.

I want to go one step further, Mr. Chairman. Again, it is without foundation on the basis of his own department. It is inconceivable to me how we stand here day after day on the welfare estimates and hear words from the hon. Minister completely contradicting the words of his own specialists and his own consultative agencies.

Earlier this afternoon we mentioned Miss Elsie Stapleford who is head of day nurseries in the province. In a Toronto Globe and Mail article on January 31 of this year, Miss Elsie Stapleford is quoted as saying that the United States has had successful results in attracting and maintaining married nurses by a day nursery programme and she spoke to a Mrs. Bowskill, who was later quoted in the same article, a private day nursery operator who also wished to promote this programme.

So far, they have gotten nowhere, nowhere at all. The department has not been of any use to them whatsoever and apparently the hospitals have not agreed with them. It strikes me as something of an anomaly, with the critical nursing shortage in the province, that the hon. Minister cannot see this as a way of solving the problem.

We had a lengthy debate under the estimates of The Department of Health on the nursing shortage. Here, in conjunction with his hon. colleague, is one of the hon. Minister's answers: "Day nurseries in hospitals would provide ways and means of attracting married nurses back into the profession. It has been accurately estimated by Miss Stapleford, no less an authority, that it would take $12,000 a year, including staff and space, for 25 children."

Where is the promotion, I ask the hon. Minister, that the department has been making? Where are the plans the hon. Minister has?

And what about day nurseries in industry, which is an integral part of the United States day nursery programme? Where is the promotion? What plans does the department have?

How can the hon. Minister come forward time and again and discuss programmes, suggest they are adequate and run directly counter to his own departmental assessments? I say it is a continuing anomaly that is totally unacceptable to this side of the House.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, under the day nursery branch. About six months ago I had a request from the priest of St. Angela's Italian Roman Catholic church in my own community for information as to the setting up of a day nursery. Now the Italian community is fairly large and as a result the good priest thought it would be in the best interest of the community to set up some type of facility where the working mother would have some place to put the children for the day. I was in contact with the deputy Minister and he most kindly did accommodate me with the information.

However, I still understand that there are no grants made available at all to a church organization running a day nursery. Now, they may have proper staff, they may have proper facilities, but because they are a so-called private group, am I right in assuming that there are no grants available to them?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No grants. Just to the public nurseries.

Mr. Newman: Well, would this not be a good place where grants could be made available? Here a facility in a much needed type of service is being rendered not only to the working mother but to the community at large, and I think that the department should give serious consideration. It is a religious organization, it is not a money-making organization. Were it a private one interested solely in what it could make out of the operation of a day nursery, I could understand the retention of grants, but here you have a church organization that is doing probably the best type of work you could possibly imagine in the day nursery field and I think the government should seriously consider some type of assistance to them. This type of work among the church groups should be encouraged.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister, what is the attitude of the department in this regard: In adoption procedures, what is the primary factor that should be followed?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, there are many. I suppose one is through the courts, one is through agreements with the children's aid society and, as the hon. member knows, a probation period exists which works both ways, for the child and for the parent. I guess the final order is made after the investigation of the parents. Age is also a factor and there are many factors which are involved in this for the protection of the child. The adopting parent is given that certain limit of time to make up its mind if he will adopt a child and I suppose to consider the health, either the mental or physical health of the child. I do not know what else the hon. member would like me to tell him, but adoption is finally concluded by a court order.

Mr. Troy: Well, apparently the hon. Minister has skirted around the point entirely.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The member is speaking on vote 1802.

Mr. Troy: I am speaking on child welfare.

Mr. Chairman: We are on vote 1803.

Mr. Troy: Oh, pardon me, I am sorry. I have been in another nursery then.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): I have a question, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) and the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) have told us about the housing development proposed for the Thistletown area.

Could the hon. Minister tell us whether or not any day nursery is proposed for the housing development in Thistletown if and when the development is completed? I am thinking more of the need for a day nursery for working mothers among the people who will be living there.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am not aware, Mr. Chairman, that we have any proposal from Thistletown at the present time. I would suggest—and I agree with the hon. member that it would be a very good idea—that the hon. member contact us in regard to this matter. There is one nursery I think, at Regent's Park.

Mr. Braithwaite: I will pursue it a step further then. I did not hear the last part of the hon. Minister's answer.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Pardon?

Mr. Braithwaite: I did not hear the last portion of the hon. Minister's answer. The location that he has in mind.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I said if we receive a request from there I am sure we will go along with it. If there is a request, we certainly will go along with it.

Mr. Braithwaite: I thank the hon. Minister very much. I will make certain a request is made.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I assume that the hon. Minister's advisory committee is going to be making some reports on the day nurseries aspect of child welfare, too. Am I correct?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: This is a good question. I only hope that they do because they have the whole gamut to do so.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, with the hon. Minister I hope that they do, too, but in that connection then, may I raise this question going back to this committee and its all-important approach to the various aspects of children's needs? There is no vote at all in this year's estimates for the work of this committee. What is the explanation for that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The only explanation I can give to the hon. member for York South is that there is only one meeting left and we felt there was no necessity to have anything in the estimates for this particular vote. The only thing to be done now is the writing of the report. The committee will not be sitting any more.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the committee's work through or is the money through?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, no, the money is not through, the work is through.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the hon. Minister says the money is not through. At the end of the year there is at least one more meeting, they have a very important job of producing the committee's report and there is not another vote. Can the hon. Minister comment or give any explanation for that kind of situation?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The only thing, Mr. Chairman, that I can answer is that there was no request for any other monies to be spent. The report is now being put into book form and into recommendation form and that is all there is to do. There is nothing to do any further, there are no discussions to be had any more. Just the fact of writing the report.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a comment on what the hon. Minister has said now that I have gotten this far. He said there is one more meeting. I am not in a position to argue whether there is one more meeting or not, but there is certainly the writing of the report, which would seem to me, after the meeting, is going to be one of the most important aspects of the committee's work and yet we have no more money in this vote.

After three years one is almost forced to come to the conclusion that this department is frustrating rather than assisting the work of this committee. Indeed, I will go one step further, from sources that I have every reason to believe are reliable, it has been put in just these terms: That the money is cut off though the work is not finished. Now, what does the hon. Minister say to that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: My information, Mr. Chairman, from the chairman of the committee—it has never been shown to me that there was any frustration anywhere, and this matter of the last meeting here was just to finish what had been commenced and handed over to the department for purposes of revision. Certainly the chairman would have advised me if it had been a fact that there was anything—

Mr. MacDonald: Pardon, who is the chairman?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The chairman is Mr. Foster, C. J. Foster.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I just reiterate I have every reason to believe that my information is correct, that the money is cut off so the job is not finished. Indeed, the report is not yet written. Now, if this is co-operation on the part of the Ministry in getting a report that he himself has led us to believe he is almost desperately waiting for so that he can frame his policy, it strikes me as being a very strange kind of co-operation.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am very interested in this research and the statement of the hon. Minister that the work of the committee is over. I would be most interested if he could give us tonight some of the statistics which the committee has advised him about day nurseries. He told the hon. member for Etobicoke that if there was a request from Thistletown he would be very happy to co-operate in establishing a day nursery in Thistletown. He also said, as I understood it, that there was one in Regent's Park.

What are the criteria? Do you have an analysis of economic levels, of income levels? Do you have an analysis of family size, or income earning ability, or the fact that the husband and wife are employed? What sort of statistics has your committee advised you about, insofar as day nurseries are concerned?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, the only thing that I can say, in answer to the hon. member for Downsview, is to read to him section 2 of The Day Nurseries Act:

The council of a city, town, village, or township may by a by-law provide for the establishment of day nurseries for the care and feeding of young children. A by-law passed under section 1 may provide for the establishment of day nurseries directly by the municipality or by an organization named in the by-law and approved by the Minister; but in either event in order to qualify for a grant under this Act the council of the municipality must be responsible for the efficient and satisfactory operation thereof, and for furnishing such reports and other information as required.

Mr. Singer: I thank the hon. Minister for refreshing my memory as to the provisions of the Act, but I think most hon. members are familiar with the provisions. But I had understood the hon. Minister to say that substantial research had gone on, and I would like to have him relate that research to the Act, and tell us what the result of that research has been.

An hon. member: I would like to know what research has got to do with it.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Research was made, Mr. Chairman, by the municipality. They are the ones who pass the by-laws. If they feel that there is a need to do something a proposal is submitted to us. They show us the need, and that is all we have to know.

Mr. Singer: But the hon. Minister was telling us that he has devoted substantial dollars to research, and that he is advised as to the district into which he should go. I wanted him to relate the results of that research to these centres.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is what we do.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I give up.

Mr. S. Lewis: I, like the hon. member for Dovercourt, am becoming more and more puzzled by the proliferation of study and research which seems to have no definition.

In the deputy Minister's report it says, under day nurseries expansion—and I appeal for an explanation:

A study will be commencing shortly which will give greater understanding in creating additional facilities, particularly in areas where women represent a high percentage of the work force.

A study will be commencing shortly!

I take it, since this is brought in under day nursery expansion, that this is not the study of the Minister's advisory committee on child welfare. It must be a separate study; and, if so, has the study begun? The report was for 1961-62. If the study has begun, when will the report be given? If it has begun, who are the personnel engaged in the study? And which study?

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Proliferation—that is a good word, too.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I stated a moment ago to the hon. member for York South that I did not know that was in the report. I hope they have a look at it, too. As I say again I do not know why the hon. member insists upon pinpointing a department of research, as such, in The Department of Public Welfare. This research is carried on daily, if I may use that expression, by the head of each branch of the department and, indeed, by all members in this respect.

Any findings which are made are related immediately to those concerned; and I am sure they are acted upon. That is one of the reasons why there are amendments made to the Act at times, and one of the results of the study is the introduction, as you may recall, of the amendments to the Act which provided for day nursery care to be extended to school children, especially in the area where there are working mothers.

Mr. S. Lewis: I am sorry to pursue it, Mr. Chairman. I take it then that this is a separate ongoing study within the day nurseries branch of the department. Am I right in thinking that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: You are right in thinking that.

Mr. S. Lewis: All right. If that is so, is it a study in the vernacular only, in the sense that there will never be a report, or is it study, which is what study implies; a study in which some substantive material will be produced?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: There is no study, in regard to what you say, from which a report will be brought forward; but, as I stated a moment ago, there is a continual study. If it is found that there are reasons for amelioration, that is done, but as for a study which will bring forth a report upon a certain specific area, there is no such thing.

Mr. S. Lewis: There is no such study. If that is so, Mr. Chairman, nonetheless the study within the day nurseries branch indicated that children up to the age of nine should now be covered—so I gathered from the amending legislation he introduced this session.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes.

Mr. S. Lewis: Has not the continuing study in the department suggested the day nursery facilities should be extended?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am sorry, but up to the present moment this has been done for children up to the age of nine; which we believe, at the present moment, at least with the results that we have, is the age to which it should be extended. That was the recommendation to the study made for us by those who are in the field, and who understand it. Do you mean we should go further, to the age of 10, 11 or 12, or what?

Mr. S. Lewis: I am now referring to facilities themselves—day nursery facilities—greater provincial subsidization, greater provincial promotion, and a greater establishment of these day nurseries. I appreciate the amending legislation, and I commend the hon. Minister on it. It was desperately needed. But I think an even greater need is the need for more day nurseries. I am curious about the ongoing study features of any of these departments, frankly, Mr. Chairman.

For instance, under salaries, in the day nursery branch, there is an item of $29,000. Can I ask the hon. Minister how many people that embraces?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Six people.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, then we have six people to administer a major government branch throughout the entire province; am I correct in that? I think one draws three obvious conclusions, Mr. Chairman: First, it is impossible to do adequate promotion with six people in this kind of a project; second, it is impossible to have adequate ongoing research with six people at the centre; and third, Mr.

Chairman, it is impossible for the government to persuade us that the day nurseries branch is taken very seriously when this, in fact, is the condition.

Vote 1803 agreed to.

On vote 1804:

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would be interested in knowing—could I ask this question just at the start, sir? Does the hon. Minister believe that his staff should have the highest possible qualifications, and be given every opportunity of training?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I do.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister does. Thank you. Could I ask then, under the field service branch, what facilities are offered the staff in order that they can get such training?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, there is naturally what we call in-service training for staff. But I would like to read what I have here. Field workers have to be carefully chosen; we find some who prove quite unsuitable, or who will not remain. They have to have good health, alertness and a deep sense of responsibility. Applicants for the position are first required to write an aptitude test which serves as an effective preliminary screening. Following this, the candidate writes a three-hour examination, which over the years has proved its worth in selection of the right person. When these necessary barriers are passed, the candidates take a six-week training course, sir, at departmental expense. This course includes further examination and reports. The new field worker is then assigned to a regional office on a probationary basis, and supervised for a time by a senior member of the staff, and at the end of this training period we know the person well, and the person knows the job.

I might add that there are no hard-and-fast age limits. Persons over 25 have, of course, acquired the more mature attitude desirable but we feel it is usually not advisable for those over the age of 45 to start in this work.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Now what about the question of the hon. member for Dovercourt?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The civil service commission decided that senior matriculation is the minimum degree of education for prospective field workers. If advertising in the area to be served fails to locate a suitable person with senior matriculation then the junior matricula-tion is acceptable. Those are the educational standards they have to start with. I hope that answers the question the hon. member put.

Mr. Thompson: I thank the hon. Minister very much for his answer. I now ask again my question—what facilities are given to the existing staff? Perhaps that was not my first question. I appreciate the answer the hon. Minister has given to me. I would put it this way: In the past year how many of the hon. Minister's existing staff has had the opportunity of a leave of absence in order to go to a school of social work?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that in the past year there were two who made application for that.

Mr. Bryden: How many applications were granted?

Mr. Thompson: I think that is a good question. How many applications were granted?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that is all we had. Now if my hon. friend will wait a second I will get a different answer. This year I understand we have four in rehabilitation and one in field services.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask the hon. Minister what proportion of his staff are graduates of the school of social work?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: How many of the staff are graduates of the social school of work?

Mr. Thompson: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I should have said that in French.

Mr. Thompson: No, sir, I appreciate that. I understand.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Would my hon. friend accept the figure for the whole department?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, sir.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Then with the bachelor degree—we have 28; that is, one in the main office, two in child welfare, 11 in field services, one in general welfare assistance, one in home for the aged, three in finance administration, four in rehabilitation, five in welfare allowances. Of those with bachelors plus social work degrees—there are 17. Of other postgraduate degrees—there are 10 persons, and with social work diplomas—five.

Mr. Thompson: The total then, sir, that have degrees is 17. Am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Bachelors plus social work degrees make 17. Other postgraduate degrees, 10; and social work diplomas, 5; bachelor degree only, 28.

Mr. Thompson: That would mean, sir, about 60 professional staff?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: About 60 professional staff.

Mr. Thompson: Sixty: And what is your total staff, sir, for your complete department?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Total staff on the department?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, sir.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: There are 613 presently and I have 12 vacancies.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, it seems to me again—I just raised the point because of the numbers that have been given to us by the hon. Minister—he has over 600 of a staff, and 60 whom he is calling professional, and in the way of encouragement he has only two. I think I am correct in that; I want to be fair. There are two who are attending a school of social work. I would say, sir, that those figures speak for themselves, that really the hon. Minister is not giving encouragement to get a high professional staff.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that we expect 30 more from the two schools this year.

Mr. Thompson: Does the hon. Minister expect that 30 will come into his department?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I would think that would be a great infusion of qualified people coming into the department but I would say this: as well as the people coming in, it would seem to me that the hon. Minister also has a job to do with people who have had practical experience, to give them the opportunity of an academic background.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister as to the qualifications? Is facility in languages also a necessary qualification?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I beg the hon. member's pardon?

Mr. Troy: Facility in languages—is this a necessary qualification for a field worker?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I can say this from personal knowledge, that it is one of the deep worries we have in this respect, if the hon. member has the bilingual aspect in mind, French-speaking and English-speaking. All I can say in this respect is that we do the best we can to obtain bilingual persons but there are not too many.

Mr. Troy: Well, then, when possibly the hon. Minister might not have one with his senior matric but with qualification of language—if he has junior matric, would he be accepted?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am sorry, I did not hear the hon. member.

Mr. Troy: On another wavelength? No, I say, sir, you say the qualification is senior matriculation or grade 13. Now if an applicant does not have grade 13 but does have grade 12 and the very fine qualification of speaking the language of many of the people in the area in which he is going to serve, would he be accepted in lieu of the grade 13 qualification? For example, we have a young man who is a French-Canadian speaking French fluently; in many sections of northern Ontario in relief work it is most important that he should have fluency in that language. He has not senior matriculation but is a graduate of grade 12; would the academic qualification be overlooked and such a person be hired?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Personally, Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate a person of that description because he would be very useful, but naturally he has to be certified first of all by the civil service.

Mr. Troy: In metropolitan areas like the city of Toronto and its environs, do you also seek personnel who are fluent in many languages? This is a polyglot area; are these people sought out, too? Italians and Germans and Hungarians and Swedish and Finnish? Are these people sought out, too?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, Mr. Chairman. As a matter of fact, we have quite a few on the staff and we always welcome them because they are very useful people.

Mr. Troy: Could the hon. Minister accept qualifications from the European—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: As I stated a moment ago these qualifications are not, naturally, decided upon by myself.

Mr. Troy: No.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The civil service certifies these people and they are recommended to us as being able to do whatever job they can.

Mr. Troy: But is no direction given by the department of the hon. Minister to the civil service commission in that regard because the department needs people who can speak other languages?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Oh, yes. We ask for them.

Mr. Troy: In the field service branch in 1963, a Mr. M. L. Donlevy is listed in the travelling expenses. In what region is Mr. Donlevy? Is he still employed?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Donlevy was in Parry Sound but he is now with the children's aid society.

Mr. Troy: Did he resign?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, he transferred to the children's aid society.

Mr. Troy: He resigned. I know he changed, but I wonder what was the cause for the change. I understand he was a very active and a very well qualified worker. I wondered why he is out of the hon. Minister's department.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that it was a matter of his own choice to go to the children's aid society.

Mr. Troy: Not under pressure, but under other circumstances?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I do not know what my hon. friend means by "other circumstances." I repeat, it was his own choice.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to return to the matter which was discussed a moment ago—the qualifications of the present staff. I am quite prepared to recognize that experience is a great trainer but I think, in this day and age, we must also realize that professional qualifications are important. It would appear that the number of people in the department with full professional training is negligible. It is about 20. I would suggest that a person with a bachelor of arts degree is not a fully, professionally trained person, but rather a person with the prerequisite for professional training.

In a department with 600 employees, to have approximately 20 professionally trained in the work to which the department relates seems to be a very small number indeed. I am sure that there are a great many people in the department who have the capacity to benefit from further professional training. It would appear, from the figures the hon. Minister gave us, that there cannot be very much encouragement to them to improve their qualifications.

One or two each year apply for and get leave of absence to pursue training. I would like to know if the hon. Minister has in his department—and if not, if he is prepared to consider—a policy whereby staff in the department would be given leave of absence with full pay, or close to full pay, in order to pursue further training. After all, when people are working in a government department they are usually people with considerable responsibilities. They cannot just throw up their jobs, go without pay, and try to live for a year or two while they improve their qualifications. I know of other departments in the country where a great deal is done to encourage people to go out and improve their qualifications. They are paid while they do it by the department, on the valid assumption that their value to the department will greatly increase on their return.

I wonder if the hon. Minister would be prepared to make any comments with regard to that matter.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I agree with my hon. friend's thinking. We are satisfied that that should be done. As you know, I have to deal in this respect with the civil service, and I understand that they are taking that into consideration. I am sure I do not disagree with the hon. member's thinking in that at all because, as you know, not only in Ontario but right across the American continent, there is a great shortage of social workers. I agree with the hon. member that the steps which should be taken in that respect have to be vigorous, also encouraging, to whoever takes a social work course.

But it seems that not enough of us are prepared yet to take that course as much as we should. Are we deficient in providing enough incentive in the way of money to do this? That is one matter that I am sure—

Mr. Bryden: This is a matter within the hon. Minister's own control, within his own department. I am suggesting that, in the hon. Minister's own department, he has not done so—and I judge he has not. He should adopt a policy of providing people with leave of absence, with pay, for specified periods of time to pursue specified courses of study—and, I would say, on a substantial scale. The hon. Minister should be prepared to put perhaps $200,000 into his budget for that purpose each year.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Chairman, is this vote 1804, field services branch? Would this be the proper place to welcome to the House, tonight, members of the young Conservatives of St. George riding?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I think that should be under general welfare assistance.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: Having extended a welcome to people who certainly never worked in the field, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. Minister—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, may I just pursue my answer to the hon. member for Woodbine? I understand there are arrangements whereby persons are paid almost at the full rate of salary while attending courses of study—and that is $350 a month at the present time. That is also under review by the civil service commission.

Mr. Bryden: I am sorry. It is difficult to hear the hon. Minister. Did he say this policy is now in effect, or it is being considered?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, it is coming into effect—it is in effect, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Bryden: It is something that is quite recent then?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, $350 a month.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, has he or the deputy Minister any percentage figure in mind, to reflect what would be considered an adequate number of professionally trained people in the department? By professionally trained, one means a degree of social work—20 per cent, 30 per cent, 50 per cent—which percentage should we be striving for? If memory serves me right—I cannot give the source of this—Ribicoff, when he was Secretary of Education, Health and Welfare in the United States, suggested that one should be aiming at 60 per cent fully trained professional people, in order to have welfare operating at even minimum efficiency.

Is there any agreed-upon figure in the minds of the people in the field?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, all I can say to this is that the percentage you speak of—we cannot even get it from the schools. But we take every available person we can get from these two social work schools—one in Ottawa and one in Toronto. But to give you a percentage; no, I cannot give you that.

Mr. S. Lewis: Why I ask the question is because a little quick mathematics shows that, in The Department of Public Welfare at present, only three per cent of the people are adequately trained. Three per cent in a government department of this kind in the middle of the 20th century! I am sure it disturbs the hon. Minister, as much as it disturbs anyone else in this House. I wonder if, in view of that, are there any intermediate training programmes, or intermediate training inducements, from the department for field workers and field staff?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: As I stated a moment ago, outside of that naturally there is always in-service training; and I understand, also, that Ryerson Institute is coming into this picture now. I have hopes. As you have stated, you will agree with me that it is disturbing to you; it is disturbing to all of us. It is disturbing right across the land, because social workers are so short in numbers.

In the past several months, I might add, there has been an important development. The Department of Education was most helpful, and put us in touch with the Ryerson Institute of Technology. We have consulted with the principal of Ryerson and he was entirely receptive, I might say, to the idea; and willing to undertake this type of training. We are therefore planning to establish a two-year course where persons will learn public welfare administration in theory and in practice. The graduates, I am sure, will be well prepared to fill these important positions in welfare services, where a trained person is needed though the special skills of a graduate social worker are not really required. We have high hopes the vocational training course at Ryerson Institute, will transform the picture of staff personnel in the years ahead. This is very important, I think that this school has come into the picture because I presume we will get a lot of help from there.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister what is the salary scale offered for field officers in the department?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I notice here that I have a figure that the salary varies from $3,600 to $4,400.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I suggest Mr. Chairman, that one of the difficulties is—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is a "field worker, number one."

Mr. Bryden: Yes, well what would be the duties of a field worker, number one?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Field workers, number two, $5,000.

Mr. Bryden: What would be the duties of those two categories of field workers?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, while the House is waiting for the answer to that question, I have here a clipping from the Toronto Globe and Mail, March 19. It is a story from the British Columbia bureau of the Globe and Mail. I hope the hon. Minister would read it, if he has not at this point. I think the story adds a little bit of witness to the enunciations presented in regard to the attitude of the department by my hon. colleague from Scarborough West last Thursday. But another point that stands out in the story, involves the group of social workers who were suspended from their job with The Department of Public Welfare because they publicly criticized and offered opinions of the inadequacies and the attitude of the department. Several were reinstated after they agreed they would no longer make their criticisms publicly but would confine it to government channels. Now I do not suggest that this department or the hon. Minister would place these restraints upon any of the field workers or the social workers but I am led to believe through my experience through service to my constituents that they are under the illusion that they are under certain restraints. Now these are the people that really know what is going on and what is really needed in regard to public welfare. I feel they can give the first-hand story at any time through practical experience in field work. I would just ask the hon. Minister if he would tell us what his attitude is, what would his disposition be of the opinions of field workers in regard to the attitude of the department or the adequacies of the department in regard to public welfare?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: First of all Mr. Chairman, I must tell the hon. member for Woodbine that right now I cannot provide him with a complete answer, except that the difference between two and one is between those who come into the department with some experience, and those who do not. The main difference is in the area of people who have specialized already in this field, who deal with such things as placement services, guidance services, counselling and so forth. Those who begin, after having passed the first tests, I imagine would be in the first category. However, this is all I can apparently give him here tonight. It is not very satisfactory, I appreciate that, but at the same time if he will be patient with me, I would like to give a complete picture of what is meant by one and two.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think what the hon. Minister has said is sufficient for general purposes, at any rate. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he considers that a high-school education is sufficient basic training for the sort of duties he has just described for a social worker, or a field worker two: counselling and placements and such things as that. I am not now talking about people who are now engaged in the work in the department. They have undoubtedly supplemented their basic education by practical training, but I am thinking of people coming into the department who perhaps would come into the number one category and ultimately work up to the two category. Does he think that is sufficient basic training? Is he satisfied with the educational requirements that the civil service commission has laid down?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, Mr. Chairman, all I can say to this is based on my personal experience in dealing with these people. Basically the present education requirements, I would think at least for the first group would be satisfactory to start in this particular field, if they have any kind of experience in business management and ways of reporting matters and also in dealing with people. As a matter of fact, I am quite satisfied that my hon. friend from Woodbine has met some workers throughout his experience who maybe had less qualifications in education, but certainly have high qualifications in dealing with people, and that should also be considered.

At the same time, I do not suppose we would be frank if we should say that we are satisfied with qualifications which are not always the best that are available and that is about how I can put it. We try to do the best and the civil service has decided upon these specifications, at least for the time being. I must say we have received satisfactory service, maybe not to the extent we would like to have but the best that can be expected. But with the material we have I think it is going pretty well.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am going to suggest to the hon. Minister that the civil service commission has got him and his department in a vicious circle. Obviously you could not require any higher basic qualifications with the salaries you are offering. Taking the two categories, the total ranges from $3,600 per year to $5,000 per year. You could not recruit, I am certain, people with an ultimate expectancy of $5,000 per year, people who had any training that could in any way be considered to be of a professional or sub-professional type. You are in the position where you cannot demand higher qualifications because of the money you are offering. On the other hand, I have no doubt the civil service commission takes the position that they will not offer any more money because the qualifications do not merit it.

I think it is time that the hon. Minister and the department started to have a bit of a battle with the civil service commission with a view to moving up salaries in this area quite drastically. As a matter of fact, I am shocked to hear that the Grade 2 field worker has a top salary of $5,000 per year. This is one of the difficulties in this whole field. The hon. Minister says that there is a tremendous shortage of social workers. We know there is a tremendous shortage of trained professional social workers, and why? Because the pay that is offered in this field in most cases is disgraceful.

To get basic qualifications as a social worker takes six years' university as a rule. Four years for your B.A. and two years for your professional training. That is simply to get the basic requirements to call yourself a social worker. In other fields, people with approximately six years of university education can look forward to salaries as they reach maturity and the peak of their profession, anywhere from, I suppose $10,000 or $15,000 a year and up. And depending on what fields they are in, what professions they choose, it may go a long way up. Yet in this field, in an important area of service in the field, the province of Ontario is offering a top of $5,000 a year. We are never going to get a requisite number of trained professional people in this department if we take this sort of approach to the salary question. We just cannot compete against the remuneration in other professions as long as we take the attitude that a field worker is a sort of a highgrade clerk or in that sort of category as far as salaries are concerned.

So I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he should be taking this matter up quite vigorously with the civil service commission. I believe that in other departments, too, the civil service commission is taking an unrealistic attitude to the salaries required for professionally trained people, but I think in this department it is worse than perhaps any other department in the government. Yet it is vital that in this department we should get a substantial and rapid increase in the number of qualified people.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, one thing that I think must be clear in staff training is, training for what?

Mr. Chairman: Staff training comes under vote 1805.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, I am thinking of the field service where we have the field service branch. We are on 1804?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Thompson: Yes. I am thinking of the field service branch and I agree that really comes under 1805. But under the field service branch, it seems to me that these are the people who are going out into the field and this is where you would get the statistics on the kinds of problems that they are facing. And I would like to try to catch the hon. Minister's imagination on this. I say this because south of the border, the President of the United States, who is now deceased—President Kennedy—looked at this very large problem, the problem of welfare. He thought he was going to take a new look at it and he declared that there was going to be war on poverty. The first thing to be done was to find out, what is poverty? And they had, what the hon. Minister suggested, they had research on this, and they defined—and this will come as a shocking revelation, I think, to all of us—in a country as affluent as the United States, they found that they had over 9 million families who are earning less than $3,000 a year. And they decided that that would be what they would call poor families. And then they decided they would analyze why these families were poor.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Not enough money!

Mr. Thompson: Yes, they were without money, but they decided they would also go further and if I could on that point—the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions is a logical man, Mr. Chairman, and he raised a logical answer to this, but you have to dig a little deeper. Why are they without money? They found that there were several reasons for this. They found that one of the reasons was that they suffered from poor health. The other reason is that the breadwinner is injured. The same basis in a way, but they pointed out the breadwinner has been the person who is suffering from poor health. And then they found another reason is that they do not have proper education. And these are the three basic reasons why these people are poor. And what are they going to do about it?

They now know the cause of their being poor, so they decided they are going to concentrate no longer on just the fact of taking money from the more wealthy and giving it to the poor, because that just perpetuates the situation in many ways. And I would like to say as well in connection with welfare that I agree that most of the people in our province do not want to be on welfare, but also there is no question there are some people who are prepared to be on welfare, who will take advantage of any hand-out they can get. There are those kind of people. But what I would say is that in the department's field service, similar to the way they are doing in the United States, let the field service people convene, having explained first of all how many poor there are.

I suggest to the hon. Minister that he does not know in this province. I suggest to him he has not said what the standard of poor is. I suggest to him that he has not found out what the causes of poverty are. Because if you find the causes are similar to those in the United States, when the hon. Minister goes to Quebec in a few more weeks, he would be fighting for a medical insurance programme and he certainly would not be advocating the patchwork programme which he is, when you find that health and the lack of health is one of the reasons why the people are poor. And I would suggest also that as in the United States one of the reasons is lack of educational facilities, then you would be thinking far more of correlating the field service with schools. The hon. Minister would, as Walter Lipton has written about the new ideas to fight poverty, which are being carried on in the States, and saying that one of the ideas is that they are going to get better top-notch teachers in congested poor areas.

Now, coming back to the field staff, I raise two things. One is, I commend the hon. Minister that he has this attitude about research, and I would hope that he would start to correlate the facts that his field staff could give. The second thing: I would strongly urge that one of the hon. Minister's top people—and I can think of no better person who has shown his dedication through the years, than the deputy Minister, Mr. Band—should be sent down to the United States, should go to this group that are under the President's office. They have made a study, the annual report of the council of economic advisors, and they have set up this war on poverty. I think that Ontario always wants also to have new ideas and I suggest that Mr. Band should be sent down to see how they are doing the job and then come back, sir, and translate that into the programme of the department and have the field staff follow through on it.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Dovercourt has expressed some very valuable views and I think they are worthwhile looking into, and I can assure him that I will do exactly that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member for Wentworth East mind very much repeating what he said before so I may be straight on it?

Mr. Gisborn: It would be a pleasure. I referred to a story in the Globe and Mail of March 19. It was a story from the British Columbia bureau of the Globe and Mail. I said I hoped that the hon. Minister might have read it; and if he has not, I think he should read it. It gives a little more witness to the principles enunciated by my hon. colleague from Scarborough West in regard to the attitude of —

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Who is it written by?

Mr. Gisborn: Ruth Worth.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: — to the criticism of the department and its attitude by my hon. colleague from Scarborough West. What the story tells is that several of the social workers in the department of welfare in B.C. were fired or suspended for publicly criticizing the department, or stating opinions in regard to the attitude of the department and the inadequacies of the department in regard to public welfare. Several were reinstated, I understand, when they agreed that they would no longer publicly give their opinions or criticisms of the department but would confine them to departmental channels.

Now I do not mean to infer that this hon. Minister or his department would place these restraints upon the social workers; but in my experience I am led to feel that the social workers, or field workers, are under the illusion that there are certain restraints on them. I say that these people are the people who really know what is needed in the field of public welfare. They gain it from practical experience; they know where more money is needed, they know where more psychological approach is needed and their opinions should be well listened to. So I put the question before the hon. Minister: What would be his disposition to field workers or social workers publicly stating their opinions and their attitudes towards the department, in regard to public welfare?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, the only comment I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that I do not know that I have seen any public servants making criticism such as was expressed in British Columbia; but I see no objection at all. When any public servant is sincere in his statements, and if the criticism is constructive, I do not see why a man or woman should be chastized for expressing these ideas because I would think he or she would be sincere in doing so. If it is not for the sole purpose of criticizing, and it is constructive, I see no reason why it should not be welcomed. As a matter of fact we do discuss these things quite often within the department, especially with workers who are constantly in the field and under the supervision of the different districts. I think, at convention meetings, these things are brought out and rather welcomed. That would be my attitude.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, just a small point on this vote. The hon. Minister has explained to the House the requirements for those in the field who administer the various programmes of the department. Is the complement right up to the level that it should be at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I thought, Mr. Chairman, I mentioned a moment ago that there were 12 vacancies. We are short that many.

Mr. Nixon: I missed that, sir. The point I wanted to make was that it seems to me that when these people in the local areas go on vacation, and if for any reason are off the job, such as by sickness, their work simply piles up. Those of us who deal with them on a local level find that they sometimes get in the position where they cannot deal with pressing problems for a considerable length of time, although they are doing their best and, on the whole, doing a good job in that connection. I was wondering if the department had any plan whereby qualified people would act as floaters, and could move into a district when this situation develops?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: We do have it in certain areas, and it is a good idea to have what the hon. member calls a floater. Unfortunately, sometimes this causes some difficulty, but generally speaking it has worked pretty well. I agree sometimes that there are peaks which are difficult to overcome, but I understand also that in this House there are 108 very alert members. Any cases which may come to their attention, which would be delayed for one reason or another, either through the field worker or the person himself not having received any news, we try to deal with them directly. Sometimes, I think, the co-operation in this respect is made available to as large an extent as possible.

But I appreciate what the hon. member has said, and I am sure peaks sometimes occur; as for the floater he mentions, we have that. I can appreciate the fact that maybe we should have more of those but it is pretty difficult, because we just cannot afford anybody at all; they have to be very, very expert in doing it.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that there may be an extension of welfare work among our Indian bands are there any now whose racial origin is Indian, in the field service department? Also, are any preparations being made to recruit more?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that we do have, Mr. Chairman, some Indians in the department. I understand there is one now graduating who is going to Moosonee in the very near future; and one who is accompanying him, who has the title of anthropologist. We are gradually getting more and more—and we look for them because we think they are the proper people to deal with, this particular group.

Mr. Troy: What does the hon. Minister mean by looking for them?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I mean that we are trying to find some suitable persons who will study, and have educational qualifications and all that, to enter that field. That is what I mean by that.

Mr. Troy: Well, then, in the high schools which many of these young Indians attend, are the guidance personnel informed that the department is looking for such types, and suggesting to these young students that they seek a career in the hon. Minister's department?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, the only thing I can say to that is that naturally, from high school, strictly speaking, they are not as mature as may be expected; but we do promote the idea that they should be counselled when these young men or women are at a point where they can make up their minds what they intend to do later on in life. The civil service commission, I understand, has advertised and does advertise province-wide for Indian development officers.

Vote 1804 agreed to.

On vote 1805:

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister to specify the purpose of the vote of $40,000 for staff training? How is that money used? I believe the appropriation last year was exactly the same amount, so presumably there is a continuing programme and I should like to hear some description of it.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: First of all I would like to mention the bursaries to students of social work, which are matched by the government at Ottawa.

The total cost in that respect is $61,850, of which the federal share is $20,616; our share would be $41,234, which is about 60 per cent. That is for bursaries.

Mr. Bryden: What has a bursary got to do with staff training within the department?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: To students of social work.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am all for bursaries, Mr. Chairman, but I do not understand how bursaries would be involved in a programme described as "staff training". I would take it that would apply to the staff already employed by the department.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am sorry—it was given me—I am advised that this is for salaries, travelling expenses of trainees, plus costs of supervision—that is, the in-service departmental training of these people.

I do not know if you follow me. This is for salaries and travelling expenses of trainees who are trained within the department itself.

Mr. Bryden: Do you have, shall we say, a special category of trainee, a person who is regarded as a "learner" within the department?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: These, I understand, are strictly in the field staff, where they are under constant supervision of the supervisor or the director, locally, of any given area.

Mr. Bryden: How would they relate to the field worker 1, and the field worker 2 categories?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is what I would call the probationary field worker, that would be number 1.

Mr. Bryden: I trust that they do not get a lower wage than the starting rate for the field worker 1?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Oh, no. That would be the number 1 we explained to you a moment ago. You mentioned, a moment ago, number one and number two; that would be the number 1.

Mr. Bryden: The number 1, in effect, are trainees; they are people who are learning the job under pretty close supervision?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right; trained in the field.

Mr. Bryden: Then what does this item of $40,000 cover?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Supervisor, $6,600—I have here—for salaries and travelling, $33,400. The course is six weeks; there are seven on a course, and seven courses a year.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, yes, I see. I remember, a little earlier that you said you gave these people a course of training, and this is the money that covers this.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on vote 1805, the hon. Minister in his introductory comments last Thursday spoke at considerable length and with great emphasis on the importance of the larger units of administration, particularly at the county level. He noted, as was done in the annual report of the deputy Minister, the work which had been done in Peel and Wentworth—I believe the only two counties where this has been completed.

The thing that interests me, Mr. Chairman, in view of the importance which the hon. Minister quite rightly attached to a larger unit of administration to permit a modern professional approach, is what proportion of this estimate, dealing with administration, is directed toward assistance in the creation of these larger units of administration? How many dollars, for example?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that does not come under this vote.

Mr. MacDonald: Where does it come, so I may say if I am wrong, that I am sorry?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: As I think I mentioned in my opening remarks, there were no monies for such expenditure. We were providing them with staff which are paid like regular staff, under possible vote number 1, and we furnish them. I think it is senior member of the staff who goes there, establishes the area and instructs or supervises some field worker who is appointed by the county itself, or by the local area, for a period of at least six months. That is not a hard and fast rule. If it is needed for a longer time, to establish the unit completely and get it running well, then it can be provided further. But I have no specific monies under the vote, or any vote, for that particular purpose.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, that clarifies the picture I was seeking. The hon. Minister has stated there is no money available, that you provide staff and advice for such periods as is necessary to get it going.

I just want to draw to the hon. Minister's attention—here, for the umpteenth time tonight, we have evidence of the fact that this department is paying lip service to what the hon. Minister himself says is an extremely important development in welfare administration, and yet they are doing virtually nothing in terms of the amount of money that is being spent. For example, in the Statutes RSO 1960, you will find on page 1461, The Welfare Units Act—the statute under which one can establish this kind of a development; and you will find in section 5 that where a municipal unit is established there shall be paid to the municipality establishing it an amount:

—equal to 50 per cent of the cost of administration of welfare matters under this Act.

In other words, there is a statutory clearance for 50 per cent of administrative costs. If you look in the regulations you will find you have all the details with regard to the implementation of that statute.

The hon. Minister, in effect, says that he has nothing in his estimates as a vote to implement this statute. In other words, one can come to no other conclusion but that the statute is a dead letter. The hon. Minister does not seek to implement this statute in any vigorous way, so that this very enthusiastic discussion on both reports, and the hon. Minister's statement with regard to the role of larger units of administration in welfare, means nothing in terms of actual fact and actual action. The hon. Minister, by his own admission, says he has no designated vote in his estimates.

I do not know what comments the hon. Minister can make in light of that kind of a situation, if I have it accurately assessed.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, the only thing I can state, Mr. Chairman, is that I have no estimates on the vote in respect to participating in administration costs.

Mr. MacDonald: What does it mean where it says here, for example, in the statute that I quoted to you: Chapter 428, The Welfare Units Act? Is this not a reference to the establishment of larger units of administration?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The establishment, I am advised, of the consolidation of welfare services comes under The General Welfare Assistance Act. Is that what you have here?

Mr. MacDonald: This here.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, it is not the same thing. What is the title of the Act the hon. member has there?

Mr. MacDonald: The title of the Act? The title of the Act is The Welfare Units Act.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, that is inoperative, I am advised. The establishment of consolidation of welfare services comes under The General Welfare Assistance Act.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the hon. Minister now saying that the money necessary for the development of these larger units is down in the next vote? General welfare assistance?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The establishment of the consolidation is under The General Welfare Assistance Act. There are no monies supplied under that Act for the establishment of these county units. I am not stating to you, sir, that this matter is not to be considered; but at the present time there is none. We provide just services.

Mr. MacDonald: Is this the Act I have referred to—did I understand you to say this is inoperative?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, we might clean up the statutes if it is inoperative.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I agree with you it should have been done.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I was away out of my seat for a moment, but I think I follow it. If this Act is inoperative, then under what jurisdiction does the sentence at the bottom of page 14 of the deputy Minister's report fall, where it says that the organization and development of the county of Wentworth is being guided by a senior officer of the department in collaboration with the welfare committee of the county council?

Obviously some monies are being set aside for county consolidation. Where and how?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The people there from the main office receive salaries which are paid by the department. For instance, I have here a Mr. Anderson, who is $8,200; Mr. Ralph, I understand, is $7,500. These are gentlemen who are paid by the main office, or by The Department of Public Welfare, to go and work to establish large units in the different counties. Once the unit is established, these gentlemen return to their former occupation, or will go further to establish another county whenever that is requested. But money such as my hon. friend was asking—no.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, may I ask the—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: We do not pay for the administration.

Mr. S. Lewis: May I ask the hon. Minister: How do they establish a county unit if the Act is inoperative?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That I stated a moment ago. The establishment of county consolidation of welfare services comes under The General Welfare Assistance Act instead of the Act which was mentioned before.

Mr. S. Lewis: And they are paid out of main office, not out of The General Welfare Assistance Act, so there is really no relationship between the establishment of the unit and the Act under which they fall?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, I stated main office, but I stated immediately after that the department itself pays for that. It does come under The General Welfare Assistance Act, but if I mentioned main office I really meant the department itself.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on this, the hon. Minister unwittingly misled me, and now I have misled him, and I do not want him to get into a disastrous position. We both came to the conclusion that The Welfare Units Act was inoperative and he agreed with me that he should have it cleaned up and taken out of the statutes altogether. Before he moves to do that, I just now had drawn to my attention that back in 1801, the first vote, the main office, there is item nine: Administration of northern units. You are administering all your northern units under The Welfare Units Act, so you better not clean it out of the statutes or you will likely be neglecting the north.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: With reference to what we are discussing, that is what I meant.

Mr. MacDonald: I would suggest to the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I appreciate it.

Mr. MacDonald: I am sure you must appreciate it or you would get even more chaos in your department than you have got now, in the circumstances under which you operate it. However—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I might say that I had forgotten that, at the beginning of my estimates, a correction was made. There was a typographical error here—and maybe we are not so far wrong after all, both of us—so that now instead of reading The Welfare Units Act, it should read The District Welfare Administration Boards Act, 1962-63.

Mr. MacDonald: So it really is inoperative?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I had forgotten the amendment or I would have stated it before this.

Mr. Troy: I have a question, Mr. Minister, but you did not say that is a typographical error.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a highly appropriate word.

Mr. Troy: Sir, I am looking at the public accounts in the department, under general welfare assistance. Checking through the cities I find the city of North Bay got welfare assistance of $15,000—

Mr. Chairman: Order! We are on vote 1805.

Mr. Troy: You are on “general welfare”? Pardon me. I am inoperative in that regard.

Vote 1805 agreed to.

On vote 1806:

Mr. Troy: Sir, in the 1963 accounts I find the city of North Bay with general welfare assistance of $15,502.88. I am looking at other cities of comparable size, and I find them much larger. In fact, the town of Sturgeon Falls has general welfare assistance of some $82,000. Would you make some comment, Mr. Minister? What does it mean to say the city of North Bay, of 23,000-odd or more, has a general welfare assistance of less than one dollar, in fact about 60 cents per capita? What does that mean? That there are very few people on relief; or does it refer to the operation of the department in this city?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I suppose, Mr. Chairman, the answer to that is that there are fewer people on relief; that is why there is less paid. The economic condition, naturally, must be better in certain areas than others. That is why their relief is less. If my hon. friend would like me to give him some figures here.

Mr. Troy: I see the city of London is $612,000, that is about a $3 per capita amount.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Apparently, Mr. Chairman, North Bay must be very light because it is not in the first 40 I have here.

Mr. Troy: Yes, I say so, sir; it is only $15,000 and other cities are: Eastview $165,000; London, I say is $600,000.

An hon. member: They have a lot of coffee parties there.

Mr. Troy: I just wondered: Is it more difficult for North Bay to get assistance from the department, or is it more difficult for those on relief to get relief from the welfare officer in the city of North Bay? What do you say?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I would not think so, Mr. Chairman. I think, because North Bay is very fortunate—

Mr. Troy: Which one do you not think so, sir? Which part of the question?

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, on this vote I would like to make a few suggestions to the hon. Minister; the first is concerning the Canadian vocational training programme. The programme, a very valuable programme, generally gets quite a large number of its students from individuals on welfare, or receiving general welfare assistance. However, one of the drawbacks is that once the individual enrolls in the programme, his welfare assistance is almost automatically cut right off. If it is the intention of this government to encourage individuals to take that retraining programme, I think some consideration should be given by this department to not completely cut off the welfare assistance of the individual taking the retraining. If we continue following the policy of cutting them off welfare, then there is no inducement to the individual to take the retraining.

He gets the idea, "Why should I bother retraining myself, I am better off accepting general welfare assistance?" That is not too common, but it is a condition, or an attitude, which does prevail among some individuals and I think it is the type of attitude we should nip in the bud as quickly as possible.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister, with the individuals taking the retraining programme, that some consideration be given to some general welfare assistance as an inducement. He will come along and say, possibly, that the individual still gets some type of welfare assistance because the retraining programme may not supply him sufficient funds for a proper standard of living.

Another suggestion I would like to make to the hon. Minister is about individuals who have been injured during the course of their work and are on total disability pension; today, that total disability pension from workmen's compensation is so small that it has to be supplemented quite often by welfare assistance. I think the hon. Minister should talk to the workmen's compensation board, or to The Department of Labour, and attempt to induce them, for anyone who is totally disabled, to see that, at least both their hospitalization premiums and their medical premiums are covered by some vote of this department.

It is a bad enough penalty to be totally disabled, let alone for the individual quite often to have to worry as to where he is going to obtain the funds to pay for his hospital premium and medical insurance. With the new increase in hospital premiums, it is only going to cut into the amount of money the individual has left after he gets workmen's compensation.

The reason I mention this is that I have had two cases in the last two weeks; one where the individual was getting only $75 a month workmen's compensation, the other $37.50 and having to pay both the medical premium and the hospital insurance premium. I would like the hon. Minister to, first, comment concerning my suggestion on the retraining; and second, on the payment of hospital and medical premiums by this department for those who are totally disabled, or sometimes partially disabled, and over 45. They may get a partial pension, but who is going to hire them when they are partially disabled? Would the hon. Minister comment on that now, please?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The comment I might make on that, Mr. Chairman, is that what my hon. friend possibly means is the fact that we should add to whatever is paid by the federal government; that, whatever sum is paid to these people, we should add to that.

In the other matter of hospitalization, I am advised that the municipalities pay for this in some cases. Not in all cases, but in some cases they do. When it comes through I am advised through The Department of Municipal Affairs in this matter.

I understand, and I think what my hon. friend has said, it is very useful. At the same time this is a matter, again, wherein a general discussion should be held at Ottawa to see what can be done. This is an area, I am quite satisfied to think—especially in industrial areas like the city of Windsor or the city of Toronto, or the like—where many of these people are able to obtain certain monies for certain things they do while they are having this rehabilitation, plus what they receive from the federal government to help them get along.

I am not saying my hon. friend—. I think the suggestion is a good one and worth looking into.

Mr. Newman: I thank the hon. Minister for his kind remarks. Another suggestion I would like to make to the hon. Minister is on the consideration by his department of including, in welfare allowances, bus transportation. If not direct payment for transportation, say, to the welfare office, then possibly some sort of an identity card so that the individual receiving the general welfare allowance may be able to ride on the transportation system in the community at some type of reduced fare.

If I refer to my own community I can say that it costs the individual 20 cents to go down town and 20 cents to go back home. That is 40 cents the individual has to pay for transportation alone; and if he has to make two trips in the course of one month to the welfare office, he spends 80 cents—which, to an individual on a minimum amount of welfare, is a substantial amount of money. Some consideration should be given to including transportation of the individual when he is going to collect his welfare.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, under this matter of general welfare—pardon? Oh, I am sorry.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, I would like to follow up the question asked by the hon. member for Nipissing in regard to the welfare paid to various municipalities. It would almost seem that the amount paid depends pretty well on the toughness, or lack of it, on the part of the local welfare officer. I wonder whether the hon. Minister has attempted in any way to set any kind of standards, or whether the amount that is paid, and the purposes for which welfare is paid—although I know they are delineated to some extent—are being standardized in any way?

I have another question to which I would like the answer—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: In reply to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, the standards and the scale of payment are set out in the regulations and are followed pretty closely, I understand, by the welfare workers in the different cities and towns. It happens quite frequently that, through a request, our own men will meet with the town or city supervisor and discuss these matters with them. We always encourage them to give as much help as possible and we are certainly not trying to go the other way.

But, as the hon. member says, these things happen in the local municipalities; but we do provide the services of our own people to go and discuss it with them and try to arrive at a better arrangement if possible. We cannot dictate, naturally, to the municipalities as to who is deserving or who is not. But we can certainly help with those who do receive help, to show and instruct them with the experience acquired by our own people and, at the same time, to try to arrive at the regulations and the standards which are set out. That service, as I am sure the hon. member knows, has been done before. We try to accomplish that, and I can assure him that any instructions received from us in respect to that go up instead of down.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, if I may follow this up? I understand then, that what really happens is that if there is any real variation from year to year which is not consistent, perhaps, with population changes, the hon. Minister's department scrutinizes this. And if something startling happens, they move in and try to assess the situation with the local people to arrive at something which may be right. Is this, in effect, what happens?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I can assure the hon. member for Yorkview that, when these things happen, we are aware of it very quickly. They let us know, and we send people out to discuss these matters, not only in the general sense, but also in individual cases. It is done quite frequently. I have reason to believe that many individual cases have been straightened out in that particular way. Also the general outlook, I am sure, is discussed and looked at at the same time; not only with the supervisor there; it might even go to the smaller municipalities, at least those I know of, and even go to the council itself to look upon it and perhaps advise their field worker or the supervisor.

Mr. Young: Does the hon. Minister have some record of staff having done this over the past year, so that he knows that in A or X number of cases the municipalities were approached by the staff and that kind of advice was given?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, I could not say, Mr. Chairman, that we have an actual record, in numbers, of what is done. But, upon request from either offices or individuals—and I am sure I have done that many times myself, not as the Minister but strictly as a person in the area. I have received a complaint from someone and our man, or one of his field workers, goes down there and interviews the clerk, if he is the man, or else their field worker or the supervisor, to see what solution can be arrived at for the individual case. If it is a case which has a general purview of the state of welfare in the area, then that also is discussed. But to give the hon. member the exact numbers of that, I could not do, because I do not think we have that kind of record.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make a few remarks in regard to the general welfare assistance because I think the payments being made in the province of Ontario, to families on welfare, and to single men, are a shame. I know that each time these estimates come up we go into the subject of the niggardly payments which are made.

I recall, for example, reading not so long ago how a single man who was on welfare tried to get by. I believe in Toronto that the payments made to a single man for a 15-day period is $28. I do not know how anybody can live as a human being today in the city of Toronto for 15 days on $28. As I recall this story which was told, if a man could obtain a room for $7 a week—and it would be a mighty cheap room at $7 a week—it would mean that, after paying rent of $14, he would have $14 left for 15 days for food, for clothing, for haircuts, for all these things which are needed in order to live.

Certainly, such a welfare assistance programme as we have in the province of Ontario is a skin-and-bones affair. It is something that might possibly keep the body alive but would certainly crush the spirit. How in the world is a man who is out of work going to be able to even buy a newspaper to find out where jobs are available, when he has about $1.86

a day on which to live? Especially in a large city, he needs transportation. I know that the welfare department say that if a man has a car it has to go before anything is done for him.

If we are going to get a man back on the payroll, back paying taxes, he should be treated as a human being, and the present programme in the province of Ontario is a shocking disgrace. Time and time again this has been brought forward, and the hon. Minister has sat through these estimates and through these discussions, just as he sits here tonight and as he sat today, knowing little about his department. And I think, on the record of the department, it is obvious he cares very little about the welfare here in the province of Ontario.

Because we do not pay a decent amount to people who do need welfare assistance a lot of the private agencies here in Toronto under the United Appeal, who normally would do counselling work, are having to do really welfare work. Many of these agencies are supplying food where their funds were meant to supply counselling or give training. Today men who are receiving welfare under our assistance programme get by on $1.86 a day because they go to the Scott Mission. If it was not for the private agencies, there would be absolute chaos here in the welfare set-up in Toronto and in the province of Ontario.

A lot of people will probably say—and no doubt the Tory view is that people on welfare are bums. I think Arthur Meighen was of that view and R. B. Bennett, and probably the gentlemen over there are following in their footsteps.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is a lie.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): What kind of a statement is that?

Mr. Trotter: But let us remember this, that in Canada—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, I do not like that.

Mr. Trotter: Would the hon. Minister of Mines sit down? We have to put up with this Tory administration and the record speaks for itself. The people on welfare, here in the province of Ontario, are living on $1.86 a day. And I suggest the hon. members should do something and keep their mouths shut.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Trotter: I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: On a point of order, is this type of language to be permitted to be expressed in this House?

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I would say that if mouths are open that should be shut, then it is quite legal that you should say, "Shut your mouth!" That is what is causing the trouble here tonight.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is a great statement, coming from the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, you know that the hon. Minister of Labour should be ashamed of himself, being in the front ranks of that group over there when the average working man, if he is on welfare, ends up getting about $1.86 a day to live on. And remember this, Mr. Chairman, I say to the hon. Minister of Labour, that it is the labouring class which is the first hit. If it is inflation, they suffer from inflation; if there is unemployment, it is the labouring man who is the first fellow who has to live on $1.86 a day. I would think that the hon. Minister of Labour would be trying to set a fire under the hon. Minister of Public Welfare to do something about these niggardly welfare payments which are being made. It is the working man who suffers the most here.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, my objection has nothing to do with what the hon. member has just described. There has been no one in this House more sympathetic and interested in the problem being debated. My objection has to do with the manner in which it is being debated.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister of Public Welfare has served in three Cabinets, or under three Prime Ministers, maybe it is four, and the record of his administration is shocking. And if today, under this so-called affluent society where there is so much wealth, a single man on welfare has to exist on $28 for 15 days, there is something very much the matter.

We in Canada, Mr. Chairman I believe, of our national income, spend about 8.5 per cent. There are only two countries worse than we are in the western world, or the so-called advanced countries. One is Japan, it is the lowest; and the other one is the United States, which has the largest income per capita, an extremely wealthy country. But in countries like Western Germany, 20 per cent of the national income is spent on welfare. Even in France it is about 18 per cent. And these are prosperous countries; they are free-enterprise countries and certainly there is relatively very little unemployment.

But let us remember, despite all the complaints made by some particularly Tory quarters that we spend too much on welfare, that we are the third lowest of the advanced countries. We should take a very strong look at what we are doing for our welfare cases, because I am convinced of this: that the vast majority of people on welfare would rather have their self respect by working and paying taxes, than being slowly destroyed in spirit by the way we treat them.

After all, if a man on welfare can be put back to work, he is back paying taxes; but if his spirit is destroyed he is going to be on welfare for the rest of his life and it is going to cost the government about $670 per year. If he is, at age 40, on welfare and becomes a perpetual welfare case, he is going to cost the province of Ontario over $20,000—plus $100 to bury him when he has to be put away in a casket. I think the welfare funeral is about $100.

Mr. Thompson: What about his children?

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister is going to Quebec, and I hope he speaks loud and long on a welfare programme which needs to be improved, not only in the province of Ontario but across Canada. I feel sorry in this respect that we have got such a weak Minister. I fear he will not speak up, but it is time he got down to work to see to it that we in this province got away from the skin-and-bones treatment of our indigent people. We have certainly fallen down; we ignore completely what research has pointed out in so many other countries. Even in the United States, where they do not spend as much in the national income as we do, possibly because of their great wealth, they have now started a great war on poverty. It is time that we did the same and I wish to heaven that the hon. Minister of Public Welfare would get busy.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The member for Scarborough West.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I believe you have given me—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, he has been on his feet 15 times.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis: I caught the Chairman's eye, Mr. Minister.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure, he is the spokesman.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Do you want me to sit down, sir?

Mr. Chairman: Order! Yes.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the hon. members opposite, and the hon. Minister of Mines, that when the hon. member for Parkdale talks about $1.86 a day he is talking about the affluent policy of the department, the opulent administrations of the department. This department gives $1.86 to the working man, which is criminal enough; what the department does under general welfare assistance to a mother with children is unbelievable. A mother with six fatherless children in this province receives $35.40 a week. That, Mr. Chairman, averages out to 84 cents a day per child—and not a penny left for the mother. One asks what kind of general welfare assistance one has in Ontario, and one says it is a mockery of all human decency.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Any baby bonus?

Mr. S. Lewis: It may be that the hon. Minister has problems in acquiring extra funds from federal sources; it may be that the hon. Minister has problems convincing his Treasury colleagues to give him more money. Whatever the reason, there is no human or moral justification for submitting children to that kind of degradation in this society. That is precisely what is being done.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Is the hon. member suggesting that is the total amount?

Mr. S. Lewis: That is the total amount—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No baby bonus?

Mr. S. Lewis: That is the total amount given under general welfare—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis: I am analyzing for the hon. Minister of Mines. Suppose, Mr. Minister, that one added other increment; suppose one brought it up to $1.50 or $2.00 a day for children who are fatherless. I submit to the hon. members of this House that somewhere there is conscience lacking. Nowhere can it be justified. However the figures are combined, a decent human standard will never be achieved. And something is profoundly wrong with a psychology and mental attitude which is prepared to permit it.

But it goes further. What intrigues me—and I made this point during the opening remarks and I want to make it again—is that a mother with six fatherless children, under general welfare assistance receives less money than a mother with six fatherless children under mothers' allowance. I would like the hon. Minister to explain to this House somewhere along the way how he can permit that situation to continue. How is it that children who are fatherless, under one grant, receive less; and children who are fatherless, under one grant, receive more? Again, what kind of psychology of mind does it reveal which would subscribe to that baseness of attitude? And when one looks at the family budget under general welfare assistance, Mr. Chairman, what does one see?

The hon. members of this House go to the deputy Minister with individual constituent problems. The deputy Minister handles them in a way for which every member is exceedingly grateful. But one wonders whether members have made an analysis of the individual breakdown, and what it shows? Heads of families—on the basis of pre-added budgets of the department—receive $31 a month for a three-room shelter allowance on unheated premises.

Are we living in Canada or are we living in some kind of social barbarism? Twenty-five dollars a month for one room; $40 a month for six rooms; and all unheated. You make pre-added budget grants for unheated premises. Surely, Mr. Minister, if The Department of Public Welfare is operating as it should, there should not be any grants made to unheated premises because they would not allow unheated premises to exist. When a family is in that condition, in the middle of winter in this society, the department should move the family or make it possible for them to be moved, not make picayune grants for unheated premises.

Then when you add in everything: rent, fuel, food, all of the various aspects of the pre-added budget, what do we have? The head of the family, with three children, can receive from $75 to $90 monthly for fuel, rent, food and all other accessories—maximum.

I say to all the hon. members in this House: There is something somewhere profoundly wrong. There is a malaise at the soul of this department and there is no excuse for it; there has to be a variation. If the hon. Minister is running into difficulty doing it, then the hon. Minister had better take his Cabinet colleagues aside and give them a quiet talking to about the human aspects involved. We spend a great deal of time in this Legislature honourably discussing highways, honourably discussing public works, honourably discussing tourism, honourably discussing transport. We spend a lot of time on statistical data and mechanical details. We spend all too little time on the human beings represented by those statistical pieces of information.

Mr. Trotter: He is not even listening to you.

Mr. S. Lewis: So when you take aside the veil, what do you find? Eighty-four cents a day for fatherless children; $31 a month for three unheated rooms. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, it is something that should not be tolerated in a civilized province, and I sincerely hope that when next year the general welfare assistance comes through there will be some fairly dramatic renovations.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to an exceedingly well-educated young man, who has never known want, speak on the terrible cases of welfare which have not been given any help. I would ask this House, Mr. Chairman, if this young man, who has been to college and had a fine university training, is in a position to know. Has he had any experience which would teach him what want actually means?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order!

Mr. S. Lewis: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Well, you people always shout everybody down.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order!

Mr. S. Lewis: My point of order, Mr. Chairman—and I say it quietly to the hon. Minister of Mines—is twofold. First, I am a representative in this Legislature and as such have, as I am sure the hon. Minister himself has, vast numbers of human beings, in serious want, approach me as a member to attempt to do something for them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, this is a point of order. I have in fact had some very real familiarity with want.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The member from—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Mr. Chairman, the point I was coming to was this: I have had experience in my riding which really has something to do with welfare. While I am speaking—I am not reading from a paper or a book. I happen, sir, to be president of the Golden Age Haven in the city of Port Arthur. I also have spent many years in welfare work and I will tell those on the opposite benches something. I was chairman of relief in the city of Port Arthur, as a councillor and alderman, in 1934 under the Hepburn government. You know what a government that was; we had soup kitchens in the city of Port Arthur and there was no other means—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Mr. Chairman, there was no other avenue of welfare in that whole city at the time and I was the one who set up the soup kitchens.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): On a point of order, what does—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: You are scared to listen—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Bukator: It is on the estimates; that is what the point of order is.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Well, I certainly appreciate this courtesy from the Opposition benches. I have sat here since something like eight o'clock. Mr. Chairman, it may be all right for them but the public will give them their answer when election time comes; so I am not so worried now. I want to thank the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, for the policy he has put before this House tonight.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order! Please give the present speaker the floor. Please continue.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: And I want to congratulate him for the great old age haven—Mr. Chairman, surely we can have some order here from these gentlemen?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I wish you would hush.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, our Dawson Court in the city of Port Arthur is one of the finest homes for the aged there is. A similar one is in the city of Fort William. And not so many years ago, I am telling you, there was nothing available in those cities under a Liberal government.

This government has always had a humanitarian approach towards the underprivileged and those who are in want. Two years ago I defied anybody in this House to bring a case of anybody who was hungry and in want in this city, and said this department would look after them. We did not find one case. You will also remember about that time, a TV programme which was sponsored on a TV station in Hamilton, and which was proven false. Tonight we have heard many statements which are absolutely false as far as welfare is concerned in this city; because this department of welfare, the minute it is brought to their attention that people are hungry or in need, looks after their wants. This government is one which has done that throughout the years. I want you to understand that, because the people know it. They know that when you are talking the way you are, you are simply talking unfair politics and you are more interested in that than you are in the welfare of anybody in this province.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I am going to go to the order paper in order to deal with some bills in committee which I would like to give third reading. When we have completed that, if there is time in the proceedings of debate, we will come back to the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare.

Of course, there is no night session tomorrow night.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, before you take the motion, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister if The Police Act will be one of those items dealt with at the labour and municipal bills tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, sir.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.40 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25, 1964

The House met at 2.00 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome to the Legislature today, in the east gallery, students from Harley Central School and in the west gallery, Deer Park Public School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre), from the standing committee on labour, legal and municipal bills, presented the committee's fifth report, which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill No. 4, The Apprenticeship and Tradesmen's Qualification Act, 1964;

Bill No. 76, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that when this House adjourns today it do stand adjourned until a day to be named by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister can indicate to us—does this mean that there is some possibility the House will not resume until later than the sixth or seventh?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I would say, Mr. Speaker, that we will not resume before April 14. Whether we will resume then or sometime later depends upon events in Quebec. I do not know how long this conference is going to last or what might come from it. I will give the hon. members all the notice possible when we will resume, but I can assure him that we will not be resuming before April 14.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond): Have representations been made to the hon. Minister regarding assistance in settling the dispute between St. Joseph's Hospital and Miss Jean Cranstoun, secretary of the committee for the advancement of professional nurses?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, I was advised that no such representations have been made to me.

Mr. Young: Would the hon. Minister countenance a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: May I hear the question first, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Young: The question is this: In view of the importance of bringing harmony into the nursing profession in Ontario, does the hon. Minister not think it important that the good offices of his department might be offered in order to settle the dispute now raging in the nursing profession?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to put any resources of my department at the disposal of the dissident parties if they seek our assistance.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I beg leave to table the report of the Ontario College of Art for the year ending May 31, 1963.

I had intended to deal with this at some length in my estimates before the hon. members of the House. I wish to inform them that the bill establishing Ryerson Polytechnical Institute will be proclaimed to take effect as of April 1 of this year.

I had hoped we might deal with this at some length, and we shall do so during the course of the estimates, but I wanted to tell the hon. members that the bill will take effect as of April 1.

Clerk of the House: The 60th order. Committee of the whole House. Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

RIVERDALE HOSPITAL

House in committee on Bill No. Pr9, An Act respecting the Riverdale Hospital.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I would like to move the amendment of which I have given notice. The notice is item 13 under other motions standing in my name at the bottom of page 12 of the order paper.

I move that section two of Bill No. Pr9 be amended by striking out clause (c) thereof and substituting the following:

(c) eight additional members appointed by the Metropolitan council, all of whom shall, except as provided in section 3, be members for a term of two years and until their successors are appointed.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a moment or two to explain my proposed amendment.

Under the bill as it now stands, the board of Riverdale Hospital will consist of 13 members. Two of these members will be members of the medical staff. In addition, there will be the president of the women's auxiliary. Furthermore, under clause B there will be two members appointed annually by the council of the corporation of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto; and then finally, under clause C as it now stands, there will be eight members, a majority of the board, who will be elected by the board itself.

There is only one variation of that. In the first instance, under section three these eight members will be appointed by the Metropolitan council, but after the initial appointments, the election of a majority of the board will rest in the hands of the board itself.

When this matter was before the private bills committee I said that what was proposed here was to establish a self-perpetuating oligarchy; and I think that what I said then is equally true now. We will have a board responsible for the administration of a public hospital that will, in the main, elect itself. It will be accountable to nobody. It will in no way, not even indirectly, be accountable to anyone, because it will simply elect its own members, apart from the first five members whom I have mentioned. As far as the eight members—the majority of the board, the controlling voice on the board—are concerned, it will simply be a board that will re-elect itself in perpetuity.

I think this is a bad principle in any kind of law. I think it is a particularly bad principle with regard to the institution that we are now discussing, that is, Riverdale Hospital.

Riverdale Hospital was constructed entirely out of public funds—federal, provincial and municipal. Its operating costs will, no doubt, also be paid entirely out of public funds, primarily out of the funds of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. Undoubtedly that is where it will get all, or most, of its operating revenues.

I would imagine that if it should happen that the hospital gets into a deficit at some time in the future, which is not likely because of the way our hospital plan operates, it would come back to the Metropolitan council for a grant to bail them out.

So this is a public hospital, constructed entirely out of public funds, operated entirely out of public funds, but accountable to no public body, except that two of its 13 members will be appointed by the Metropolitan council which was responsible for the construction of the hospital in the first place. As a matter of fact, it is provided in the bill that only one of those two may actually be members of the Metropolitan council, so that out of a board of 13 members the Metropolitan council will have not more than one of its own members on the board, and it will not be able, after the board has been set up and operating, to name more than two out of the 13 members of the board.

Under my proposal, Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment that I have put forward, the eight additional members who constitute a majority of the board will all be appointed by the Metropolitan council. They will be appointed for two-year terms and it is provided in my amendment that to begin with half of them will be appointed for a one-year term so that there will be rotating terms for the eight members. That, I think, is an infinitely more satisfactory type of provision than what we have here now.

The board will be accountable at least to the extent that its members are appointed by the Metropolitan council. I think it is time we abandoned the old practice in this province of setting up boards to administer important public institutions and not holding them, even indirectly accountable to the public. For that reason I think my proposed amendment is a sound one and I think the sponsor of the bill and the House should accept that amendment.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Chairman, as the proposer of the bill, I would urge all hon. members not to support the amendment as proposed by the hon. member for Woodbine.

We had a very good discussion on this point in the private bills committee, Mr. Chairman. I have much more confidence in the members of the Metropolitan council and the members of the board of directors of the Riverdale Hospital than my hon. friend. I often think that we owe a great debt of gratitude to these volunteer hospital workers, these men and women who serve on the boards of our great hospitals throughout the province. They serve without remuneration. They spend many hours of their time for the public good, and I know that this will be carried through in administering the affairs of the Riverdale Hospital.

Now the purpose of the bill is to create an incorporated body to administer and operate the hospital on the same basis as prevails in all other general hospitals in this Metropolitan area. At present the board of management is a committee of council, that is a committee of the Metropolitan Toronto Council and weaknesses of this type of management have been exposed now that the structure is gradually being filled to capacity.

I have a letter here, Mr. Chairman, from Mr. William R. Allen, QC, chairman of the Metropolitan council and I think it would be a good idea to have the hon. members know the feeling there. I quote:

The proposed Act includes provision for the appointment of the original members of the board of the Metropolitan council and thereafter for the appointment by the Metropolitan council of two of the ten appointed members. It was the express intention of the Metropolitan council to divest itself of the responsibility of operating the hospital and it will not be making current or operational grants. It would be unfair to those serving on the board that they should be subject to the influence of the council responsible for their appointment but with no current financial participation. The board could not be considered truly independent as are all other hospital boards in the Metropolitan area, if council were to retain the power to appoint the members.

It is believed that the interests of the Metropolitan corporation is adequately protected by the two members who will serve on the board after appointment by the council.

And this memorandum is signed by William R. Allen, QC.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that we could undertake to have the board look into the feasibility of encouraging hospital membership so that the public might have a broad representation. When this comes about the board could be nominated and proposed by the members at large, which is done on all general hospital boards. Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand the concern of the hon. member about having so many members, that is elected members of the council, on this board because I think we have proven in Metropolitan Toronto that they can be very well and efficiently operated by a good representation of elected people together with volunteer directors. I would therefore urge that this amendment be not accepted.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for High Park has never been noted for his logic and I think the statement he has made now is about as illogical as anyone could conceive. He ended up by saying that the interests of the Metropolitan council are adequately represented when they have two out of 13 members of a board. He quotes a letter from the chairman of the Metropolitan executive. Mr. Chairman, I would say that if Mr. Allen thinks the Metropolitan council should abdicate its responsibility, that is its business, but I do not think it should be permitted to do so. I do not think it should turn over an institution for whose financing it has been responsible entirely to a board on which it has practically no influence at all. The hon. member for High Park has suggested that this is the type of administration we have set up for all public hospitals in the city of Toronto. That is not entirely true, but it is close enough to be accepted. I will not quibble with him about it.

I would suggest to the hon. member that some of the things that have been happening in hospitals in this area indicate that we ought to be reconsidering the type of organization we have. The total lack of accountability, I would suggest to the hon. member, is one of the reasons for the maladministration which has become all too apparent in hospitals in this area—a total disregard for the public.

I do not think we should allow this sort of thing to continue. I am suggesting when we are now setting up a new hospital altogether we should take another look at the unsatisfactory practices we have had in the past and consider ways and means of improving them for the future. As a matter of fact, I would concede that my proposed amendment is by no means entirely satisfactory, but it is the best I can do within the terms of this bill.

Even under my amendment, the board will be quite independent. The talk about independence in Mr. Allen's letter is a complete red herring. These people will merely be appointed by the council, but for the term of their appointment they are entirely on their own. I think even that is unsatisfactory, but there is certainly no question as to their independence. It is just their method of appointment I am concerned about. At least I think the responsible public body should have the power of appointment of the majority of the members.

I believe, and I have suggested previously in this House, that we should look into the whole question of hospital administration; and more particularly the method of appointment and the responsibility of boards of trustees, boards of governors, boards of management or whatever you want to call them. I think we should do that, but when we are setting up a new board let us not perpetuate the errors of the past.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I am in considerable doubt as to the advisability of this bill at all. I am not sure that a better method of administration would not have been to continue what we have had in the past where a committee of the council ran the hospital. I have no doubt there has been a lot of pressure from the medical profession to take this public institution out from under public control, and that is why we have this bill before us. As I say, I cannot revise the whole bill, but I can at least move an amendment to indicate the direction in which we should be moving if we want to do anything about the problem of hospital administration in this and other areas. At least my amendment, although it is not entirely satisfactory, does indicate that direction.

Mr. Cowling: In the space of about five minutes, which is pretty good for the hon. member for Woodbine, he has indicated that the members, the hundreds, probably thousands of volunteer people that serve on hospital boards in the province should all be wiped out because they are not doing a very good job.

And then on the next question, he condemns the doctors of the province for their part in what they are trying to do.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for High Park purported to quote what I said. It was about as accurate as his quotes usually are. I said no such thing about the members of hospital boards throughout the province. I said merely that we should reconsider the whole method of hospital administration as it is now enacted in various statutes of this province.

Mr. Cowling: That is what I was getting at, Mr. Chairman, if I could just finish on that point. The hon. member proposes that we have a great big investigation of all the hospitals in the province which is—

Mr. Bryden: I did not say that.

Mr. Cowling: Well, the hon. member practically did then.

An hon. member: Make your own speech.

Mr. Cowling: I am making my own speech and I really do not need any help from the hon. member. I will get along all right. I have not had a chance to make many speeches at this session because the hon. member has been making them all. So give me a chance; that is all I ask.

Mr. Chairman, I am saying that the hon. members should not vote for this amendment because in the first place it has been proposed by the Metropolitan council of Toronto and I think that those gentlemen are a little closer, maybe, to this picture than some other people in the House. They propose that this is the way they can see the hospital operated on the best possible terms. Quite frankly, I agree with it.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, if I could just add what our party, after our caucus on this amendment, feels.

We, sir, feel that in a sense this is a little bit like "Alice in Wonderland." I say it is like "Alice in Wonderland" because the whole subject of independence of hospital boards is really a lot of mythology. As has been pointed out so distinctly by the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), the hospital boards have been emasculated a long time ago by the overpowering influence of the Ontario Hospital Commission—

Mr. Cowling: Let us stay right on this.

Mr. Thompson: I am, because I am referring to the fact we are discussing the composition of the board. We have had instances about the independence of this particular board. As far as we are concerned, we agree wholeheartedly with the amendment of our hon. friend from Woodbine. We want to see these boards enlarged and we think its principles are sound.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment say "aye".

All those opposed to the amendment say "nay".

In my opinion the motion is lost.

Call in the members.

All those in favour of the amendment, please rise.

All those opposed to the amendment, please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the ayes are 23, the nays 64.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, I do not have an amendment to move to this section of the bill. I merely want to state a point of concern now. I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) has left the House.

My concern is simply this: I suspect that we in this Legislature, and the government in particular, will be making a profound mistake if in the incorporation of universities from this point forward members on the administrative staff and teaching staff at the university are specifically excluded from boards of governors.

We face a period in higher education expansion where the problems of staff are becoming ever more important, and where the feelings of university professors in particular are being expressed through their associations and through various briefs and representations to government. And it seems to me that whereas in the early stages there was some justification in an absolute separation between the senate and the board, that justification has now gone, particularly with boards of governors now invariably passing judgment on academic policy by the mere fact of the manner in which grants are made within the university structure. The university professors have expressed in the last while in many provinces across Canada, and increasingly in Ontario, a great concern about representation on boards of governors and I think it is worth the contemplation of the government. I do not wish to express it in the form of an amendment, but I express anxiety at this point.

as provided for in Bill No. 41, An Act to amend The Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, may I ask my hon. friend how does this tax compare with that levied in other provinces for this fuel?

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Chairman, it is less than the amount levied in the province of Quebec. I am not entirely certain with respect to the fuel tax of the other eastern provinces. I expect that it is less. The fuel tax, if I am correct in my information, is 21 cents in Quebec.

I take it this relates to capital costs allowances and to companies with a degree of Canadian ownership. I take it that they are to get preferred treatment in that respect. Is that the situation?

THE LILLIAN FRANCES MASSEY TREBLE TRUST

House in committee on Bill No. Pr18, An Act respecting the Lillian Frances Massey Treble Trust.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, I am holding Bill No. Pr18 and calling Bill No. 79, An Act to amend The Corporations Act.

THE CORPORATIONS ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 79, An Act to amend The Corporations Act.

Sections 1 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 5:

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of matters about which I would like to ask with regard to section 5.

First of all subsection 1. As I understand, it had previously been prohibited for a life insurance company to invest in the shares of another insurance company, and this prohibition has been removed. Would the hon.

Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) be kind enough to explain the reason for this change in the Act?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Chairman, up until now a life insurance company has been prohibited to invest in other types of insurance such as fire, accidents and that type of thing. The tendency now is for insurance companies, from an operating basis, to be able to participate in all types of insurance.

The insurance companies incorporated federally have had this ability for a number of years, so that Ontario corporations have been handicapped until now. In trying to find out the history of this prohibition, I was unable to discover the reasoning why it had been put in. It goes back many, many years and there was no one able to explain to me why it had been prohibited in the first instance.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I could at least speculate as to the reason. I think the reason probably was that the Legislature at the time wanted, to some degree, to prevent undue monopoly in this field by preventing life insurance companies from gobbling up other types of insurance companies. It would seem now that it is a wide open field. It is open season. The big fellows can go and grab the small ones by buying up their shares, getting control over them and thus creating greater concentrations of financial power within the community. Heaven knows they are big enough right now!

I would imagine that was the reason for the prohibition. I am somewhat concerned to see that the prohibition has now been removed. I would imagine that if a life insurance company wanted to get into other types of insurance, it would not have to invest in the shares of other companies. It could presumably get its charter amended. I am not quite sure what the law is on that, but it could have a general line of insurance business. The possibility of some of the big ones moving in and taking over the little ones is not a prospect that I think is particularly inviting to the public. It is the public that will suffer if we get excessive concentration in this field.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I think this is in the interests of the public, because it is an ability of the insurance companies to participate in this thing and, of course, invest their funds. There are limitations in the Act as to the total number of shares that they are able to invest.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, is there a limitation with respect to other insurance companies? I take it there is, or does the limitation that is referred to in the next subsection apply to all of their investments?

I notice, Mr. Chairman, if we can get on to that point, that under subsection 2 of the bill the limitation on the insurance companies is relaxed quite substantially. They were previously limited to ten per cent of the total shares in any one company and now they are permitted to go up to 20 per cent.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): That still would not give them control.

Mr. Bryden: I submit that it could very easily give them control. I think anybody, with even the relatively limited knowledge that I have of corporate structure, knows that you can frequently get control if you have a concentrated holding of shares. The American Telegraph and Telephone Company controls Bell Telephone and I think it holds about two per cent of the shares. Now, admittedly, this is a huge company.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: You picked the largest company.

Mr. Bryden: I quite agree, and two per cent of the shares of Bell is quite a significant holding. Still, if there is one shareholder with a concentrated block of 20 per cent and all the other shareholders are scattered all over the country and no one of them holds more than half a per cent, I think 20 per cent might quite easily mean control. I think we should reconsider this provision.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I will speak to subsection 2. Here again, the insurance companies which are incorporated federally have the ability to invest up to 30 per cent and my understanding from Mr. Gordon's Budget speech is that consideration will be given to increasing that in order to facilitate, indeed encourage, life insurance companies to invest their funds in Canadian activities. Representations have been made.

Now we have not gone even up to 30. We have gone up to 20, which we feel is a reasonable figure. But I have asked that I be kept advised of what occurs in the field of federal life insurance companies to see what happens there, because I do not think we should handicap our Ontario incorporated life insurance companies in this field as compared with federally incorporated life insurance companies.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister certainly makes an argument when he says that the companies with Ontario charters should not be discriminated against as compared to the companies with federal charters. I can see his point there, particularly since, I would imagine, the Ontario companies are smaller than the federally chartered companies.

We cannot do anything about the federal law here, but I think this is a dangerous trend. The fact that the federal government has embarked upon it is, in my opinion, no argument. There have been few men more confused in this whole area of ownership and control than Mr. Walter Gordon. I do not think he knows what he is doing.

It is not appropriate here to debate his various measures, but he is terribly concerned about what he conceives to be American control. I am concerned about that too, although I must say that any measures he has proposed would have no significant effect on American control at all.

However, there are more things in the world to be concerned about than American control. I think it is time we started to develop a concern in this country about insurance company control. All of these large financial institutions, which are getting larger and where control is getting more and more concentrated, I think pose a threat to the community as a whole, in terms of the economic power they can exercise; whether they are American or Canadian, I do not care.

Under this clause, I submit to the hon. Minister that it is possible for insurance companies, if they see fit, to acquire control of other types of enterprises. I think that is a bad thing. I complained some time ago about the possibility of mining companies acquiring control of a public utility. I think this whole question of mergers, of holding companies, of further extension of control into more and more areas, is a question to which we have given inadequate attention.

An insurance company is a type of institution which, if you give it the freedom of action, can very quickly extend its tentacles in many directions through the economy. It is a company that accumulates other people's money and then puts it out for investment. But it, not the people who put up the money, has the control.

I submit to the hon. Minister that this clause requires much further consideration. I would have hoped that instead of following along after what the federal government was doing, he would take the matter up with the federal government to persuade them of the error of their ways, and to persuade them to develop some concern about the whole problem of control of our economy and not to be completely mesmerized by only one aspect of the problem, namely, the aspect of American control.

I would suggest that this section of the bill, Mr. Chairman, should not be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, again the hon. member has made reference to some fuzzy thinking. I think he might reconsider his own thinking, because the purpose of this is to enable life insurance companies to invest their funds and to give them more freedom with their funds.

We are not just following the federal people. We gave this consideration in the light of our own requirements. We think it is a good thing and it will inure to the benefit of both the insurance companies, who wish this, and, we hope, to the corporations in which these insurance companies will now be able to invest their funds to a greater degree.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, but it is more than an investment. They are entitled to invest in common shares, and common shares are normally the voting stock, the stocks with which one can control.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Equity! Equity!

Mr. Bryden: But they also give control if you have enough of them. It is not the investment feature I am concerned about, it is the control feature.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Well, the investment feature is the ownership of equity—

Mr. Bryden: There are lots of types of investment that do not—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I know, debentures and bonds, and that is what you will be complaining about on another occasion, that our people invest in bonds, that they have the biggest proportion of their money invested with the areas of least return because they do not invest in common stock. If the equity were—

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister always contrives to muddy up the water when one tries to pose—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Who stirs it up?

Mr. Bryden: I am not talking about our people investing in stocks or bonds or common shares or anything else. I am talking about insurance companies, which have wholeheartedly—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: But they have vast aggregations of capital and, as I say, under the hon. Minister's proposed legislation, they can use other people's money to acquire control of other companies; and this is what I think is objectionable. It is not the people whose money is being used who have control, it is the insurance company which has the money in its hands. This is the dangerous feature, and this now permits insurance companies to get 20 per cent of the common shares. I think that is a dangerously high percentage.

Walter Gordon's proposal, I may say, is insane. The big companies, incorporated under the federal laws, can move in and take over 30 per cent of the shares of a company. It is quite possible that they will get control of quite significant companies in this country.

Sections 5 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, before we leave section 8, I understand that previously if a company had been in default in filing its annual returns for three years, it was in danger of losing its charter, and now that period has been reduced to one year. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if there is actually any practical effect in this amendment, in that as far as I have ever heard no company ever lost its charter if it went for 20 years without filing annual returns.

Is there going to be any tightening up of the administration so that, in fact, they will lose their charters? I would say three years would be satisfactory, if anything was ever done about it. I never heard of any of them ever losing their charters. Charters have been revived after 40 years.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I am amazed. I have finally heard the hon. member for Woodbine publicly confess that there is something he has never heard about; something about which he knows nothing. We have cancelled almost 25,000 charters for this. Where has the hon. member been?

Mr. Bryden: Well, how was it that charters for race tracks were—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Read the Ontario Gazette. The hon. member said he had never even heard of one. In the last three years alone we have cancelled 10,000 charters.

Mr. Bryden: Well, how do they get revived after 40 years? That has happened under the hon. Minister's administration.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Let the hon. Minister answer that question.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Would the hon. member acknowledge that he knows nothing about something?

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister is apparently trying to establish himself as the chief clown of the Legislature.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, a question has been asked. Is the hon. Minister going to answer the question? How does the hon. Minister explain the fact the charters were revived under his administration?

Mr. Chairman: Order! The discussion has nothing to do with the bill, in my opinion.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, it has. I was asking the hon. Minister as to the practical effect, if any, of this proposed change in the law. Now the question he has just been asked is to test the accuracy of the answer he gave us. He gave us one of these typical sort of answers.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Bryden: We are in doubt—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: On a point of order. The hon. member cannot back out of his ignorance that way.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Bryden: We are in doubt, Mr. Chairman, as to whether or not it conveys the true picture. We think a further question is in order.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Such abysmal ignorance!

Mr. Chairman, every lawyer in this House—the hon. member there—realizes that maybe he is going to have to tighten up some of the practices in his law office, as a great many law offices have been.

We cancel regularly for failure to file. We cancel regularly for failure to file annual returns. Last year we cancelled 3,000. In the last three years we have cancelled, I would say, about 11,000. More in the last three years than probably in the previous three years. We cancel them regularly.

Mr. Bryden: Is it indicated on the file when they have been cancelled?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Yes.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I have drawn files where returns have not been filed for several years and the charters have not been cancelled.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Read the Ontario Gazette. I will send the hon. member a copy. I signed a cancellation yesterday, I think, of several hundred corporations for failure to file.

But the important point is not what the hon. member is raising. The important point is this, and I bring it to the attention of the hon. lawyer members.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: There are lawyer members back here, too.

Up until now a corporation is in default after the first year and we begin, or the department begins, to write letters requesting that they be filed. It is almost what is known as a hounding procedure, as some of the hon. members are aware. This will mean that after the end of one year they will be in default and we will be empowered, after having notified the directors in accordance with the Act, that we propose to do this unless they file. If they do not, then we will be in a position to cancel after one year.

Mr. MacDonald: Will the hon. Minister permit a question? In view of past practices, where they have been revived after 40 years, can we get a commitment from the hon. Minister that after one year they would be notified when the charter is cancelled—that there is absolutely no possibility of it being revived?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: If the hon. member will read the amendment, he will see that there used to be a time when one could apply within three years for a reviver. Now we have reduced that period to one year. I bring to the attention of the hon. member—he knows this—that in the course of cleaning out our files we have gone back and we have almost gone through all our files. It is an uphill task to keep our files updated and the purpose of this section is to assist the department to do that.

TOWNSHIP OF YORK

House in committee on Bill No. Pr29, An Act respecting the township of York.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. T. L. Wells (Scarborough North): Mr. Chairman, pursuant to the rules of the House, due notice having been given on the order paper, under motion 15, I would like to move that section 2 be amended by deleting the words, "exempt from taxation, except for local improvement and school purposes," and inserting, in lieu thereof, the words:

in any year make a grant of a sum of money up to an amount equal to the amount of taxes for general municipal purposes levied against.

Mr. Chairman, I think, in speaking to this amendment, the reason is amply clear. Tax exemptions of premises of this type are guaranteed for ten years under The Municipal Act as it stands at present. I think that this is right and proper, but I think any further subsidy for these types of premises should be by means of a grant from the municipality rather than as a tax exemption.

I think whichever way it is, tax exemption or grant, it is a subsidy. The tax exemption is a subsidy. The trouble is that it tends to be forgotten, because you do not have to actually pay the money out, it just is never brought in. I think a much fairer way is for each municipal council in each year to look at the situation and to decide if the cause is worthy and the grant should be made. The power is here then for them to make this political decision themselves. I feel this is a much fairer way for the people concerned.

Mr. E. A. Dunlop (Forest Hill): Mr. Chairman, it may be of some use to the hon. members of the House to know that as sponsor of the bill, I find the amendment quite acceptable.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Well, Mr. Chairman, the reason the government finds itself in the problem as presently presented is that there is no policy insofar as exemptions are concerned.

For instance, the Canadian Legion halls that are located in the city of Toronto are exempt from municipal taxation. York township comes in and says, "We want the same privilege." There is no reason in the world why, if the city of Toronto has it, York township should not have it.

The motion for this amendment was put forward before the committee on private bills. It was duly discussed and it was discarded. The plea addressed to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs was, for once and for all, to determine government policy as to what exemptions there should be.

These exemptions should apply from one end of the province to the other and not just be limited to those particular municipalities who happen to gather in a favour by an application for a private bill.

This bill is extending, whether in its present form or in the suggested amended form, is extending the evil that exists. And it is going to continue, this evil is going to continue to be extended, because there is a complete and absolute lack of government policy in connection with exemptions from taxation.

If the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs was taking a responsible position in connection with this particular matter, he would stand up and say, "it is government policy to exempt all Legion branches in the province of Ontario or no Legion branches in the province of Ontario." Or he would say "we will allow, by a provision in The Municipal Act, any municipal council to make a grant in lieu of taxes which will be reviewed every year, to any Legion branch." But none of those things is being said.

Mr. Chairman, over the years we have urged the government to have a consistent policy in matters of this sort and in other sorts. When the government refuses to do this, then they get into trouble. There is no logic whatsoever that there be one law for York township and one law for the city of Toronto, and no law for the township of North York or the township of Scarborough in regard to this particular matter.

I think the responsibility lies with the government to enunciate this afternoon, as this bill is here, what is their policy. Do they believe that all Legion branches should pay taxes, or no Legion should pay taxes? They should reflect that in the general legislation.

The discussions as to whether or not this should be amended is an academic discussion.

Perhaps the hon. member who moved the amendment thinks this is going to save face because, again, the onus is being somewhat transferred to the local council rather than being accepted by this Legislature. Mr. Chairman, if we are doing our job here in this Legislature we will enunciate the policy and it will apply all over province of Ontario.

The hon. member who moved the amendment is trying to have the best of both worlds. Let us not be unkind to York township, but let us not take a stand. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment has no validity. Perhaps even the original section has no validity, but some of us who voted for the original section did so, however, after having enunciated the principle that I am putting forth this afternoon.

Once and for all let us have a single policy that will apply to all parts of the province of Ontario in matters such as this one.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment—

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I was a little slow in getting up to speak because I was hoping that some spokesman for the administration would have something to say on this matter.

The hon. member for Downsview has put before the government a case which has been put before them many times before. He has put it before them effectively, in my opinion, and it has been put before them effectively on many occasions in the past.

Mr. Chairman, we just simply cannot get any answer from them.

I think that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Scarborough North would be a sound amendment if it stood all by itself and was an amendment to general municipal legislation. But when one considers it in relation to the hodgepodge of provisions in private bills that have gone through this House, even in my relatively short experience here—I would hate to think of what the situation looks like in terms of the experience to the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver)—but in the time I have been here we have put through tax exemptions for all sorts of different kinds of organizations; YMCAs in great numbers; and I can remember one for a recreation association in the city of Ottawa. As a matter of fact, the mayor of Ottawa battled it right down the line, but it went through anyway in the private bills committee and, as I recall it, through the House.

The rationale presented was that everything was fine if the municipality requested it and it was provided in the statute that this was an option of the municipal council—in fact, the term they used was that it was a matter of local autonomy.

Those words seem to have a certain magic with Tories. I do not know why, because they use them in ways that have no meaning, but they love to use them. That was the rationale that was always given to us, as long as it was optional upon the council and the council asked to have this discretionary power, then it was all right. Now it is being suggested to us that it is not all right for the council to have discretionary power in this field, even when it asks for it and that the discretionary powers should be of a somewhat different nature, namely, to make grants rather than to grant tax exemptions.

I believe that in terms of the benefit the Legion branches will be in exactly the same position whether the amendment is passed or the original section is passed, but surely the time must come when we have some sort of a policy on this matter of tax exemption.

Are we going to give local councils the discretion to give tax exemptions to certain classes of organizations? If so, let us do it in the general law. Are we going, as an alternative, to give them discretion to make grants? Well, let us cover that by the general law. But as it now stands, it is a mess that is becoming worse and more complicated all the time.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Scarborough North just makes the mess still bigger.

It provides still another approach to this overall problem. It may be the best approach, but the point is that no approach is good if they are all different. Personally, I do not imagine that I will succeed, but I am going to vote against the amendment just because I do not see why the Legions in York township should be treated any differently from any similar organizations in many places.

I suspect the amendment will carry since the sponsor himself has no objection to it, but I do think that this calls for a statement not only from the sponsor of the bill, but from a spokesman for the administration.

Mr. Dunlop: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Woodbine finds a good deal of merit in consistency.

If my memory is correct, I believe his leader, the hon. member for York South sponsored the direct progenitor of this bill in a previous session—a sponsorship which failed at that time. I presume that the consistency which is regarded as being so virtuous in his devotion to centralized policies will lead the hon. members of his party at least to support this.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for Forest Hill; he has underlined the validity of observations of the hon. member for Woodbine. Since I sponsored the bill last year, obviously I should oppose this amendment and be in favour of what I sponsored last year. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Bryden: What about the hon. member for Forest Hill?

Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, I may be naive as a new member here, but I was led to believe, no one has told me otherwise, that this was a private bill. This is not a government measure and no one has told me I should or should not do anything specific on this. This amendment represents the thinking of some of us among the government backbenchers who sit on the private bills committee. We might have our own views as to what government policy should be in this regard and perhaps it would be something along the lines of this amendment.

I certainly see no reason why this amendment should not be moved. If we feel strongly against this principle of allowing tax exemption and are in favour of grants in lieu—and as I have said there is a difference; they are both subsidies, but the grants in lieu place the responsibility on the local council each year and I think this is where it should remain for all councils.

I feel, as a backbencher, that this is a good amendment and one, on a private bill, which I should sponsor, which is backed by many others and which, at least in this small regard, brings some kind of order to this situation. I think it is the right answer for helping any groups of this type and that is why I make the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment please say “aye”. All those opposed to the amendment say “nay”. In my opinion, the “ayes” have it.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: The government notice of motion No. 1 by hon. A. K. Roberts.

Resolved,

That,

Elmer W. Sopha, Member of the Assembly for the Electoral District of Sudbury, may bargain for and purchase from Her Majesty the Queen in right of the province of Ontario, as represented by the Minister of Lands and Forests, under section 43b of The Public Lands Act, the public lands being the east half of the north part of lot 9 in concession V in the township of Burwash in the Territorial District of Sudbury, having an area of 66.4 acres, more or less, for agricultural purposes, at a price of $132.80, being $2 an acre, provided the letters patent therefor shall not issue until any merchantable timber thereon has been cut and removed under The Crown Timber Act, and his seat in the Assembly shall not thereby be vacated nor shall he thereby be rendered ineligible as a member of or to sit or to vote in the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that this is not the first such motion relating to the hon. gentleman in question. Is he slowly acquiring all the Crown land up in that area, or what is going on here?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I thought perhaps that this would be a suitable place for him to go to pasture, if he had to.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading, upon motions:

Bill No. 1, An Act to amend The Conveyancing and Law of Property Act.

Bill No. 3, The Industrial Safety Act, 1964.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): At every stage of this bill where it has been possible for a member to make comments, and also in the estimates, I have urged upon the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) the necessity of making adequate provision for inspection if this fine, new, shiny Industrial Safety Act is to mean anything. I have told the hon. Minister before that I object to window dressing. I am submitting to him that this is nothing but window dressing.

He indicated in committee of supply that in the coming fiscal year he intended to increase the inspection staff for the enforcement of this legislation from 51 to 59 inspectors. This would still leave the inspectors in the position where they have an impossible work load and cannot conceivably do the kind of inspection that is required. I suggested to the hon. Minister at the time that he should aim this year at increasing his inspection staff for the purposes of this Act by 50 per cent, and should have a minimum objective in mind over the next couple of years of doubling that staff.

Obviously, my words have had no more influence on the hon. Minister or on the government than many other sound propositions advanced in this House. Therefore, in the hope that it might be possible to bring this whole matter home to the government, and to force upon their attention the fact that a safety Act is only as good as the instruction thereunder, and that the inspection in this field is totally inadequate, and that therefore this new Act will be totally inadequate because it has not got adequate inspection staff; I will move, seconded by the hon. member for Wentworth East (Mr. Gisborn)

That,

the motion for the third reading of this bill be amended by striking out all the words after "that" and substituting the following: third reading of Bill No. 3 be deferred until after the government has placed before the House detailed plans for increasing, as quickly as possible, the safety inspection staff of The Department of Labour to the level necessary to make the bill meaningful.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to speak to this amendment?

Mr. A. E. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, in connection with the amendment, like the hon. member for Woodbine I feel that it is all very well to have a safety Act, but the essence of seeing that a safety Act reaches out into all the factories and industries of Ontario and assures the safety of the working man, is that we have adequate safety inspection. I, sir, have noticed in the past that there has been considerable delay in connection with the recruitment of safety inspectors.

I can think of an experience myself, just bringing this to a concrete example. I can think of an experience in which a man, who seemed to me perfectly qualified to be at least considered as a safety inspector, went through a process of delay in connection with his application. I do not say this is the responsibility of the hon. Minister, because it was going through a process among civil servants. He had applied for a position as safety inspector. I finally had to phone the deputy Minister, Mr. Tom Eberlee, who is a very able and dedicated civil servant, to find out whether the examination was still open or not. I was informed that an examination at that time was still being considered and safety inspectors could apply. But I know there was a state of confusion about the whole recruitment in this case. The man finally learned that more openings would be coming later.

The very essence of this bill, sir, is that there is a staff. We must consider the amendment by the hon. member for Woodbine. I would say, sir, that as we are considering his amendment we see that certainly the bill, in the way it is written, is a most necessary bill; there is no question of that.

But our concern again is that this will indeed be just window dressing if the department does not have the staff to carry it out. We, sir, like the hon. member for Woodbine, realize that it is not enough just to have ammunition, one also needs guns to fire the ammunition. It seems to us, sir, that the hon. Minister has not provided himself with the guns. Therefore to show the need to get the guns, the need to get the necessary staff, we, sir, will go along with the amendment of the hon. member for Woodbine.

Mr. Speaker: Before anyone else speaks to this amendment, I would like to say that in reading over the amendment it is difficult to determine if it is in order. It looks like a sort of hybrid amendment or motion because it seeks to delay the bill. It does not name a certain time, therefore it is not a hoist motion, and yet it is not a reasoned amendment, in my opinion.

Because of this opinion, I shall rule the amendment out of order. I do not want to be unduly restrictive on this matter with the hon. member, but I think that he should have done one of two things. If he had wished to amend the bill by referring it to committee, that would have been a reasoned amendment; or to have moved that it be not now read a third time, but six months hence, or three months hence; that would have made it a hoist motion.

But this amendment just seeks to delay the bill, and therefore on that ground I rule it out of order.

Motion agreed to; third reading of the bill.

Bill No. 6, An Act to amend The Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act.

Bill No. 8, An Act to amend The Plant Diseases Act.

Bill No. 9, An Act to amend The Department of Agriculture Act.

Bill No. 10, An Act to amend The Junior Farmer Establishment Act.

Bill No. 11, An Act to repeal The Slot Machines Act.

Bill No. 12, An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

Bill No. 13, An Act to amend The County Courts Act.

Bill No. 14, An Act to amend The Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act.

Bill No. 15, An Act to amend The Magistrates Act.

Bill No. 16, An Act to amend The Jurors Act.

Bill No. 17, An Act to amend The Dower Act.

Bill No. 18, An Act to amend The Extra-Judicial Services Act.

Bill No. 19, An Act to amend The Department of Energy Resources Act.

Bill No. 20, An Act to amend The Department of Travel and Publicity Act.

Bill No. 23, An Act to repeal The Female Refugees Act.

Bill No. 24, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Bill No. 25, An Act to amend The Mental Incompetency Act.

Bill No. 26, An Act to amend The Day Nurseries Act.

Bill No. 27, An Act to amend The Highway Improvement Act.

Bill No. 29, An Act to amend The Crown Attorneys Act.

Bill No. 30, An Act to amend The Killarney Recreational Reserve Act, 1962-63.

Bill No. 31, An Act to amend The Trees Act.

Bill No. 32, An Act to amend The Crown Timber Act.

Bill No. 33, An Act to amend The Territorial Division Act.

Bill No. 34, An Act to amend The Game and Fish Act, 1961-62.

Bill No. 36, An Act to amend The Department of Agriculture Act.

Bill No. 38, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Bill No. 40, An Act to amend The Gasoline Tax Act.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the hon. Provincial Treasurer's (Mr. Allan's) Budget address and considered it carefully. I have listened to the relatively small amount he has had to say on this bill to increase the gasoline tax in the province. I do not think he has made out a case for this increase in tax. I would say that if he feels that he wants more money from highway users, he should look to other sources, as we tried to indicate to him when this bill was at its second reading stage. But I think the tax is ill-considered and unnecessary at this time. Therefore I move, seconded by Mr. Gisborn:

That the motion for third reading of Bill No. 40 be amended by striking out the word "now" and adding thereto the words "six months hence."

I do not think this one will give you any difficulty, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Moved by Mr. Bryden, seconded by Mr. Gisborn, that the motion be amended by striking out the word "now" and adding thereto the words "six months hence".

As many as are in favour of the amendment will please say "aye". As many as are opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

For the benefit of the members who have just come into the House, I would just like to say that we are voting on Bill No. 40, An Act to amend The Gasoline Tax Act—an amendment moved by Mr. Bryden, seconded by Mr. Gisborn that the motion be amended by striking out the word "now" and adding thereto the words "that the bill be read six months hence."

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 14, 1964

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the east gallery, students from Bowmore Public School, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. We are just in routine proceedings.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to bring up a matter I feel is almost of national importance. I understand this Legislature is scheduled to meet tonight and we do know that in Canada, hockey is our national sport. In view of the fact that the Canadian team and one from the American side is meeting tonight, I think that probably it is possible to re-schedule our sittings to leave the hon. members and other people a chance to watch or go to that game. That is not only the game tonight, but the other games that will be scheduled in days to come.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know if it is feasible to rearrange the sittings but I feel that especially in view of tonight's game and the game on Thursday, we could rearrange our sitting schedule to suit those times. After all, the game of hockey in Canada, Mr. Speaker, is our national game and I think most of us would like to view this.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), which is somewhat more directly related to the business of the House.

I would like to ask him if it is intended to proceed with the second reading of Bills Nos. Pr11 and Pr14 at this session of the Legislature.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the disposition of these two bills is still under consideration.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions, notice of which has been given to the appropriate hon. Ministers. The first one is to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond): Has The Department of Health investigated the recent hospitalization of employees of Allied Chemical of Canada Limited, near Sarnia, because of the ill effects of phosgene gas? Furthermore, have complaints been raised from the public regarding dangerous air pollution? If so, what action has The Department of Health taken to investigate the situation and to remedy it?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): The Department of Labour and The Department of Health have had the new Allied Chemical of Canada plant near Sarnia under close supervision during construction and since it commenced operation. There have been no incidents of health problems related to phosgene used in the process. One employee was found to be allergic to TDI—toluene di-isocyanate, a plastic chemical—and prior to operating, several outside maintenance men were under observation only as the result of exposure to this chemical when cleaning pipes.

One complaint was received regarding a "blow off" which occurred on March 23. A small quantity of gas was released into the air. No ill effects occurred to either employees or persons outside the plant. Such events have not occurred at other plants operated by this company and are not to be expected at this new plant now that it is fully in operation. Nevertheless close supervision will be maintained with the fullest co-operation of the company.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart): What action has The Department of Agriculture or the Milk Industry Board taken with regard to the harassment by dairies of milk producers who use co-operative transport in the twin-city area of Kitchener-Waterloo?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): This matter is under intensive investigation by the milk industry board and a hearing with the producers, some of whom are members of the twin-city transport co-operative, and dairy representatives is scheduled for 2.15 p.m. Wednesday, April 15.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Health, notice of which has been given: Can the hon. Minister indicate whether there is truth in the statement that certain employees at the Ontario Hospital in Whitby earn take-home pay of $220 per month, and is the hon. Minister aware of any reported employee unrest at Whitby, Hamilton and North Bay mental hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In answer to the question, I would say yes. There are certain employees at the Ontario Hospital, Whitby, earning take-home pay of $220 per month. These are junior or unskilled workers such as laundress 1, maid, typist 1, hospital aid 1, kitchen porter, and those in such classifications. In other words, those classes where the salary is less than $3,000 per year.

In answer to the second part of the question, it has been indicated to me that there is concern and unrest, largely related to salary rates, at the hospitals mentioned. Since these are matters coming within the purview of the civil service commission, the complaints have been referred to that commission for study and consideration.

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, as I undertook before the House rose for the Easter recess, I place before you a statement regarding matters as they affect the hospital situation in Ontario, with particular reference to the state of affairs within Metro Toronto.

As in former sessions, it had been my intention and I had arranged that the hospital services commission would appear before a meeting of the standing committee on health, and that the entire time of a meeting would be given to placing before the hon. members a picture of the entire hospital situation in the province.

Because there appears to be in the minds of certain hon. members, and others, the belief that the government has not provided adequate support for hospitals in the province and, particularly, for hospitals in Metro

Toronto, I believe it necessary to put before the hon. members certain facts pertaining to this subject. It may well be that much benefit could still derive from having the Ontario Hospital Services Commission appear before the standing committee on health for an even more definitive review of the entire hospital situation in the province.

I do believe it necessary to point out that the government has never tried to minimize the seriousness of the hospital situation here in Metro Toronto. I have consistently emphasized the maldistribution of beds in the province, and I have clearly stated that a shortage does exist in Metro Toronto. In the first few months of my incumbency of this portfolio, I said to a public meeting of the Ontario Hospital Association in the Royal York Hotel here:

With this year's construction, there will be five beds per 1,000 population across the province, but this large metropolitan area will still have an acute shortage problem.

I further stated at that time:

Now that municipal treasuries are relieved of the burden of hospital-operating deficits, municipal councils might be encouraged to review their policies of giving construction grants to hospitals and might scale them upwards.

In this House on March 7, 1963, I made the following statement—it can be found in Hansard at page 1470:

Now my hon. friend has pointed out there is a very grave shortage in Metropolitan Toronto, that the greatest shortage exists here of any place in Ontario. This, sir, existed much more widely in the province of Ontario on January 1, 1959. But the difference between Metropolitan Toronto and the rest of the municipalities of Ontario—where lives three-quarters of Ontario's population—is this: other municipalities have found their own financing and have gone ahead with the construction of the hospitals till today the only place where an acute shortage exists with relation to the rest of the province is in Metropolitan Toronto.

And as late as March 4, 1964, I said to this House:

Last year, and largely because of the need in Metropolitan Toronto, this government increased the capital construction grants to hospitals by 60 per cent to $3,200 a bed and $3,200 per 300 square feet of certain designated service areas. This, on a per bed basis, in the average hospital building project, works out to $5,500; and this, in the average case, is one-third of the cost of construction.

Some hon. members have already spoken of what government has done in the hospital field and some have proposed methods of dealing with problems which still exist. Most of these methods have already been studied and seriously considered by government because this matter was not gone into lightly nor was it forgotten when the Ontario Hospital Care Insurance Plan came into being.

I know of no other matter affecting the life and welfare of our people that has been given as much attention as has health and hospital care, except it be education. You will surely understand, therefore, that little that is known anywhere in the world about hospitals has escaped our notice and every scheme and plan for financing has been given much thought and careful study.

From the statements of some hon. members, and for that matter from newspaper suggestions as well, I gather they believe that government should build and therefore "own" general hospitals. This would mean, of course, that government would then be in the business of operating those hospitals. May I say emphatically that nothing could be worse for hospitals and for our people.

This is an opinion shared by many equally knowledgeable and much more deeply involved in the hospital situation than are we in the department, as evidenced in a statement made by Mr. R. R. Jessup, the immediate past president of the Ontario Hospitals Association as he spoke to the annual meeting of the Oshawa General Hospital board in Oshawa. His speech is quoted in the Oshawa Times of March 26, 1964 and I read an extract therefrom:

Addressing the gathering was Mr. R. R. Jessup of Sudbury, a stockbroker and immediate past president of the Ontario Hospitals Association.

"Voluntary hospitals," he said meant: "People working together for the common good.

"It points out in no uncertain terms to government and to others who would have us literally spoon-fed for the rest of our lives, that within reasonable limits we are quite capable of charting our own course; not only in this hospital business but in other areas which some people are already inclined to write off to the ever-widening cloud of bureaucracy."

It was, Mr. Jessup said, an accomplishment that voluntary hospitals had been set up "without any measure of authoritarian direction."

Canadians, he said, had been able to establish a standard of hospital care which was second to none. No other words could say with greater clarity what the voluntary hospital system had given this country.

The advent of various government-sponsored medical insurance schemes had resulted in more people receiving the care they need—care which a few years ago they may not have been able to afford, Mr. Jessup noted.

Another product of . . . government hospital legislation . . . had been an elimination of annual deficits in hospital budgeting.

"They are now free to concentrate on updating their facilities and acquiring new modern equipment, to be used by our up-to-date physicians and surgeons who are themselves continually moving ahead with medical progress," he explained.

The government bill, Mr. Jessup noted, had been "conditional" stating Ottawa would share hospital service costs but not the sums needed for buildings, land or equipment.

"There are still those," he said, "who feel that the responsibility for the hospital's capital expenditures is still the responsibility of government. This, of course, is not true."

Traditionally in Ontario, hospitals have been built and operated by voluntary boards, by religious orders and sometimes by municipalities, and I believe that herein lies much of the strength of the hospital movement in our province.

Because government has always believed that this was a good method of providing hospitals, it began to support hospitals by capital grants in 1947, and has steadily increased these grants as resources were available.

Then government brought into being an insurance plan so that hospital-operating costs would be assured, and that our people would be spared the sometimes catastrophic costs attendant upon hospitalization. The insurance plan was never intended to pay for the cost of hospital construction.

When the Ontario hospital plan was being considered, this matter of hospital ownership was again reviewed and government's position was reaffirmed. On January 29, 1957 this was made clear in the press release dealing with the proposal for hospital care insurance of the Ontario government.

An extract taken therefrom, states:

A hospital care programme of this nature has two major objectives: the removal for the patient of the economic barrier to essential hospital care, and the solving of the financial problems of hospitals in the provision of high quality services.

In achieving this second goal, it is the firm belief of this government that local ownership, management, and control of hospitals are essential. It is the determined policy of the government of Ontario that ownership of hospitals shall remain a responsibility of local communities and charitable organizations.

As evidence of this stated policy and of government's intention to continue it, I would again point out to you the fact that government in 1958 doubled its per bed grant for construction; again in 1959, it further greatly increased those grants for construction, and only last year it increased those grants by a further 60 per cent.

Now, a good deal has been said, sir, of my reference to the number of beds per 1,000 population as if to infer there was something sinister in this method of calculation. This is a common and reasonable method widely used throughout the world. Some sort of yardstick has to be used, and this method—relating beds to 1,000 population—is the one most commonly used.

Here in Ontario, based on various well-known and widely-used formulae, it is believed that: for community hospitals, four beds per 1,000 population is an acceptable figure; for district hospitals, 4.5 beds per 1,000 population is an acceptable figure; and for regional hospitals, five beds per 1,000 population is an acceptable figure. Here the regional hospitals are those mainly in the downtown area which are connected with the university medical school.

But, in every case, the particular circumstances of the community, or district, are considered, e.g., age of population, special health considerations and other factors. The bed needs are then calculated and stated as the "weighted bed standard."

As examples of this method, I will quote the weighted bed standards for active treatment beds in certain places.

In Kitchener the weighted bed standard is 4.9 per 1,000; in Kingston the weighted bed standard is 5.1; in Lakehead the weighted bed standard is 4.9; in London the weighted bed standard is 5.1; in North Bay the weighted bed standard is 4.8; in Ottawa the weighted bed standard is 4.9; in St.

Catharines the weighted bed standard is 4.9; in Sudbury the weighted bed standard is 4.5; while, in Metro Toronto, it is the standard 5.0.

In this respect, it is rather interesting to compare Ontario with some other jurisdictions.

In the United States, there are at present 3.5 beds per 1,000 population, and there is a ceiling for federal aid. Assistance is provided to a top limit of 4.5 hospital beds per 1,000 population, and when this figure is reached, no further government aid is given. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the government of the United States, the nation credited with having the highest standard of living in the world, believes that 4.5 beds per 1,000 population is adequate, and this figure has been determined after some of the most careful and exhaustive studies of the question ever made by any government.

In England, there are 3.9 beds per 1,000 population, and the hospital plan for England and Wales is based on the assumption that an adequate service can be provided with 3.3 active treatment beds per 1,000 population.

I do not quote these figures in any sense to suggest that we in Ontario have aimed too high, but from them I am bound to wonder if our people are less healthy or need more hospital care than those living in the nation, which, as I have just said, is supposed to have the highest standard of living in the world. I have only cited these statistics because they are often put to me in the questions which more and more of our people are asking, when they view the steadily rising costs of hospital care; questions for which I have no answer.

With the inception of the hospital insurance plan, it was expected that some pressure would be exerted for admissions to hospital as is evidenced by a statement made by the then Prime Minister, the hon. Mr. Frost:

With the introduction of this programme, there will rest a responsibility upon every citizen, whether he be potential patient, hospital administrator, or physician, to work within the spirit of the intention of the programme, to see that essential care is provided to all but to make certain that costs are not necessarily increased by the provision of unnecessary care.

We have some reason to believe that our hospital facilities and accommodation are not being used as well and as properly as they ought to be. It is stated from time to time that some of our beds are occupied by patients who do not need them and should not be in them.

We have discussed this problem with the medical profession in Metro and have found the doctors, too, are most concerned about this. They have given much thought to this and are anxious to co-operate with hospital administration, OHSC, and the department to the end that a satisfactory solution may be found to this vexing problem.

We have heard much about hospital construction costs. These are high and appear to be rising as are most building costs.

The average cost per bed for Metro is $20,000; deduct 15 per cent for furnishing and equipment, $3,000; so actual cost of construction per bed is $17,000.

This 15 per cent is deducted for furnishing and equipping hospitals because these are depreciable items and are paid for at the agreed upon per diem rate. Thus it cannot be expected that they would be paid for by capital grant and also at the per diem rate. It is often apparently overlooked that every hospital has what is known as "preferred income." This derives from private and semi-private accommodation, for which the hospital is authorized to charge over and above the rate allowed for standard ward care. Fifty per cent of this extra charge is left with the hospitals as preferred income.

This should not be scoffed at, or lightly brushed aside. In large measure, out of this income, over the five-year life of the Ontario plan so far, hospitals have reduced capital debt from $68 million in 1958 to $46 million at the end of 1962, and they now hold a total of $16.7 million to their credit in operating account. In the average 300-bed hospital, this preferred income would amount to approximately $58,500 in a year, 50 per cent of which is now left with the hospital.

Now, some facts concerning hospitals in Metro and in Ontario outside of Metro:

Total beds in Metro were 8,000 in 1959 and 10,950 in 1963. Total beds in Ontario were 31,530 in 1959 and 43,669 in 1963. Therefore, outside of Toronto in Ontario, there were 23,530 beds in 1959 and 32,719 beds in 1963.

In 1959, Metropolitan Toronto halted all capital grants for hospital construction. Since 1959, many counties and other municipalities have been paying capital grants to their hospitals and many of their representatives have told me they undertook to do this because the introduction of the Ontario hospital care insurance plan had relieved them of all responsibility for operating deficits.

As evidence of this, I shall place on the record of this House, as an appendix to this statement, Appendix "A"—a complete statement of all grants paid by municipalities to their hospitals for construction since 1959, but a few examples are worthy of note.

Looking at counties first: the county of Peel since 1959 has provided $4,210,000; Halton, $3,214,000; Middlesex, $1,350,000; Norfolk county, $1,909,334; Ontario county, $1,675,532; York county, $1,360,000.

Cities and towns: Hamilton has provided $10,217,000; Ottawa, $4,323,000; North Bay, $2,192,000; Port Arthur, Sault Ste. Marie, Kitchener, Waterloo, Peterborough, St. Catharines, Sarnia and Windsor have all provided in excess of $1 million. Metro Toronto has provided $2.3 million towards the construction of Riverdale hospital, which is a municipal hospital. North York township, by a vote of its people, set aside one mill yearly for ten years, and last year this amounted to $1,679,000. Scarborough provided $660,000; Etobicoke township, $325,000; York township, $75,000; Weston, $25,000; the town of New Toronto, $25,000.

In this same time provincial grants for construction have totalled $63,847,000, and federal grants $45,000,000. In addition, let me remind hon. members that each year since 1959 a special capital grant of $75 per bed has also been given to every hospital. This has amounted to approximately $15 million.

Then, too, the provincial government met by far the greater part of the cost of construction of Princess Margaret Hospital here with no municipal assistance. And this was one of the most costly hospitals ever built in the province of Ontario. It may not be amiss to note here, too, that in this same period of time the province has spent more than $70 million on construction of hospitals for the mentally disordered, care for whom is also provided under the Ontario plan. All of this cost was financed by the province and, although this accommodation is eligible for federal grant assistance, not one dollar has been received from Ottawa for this purpose, the total federal allocation being turned over to general hospital construction.

Prior to 1959, for any hospital in Ontario, as well as those in Metro, to end the year without an operating deficit was the exception and, indeed, meeting these deficits was a heavy burden which steadily plagued every hospital board and many municipal councils to which boards had to turn to meet these deficits.

In the case of the Toronto hospitals, their operating deficit for several years exceeded $1 million yearly, but, since the inception of the hospital care insurance plan, operating deficits are the exception rather than the rule and, in addition, besides being relieved of this financial burden, municipalities were given unconditional grants to help them meet a large share of their indigent costs.

In order that the record may be right, Metro Toronto hospitals, by and large, do not service a greater percentage of their case load from beyond the geographic boundaries than do other comparable hospitals.

Comparing the hospitals associated with medical schools outside of Toronto with those in Toronto, we find as follows: Toronto General Hospital 26.8 per cent, Toronto St. Michael's Hospital 14.2 per cent, Toronto Western Hospital 15.1 per cent, Hospital for Sick Children—a unique hospital in the province—27.4 per cent. This is an overall average for the Toronto teaching hospitals of 21.8 per cent.

Queen's University, having an association with Kingston General Hospital, looks after 49 per cent of its case load from beyond its geographic boundaries, and Kingston Hotel Dieu Hospital, the other teaching hospital at Queen's, 39.4 per cent; showing an average for Kingston teaching hospitals of 44.3 per cent.

With regard to Ottawa University Medical School, Ottawa General Hospital takes 29.2 per cent of its case load from beyond the geographic boundary, and Ottawa Civic Hospital 14.8 per cent; making the average for Ottawa 20.3 per cent.

The University of Western Ontario Medical School—its teaching hospitals, London Victoria Hospital 32.4 per cent, and London St. Joseph's Hospital 25.5 per cent; with the average for London 28.8 per cent.

Thus it will be seen that in every medical school centre, except one, a greater percentage of their patients come from beyond their geographic boundaries than do those treated in Toronto teaching hospitals. These figures are taken from the official statistical information supplied us by every hospital, figures which will go into the public and official record.

The percentage of persons from outside the actual area cared for in the following hospitals is: Toronto East General, 3.4 per cent; Northwestern General, 3.9 per cent; St. Joseph's, 8.3 per cent; Queensway, 15.3 per cent; and Branson, 23.9 per cent; as compared with Hamilton, 16.5 per cent; Sudbury, 47.4 per cent; North Bay, 27.6 per cent; Cornwall, 34.0 per cent; Peterborough, 43.0 per cent; Windsor, 17.1 per cent; and Sault Ste. Marie, 14.7 per cent.

Here again, it can be seen that the hospitals in Metro Toronto vis-à-vis comparable hospitals in other communities do not differ in respect of the percentage of their case load coming from beyond the geographic boundaries.

When we went into this hospital plan as a province, we believed we were going into a partnership. We were encouraged in this by the federal government stating it would give a certain grant "if the province would match it". This led us to believe partnership meant equality of effort, but Mr. Pearson, if he is quoted rightly in the Toronto Globe and Mail of April 11, 1964, states his government cannot provide higher grants for capital construction costs.

I believe the government is justified in believing that its programme of steadily increasing grants, as the resources of the province become available, has been a good programme as evidenced by the fact that in the province, with the exception of Metro Toronto, there are sufficient beds. I believe the government can rightly take some credit for having provided valuable assistance to hospital boards in achieving their objective.

By increasing capital grants last year by 60 per cent, this government moved forward vigorously to assist Metro Toronto mainly, since here is the only real bed shortage in the province.

Certain proposals have been made by many people by way of suggestions for dealing with the problem of the shortage in Metro Toronto. I think it is fair to say that all of these proposals, and many others, have been considered very carefully on previous occasions, but I think it reasonable to mention some of them and give, very briefly, our thinking concerning them:

1. Convert student residences to hospital accommodation: This has been put forward on occasion. It is true as one editor wrote that I, two years ago, said in this House that these residences were outmoded and had no part in the present scheme of nurse education. Mr. Speaker, my opinion in this matter was not that of the majority. A great storm of protest followed in the wake of that statement, and it came from parents, students and teachers. It may be that, in certain circumstances, residences would not be necessary, but to take this as a generality would, I am now sure, do irreparable harm to our system of nurse education.

But these residences would not readily lend themselves to conversion to hospital rooms. The corridors and the doors are not usually wide enough to permit movement of hospital beds or stretchers, although I know that two hospitals are now using part of their nurses' residence during extensive building programmes. It has been pointed out by the administrators in both cases that these are emergency measures only and should not be construed as anything else.

To change these residences would be very costly, if it were possible. It might be argued that ambulatory patients could be housed in these residences without too much alteration. The great majority of patients, when they become ambulatory, should be out of the general hospital.

2. What I had proposed to say about Sunnybrook Hospital would not altogether apply because of events that have transpired in the past few weeks making this situation most unclear. As of Friday, March 13, 1964, the federal director of treatment services told our commissioner for hospital services by telephone, in my presence, that 48 beds were available in Sunnybrook Hospital and that Wellesley Hospital was negotiating for their use. I can say too that the Minister of Veterans' Affairs, a few months ago, stated to me that on any one day, 150-200 "civilian" patients are under treatment in Sunnybrook Hospital—that is patients who have no other right to be, other than the fact they had served in the forces but had no entitlement to DVA hospital services.

I have had further correspondence with the Minister of Veterans' Affairs and I shall put this on the record.

This is routine correspondence, sir, and hardly worth taking the time of the House to read it. I shall put it in the unofficial record.

3. It has been proposed that this government should build general hospitals. Apart from this being a direct deviation and departure from the policy of government outlined when the plan came into operation and reaffirmed from time to time since then, I would say in my opinion, it would be a mistake and would do great harm to the splendid hospital movement we have built up in this province.

That this opinion is shared by others is evident in the statement of Mr. Jessup, read earlier. The entire statement I shall put on the record. Perhaps some hon. members will be surprised to know that the hospital movement in Ontario is the envy of many jurisdictions, and many agree with us that it is to be envied because of the interest and active involvement of great numbers of people.

This is not to say that I believe hospitals should be dependent upon charity for their building. Indeed, many times I have stated that long ago the hospital movement needed an Egerton Ryerson just as did the schools in his day. I believe, and this government believes, in the "Three partnership method" of building hospitals. I sincerely believe the majority of Metro Council believe in this partnership, but the federal government has not shown evidence that it believes in an equal partnership.

4. Riverdale Hospital: It was rather disconcerting to learn that in this hospital there are 450 beds for convalescent care and none of them in use. The director now assures us he could put 100 of these beds in service immediately and the remaining 350 in two or three weeks following that time. These beds are not in use because of certain internal problems of administration and the commission has offered to help the administration clear these up. These difficulties have nothing to do with this government nor the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, nor are they caused by any shortage of staff.

Dr. McCracken, the director, has stated he expects no difficulty here. The problems lay with the Metro administration of the hospital, now removed since the passage of the Riverdale Hospital bill at this session of the House. This will mean 450 active beds can be cleared for patients. This should have been done before now if the administration had tackled the job. This is not, and never was, a government responsibility.

5. Associated nursing homes: Careful consideration has been given to the proposal that beds in nursing homes could be made available for convalescent care. These homes are not equipped to provide such care and, therefore, would do nothing to relieve the shortage, in this way. It may be that they could fit into the general scheme by providing custodial bed care thus indirectly relieving active beds and this is still under study.

To summarize then: The government has never assumed responsibility for building general hospitals, nor has it ever adopted this as a policy. It has provided assistance through grants, steadily raising these grants in keeping with available resources.

All of Ontario in 1959 faced a need for more beds in as great degree as did Metro Toronto.

Metro Toronto hospitals in no way differ in admissions from other comparable hospitals; indeed many other hospitals treat far more patients from beyond their geographic boundaries than do Metro hospitals.

How do we propose to deal with the problem? First: The doctors of Metro Toronto have undertaken to co-operate in every way possible with hospital administration, OHSC and this department to do everything in their power to ensure that every patient in need of emergency treatment is cared for; and also that the best possible use is made of every bed. To this end, they have submitted certain recommendations to us which will be placed before the hospital administrators for their consideration and, we hope, their implementation.

2. Immediate use of 450 beds at Riverdale Hospital for convalescent care.

3. Use of Sunnybrook 48-bed unit by Wellesley Hospital. And further discussions, I may add, will be entered into with the Minister of Veterans' Affairs as soon as the federal government has crystallized its policy.

4. Home care plan throughout all of Metro Toronto that will be looking after 125 patients on any one day. This will be the programme in this first year, but it will expand to care for 250 patients on any one day in the second year of operation.

5. Continued use of beds in private nursing homes in Metro area for chronic care—as many as are needed for this purpose and to the greatest extent of their usefulness—keeping in mind, as I have already said—that this is definitely limited. All of this will have the effect of releasing about 1,000 active treatment beds in the general hospitals of Metropolitan Toronto.

I think it not amiss to point out that, with the exception of the home care plan, all of the measures already mentioned could, and should, have been undertaken by hospital and municipal authorities. Many hospitals complain about the time consumed in finding other necessary accommodation for certain patients who no longer need hospital care but do need nursing home or other such care. Doctors have complained about their difficulties in having convalescent and chronic care patients transferred to their proper facilities. The Department of Health, through OHSC, will now go thoroughly into these matters with the doctors and with hospital authorities in an effort to establish better exchange and transfer and a better flow of patients. Here again, the doctors have assured me of all possible help and co-operation.

6. As an incentive to boards planning expansion or new hospitals, to bring their plans forward to an earlier start, the government of Ontario will offer, in addition to the present grants, a loan up to $5,000 per active treatment bed. This loan will be repayable over a period of years out of preferred income, referred to earlier. Those utilizing the loan offered will retain only 25 per cent of their share of preferred income instead of the present 50 per cent—the remainder will be used to repay their loan. If the hospitals wish to apply other monies that may come to them on the loan, this will be possible and will liquidate the debt in a shorter period of time.

For Metro hospitals, taking $20,000 as the cost of the average bed, help available will now be: To provincial grants, $5,300—and we are using the figure of $5,300 to allow for a full margin of error. Provincial loan of $5,000; federal grant, $2,700; Metro grant, recently announced, $2,700, leaving approximately 20 per cent for the boards to raise. Many boards have signified that this is quite possible.

As a result of this offer, already nine hospital boards have assured me that they will begin construction sooner than they had planned—two are now enabled to begin immediately. Six more will be ready this fall and the remaining one will be ready early in 1965. All of these projects have been greatly accelerated since their planning called for a start 1967 and beyond. These will provide 1,955 new beds within 18 to 24 months after construction begins.

The situation now will be that 236 beds are now under construction for completion this year, and 773 beds are now under construction for completion 1965 and early 1966. Another 1,955 beds will begin construction fall 1964, for completion 1966 and early 1967, and there will be a further 160 psychiatric beds not included above.

One hundred beds are to be added to Downsview hospital by the Workmen's Compensation Board—making a total of 3,224 new beds by early 1967, within Metro Toronto.

Planning of a further 1,050 beds for 1967-1968 is in the discussion stage. If these are approved and go forward, in 1970 there would then be a total of 4,274 additional beds, more than enough to wipe out the deficit—3,930—as projected in the Calvin Report for that year.

Construction of so many new beds will call for greatly increased numbers of hospital personnel. Ways and means to increase facilities for nurse education have been under study and discussion with hospitals and the College of Nurses for some time. Planning based on these studies and discussions is now being undertaken with a view to having sufficient trained personnel available when they are needed.

I am quite confident, and this confidence is shared by the hospital people concerned, that the problem which has existed and still exists here in Metro Toronto, is well on the way to solution.

I want to note at this time my appreciation to all hospital board members and administrations for their helpful co-operation so willingly given us at all times. Even at the risk of being considered biased, I wish to express my thanks to the medical profession—District 11 of the Ontario Medical Association—for their help and their very useful suggestions. I refer to those who have carefully considered the problem in depth and without carping criticism came forward and offered all possible assistance. I believe out of all our discussions will come a new understanding of the need for close co-operation of all involved in the establishment and operation of hospitals and the provision of high quality treatment services to our people.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, before we proceed with the regular business of the House, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister would clarify the question as to whether or not there will be a night session tonight and other evenings this week?

And while I am on my feet, I wonder if I might also ask the hon. Prime Minister if it is his intention to schedule an early debate on the crime report?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I had another announcement to make before the orders of the day and then I intended to deal with the business of the House. However, I will deal with this first.

I wanted to tell the House that the government has appointed two firms to deal with our pavilion, the Ontario pavilion which will be erected for the World's Fair in Montreal in 1967. They are a Toronto firm of architects, Fairfield and Dubois, and a firm of industrial designers, Stewart, Morrison and Roberts Limited. These two firms will start work immediately on the exterior and the interior of the pavilion which we will create at the World's Fair. The regulations of the fair permit erection of a building that can only remain for the duration of the fair, that is April 28 to October 27. Therefore in designing what we want to promote, the interests of this province, we really need people to design an exterior that will survive and be suitable for this period of time. But the interior design in this type of building is perhaps of more importance than the exterior design.

The theme of the World's Fair as established is "Man and His World." It is our intention to make Ontario's contribution one that will deal with the progress of the citizens of this province and man's development in many fields such as industry, science, recreation and the arts. We intend to make this pavilion as reflective of our Ontario as it is possible.

We will of course, use our own designers in designing it. It will reflect, as I have said, the heritage of what man has created in this province. We will use, as far as possible, material that comes from Ontario and is distinctive. Of course the staff in the pavilion, when it is staffed, will be recruited from all parts of Ontario.

The Department of Economics and Development is in charge of the project and will work with The Department of Tourism and Information and The Department of Public Works.

In a more general way, I can tell the House that it is estimated that the World's Fair will draw about 35 million people during the six months it is in existence. If the hon. members just think of its location, on an island in Montreal in relation to Ontario and to our traffic arteries, and that it will draw from a heavily populated part of the United States, they can see the potential as far as the tourist industry of Ontario is concerned. That is, people coming up from the south, from the New England states, into Quebec to attend the fair and will be going home through Ontario via various circuitous routes—this applies to the midwest of the United States as well since we have exits at the Niagara frontier, at Detroit, Port Huron, Sault Ste. Marie. By then the causeway will be completed at Fort Frances and it appears to me as if this could give very large impetus indeed to the tourist business in the province of Ontario in our centennial year.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Roberts: On the other question: there is a night session tonight. I assumed this would be taken for granted. I believe I stated early in the session that we would have them on Tuesday and Thursday nights until further notice and I believe I have informed some people by telephone. If it is going to cause any great dislocation because hon. members have not known about it, I am flexible in the area, but we have plenty to do and unless it is going to cause some great dislocation, I would propose to proceed.

Hon. members will notice that the fourth order on the order paper should be altered. There is a misprint there. It refers to "Consideration of the Report of the Ontario Police Commission for the year 1963." That should read: "Consideration of the Report of the Ontario Police Commission Report on Organized Crime." That is the fourth order on the order paper and it is my intention that this order be called on Thursday. We will have a night session Thursday night to provide whatever time is necessary to debate this particular order.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The seventeenth order. House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, just to make the record complete. We will deal with the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare first and then Information and Tourism, both of which departments have made a start; and following that will be Energy Resources Management, within which we will deal with the estimates of the water resources commission. Those are the three departments and the order in which they will be taken.

Mr. MacDonald: And Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, everything that comes under that department.

On vote 1806:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, before we complete consideration of this vote, which undoubtedly is one of the most important votes coming under the jurisdiction of The Department of Public Welfare, I would like to make some observations on a subject that I have referred to before in this House. I will try to avoid repeating what I have said on previous occasions, but the subject is important enough that I think it merits extensive consideration from the House.

This is the question of poverty, and I raise it particularly at this time because there is no question in the world that the people who receive benefit under vote 1806 are the dispossessed of the earth in this province. They are at the bottom even of the hierarchy of poverty. They are the ones at the very bottom of the heap, eking out a bare subsistence on inadequate allowances that are hardly sufficient to keep body and soul together.

We have reached the point in this country where we do not allow anybody to actually starve to death on the street, but we do almost the next thing. We give them allowances that are so small that it is almost impossible to avoid starvation. It is very difficult for people such as ourselves who have never faced stark, blinding poverty—or I believe that most of us never have—to visualize the situation in which these people find themselves.

The newspapers of Toronto—and perhaps elsewhere but I am familiar mainly with those of Toronto—have, I think, done a useful service in trying to call attention to people living in poverty, and more particularly those at the bottom of the heap, those living on what we now euphemistically call general welfare assistance. We used to call it relief and I think the difference in the terminology is of no very great significance.

I have here an article that appeared some time ago in the Toronto Telegram by Mr. Peter Reilly, who at that time was a staff reporter for the Telegram and is now with the CBC. I will not read the article, but it was very provocative—one of the first in this field and it was headed: "The Good Life: Fact or Fable?"

A more recent story that came to my attention appeared a few months ago in the Toronto Daily Star. I do not have a copy of it with me, but I do not really need a copy because it made a very strong impression on me. It related to the case of an individual—a man, I believe in his forties or fifties, about my own age, about the age of many hon. members in this House—who through misfortune had lost his job, had used up all his resources and had to go on welfare. It was hard, really, to appreciate the traumatic experience of this man, who had always been accustomed to paying his own bills and looking after himself, to whom it became a real issue as to whether or not he could afford to buy a cake of soap, or whether he could afford to take a street car to travel a substantial distance looking for a job. These little things were big issues with him, because he had so little money on an allowance of $55 or $60 a month. He had to consider carefully if he could afford the price of a street car ticket.

This group in the Legislature has been attempting to bring the problem of poverty to the attention of the government. I do not know that we have had very much success to date, but we have been hammering away at it as effectively as we could all through this session and before this session. I was given the privilege by my hon. colleagues in the New Democratic group to make the first statement for our group on this general problem. I did so in the Throne Speech debate back on January 27 and carried over on January 28. My leader, the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), and others in the group have followed up on the problem. I will give fair warning, Mr. Chairman, that we intend to continue to follow up and to continue to bring the problem to the attention of the government until effective action is taken, not merely to deal with some of the worst manifestations of poverty, not merely to provide minor palliatives that prevent people from starving to death, but to get down to business to lick the problem of poverty and eliminate it in this province.

I was happy to note just before the recess, when we were dealing with this same vote, No. 1806, that the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) joined in the campaign which we have been trying to conduct of calling attention, and of repeatedly calling attention, to the problem of poverty. He made substantial reference to exciting new developments in the United States, in the form of the war on poverty first enunciated by the late President Kennedy and now being energetically prosecuted by President Johnson.

One point that appeared to have escaped the hon. member for Parkdale was that his American references were all to the federal government in the United States. He was proposing to the government opposite that they should take an example from the federal government in the United States and I would agree with him. I think there is much to learn from the programme of the late President Kennedy as amplified by President Johnson. But let us also bear in mind that we have a federal government in this country, and I think it is regrettable that the hon. member for Parkdale and his hon. colleagues would not also use some of their eloquence in trying to persuade the federal government of Canada to pay some attention to the problem of poverty.

If there is any government that is more unconscious of the problem than the government of Ontario, I would say it is the government of Canada. They have shown no disposition whatever to try to tackle this problem, yet surely this is the place from which leadership should come, just as it is coming in the United States, in the first instance, from the federal government. Well, I will not put it in terms of the first instance, but in terms of first responsibility the federal government must give leadership if we are to have an effective campaign against poverty. It seems to me rather curious that Liberals would berate the government opposite for paying no attention to the problem, whereas their own colleagues in Ottawa are equally unmindful of the situation.

However, I do not want to give the impression that I think this government has no responsibility in the field. In fact, I would like to call to the attention of the government, and the House, the fact that the first concrete plans in what is now described as the war against poverty in the United States were undertaken not by the federal government but by a state government—in the state of North Carolina. I think that this government in Ontario might very well accept North Carolina's initiative and enterprise as an example for itself.

I would say the same to other provincial governments in Canada, and other state governments in the United States. This is not exclusively a federal problem; it is a problem for all levels of government and for all citizens. A provincial government such as the government of Ontario can make an important contribution by taking the first steps, just as the state of North Carolina made an important contribution by taking the first steps in the United States. Perhaps the first step by this province will lead to much needed action at the federal level, just as the North Carolina action in the United States has now become extremely useful to the federal administration there, in working out its plans.

In relation to that programme in North Carolina, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read a few extracts from an item which appeared in the New York Times on March 18 of this year:

The federal government's war on poverty was little more than a vague idea when the people of North Carolina decided to act on their own last fall. Now, with the federal attack on poverty still just getting underway, North Carolina is quietly moving to break the cycle of poverty in which so many children are trapped. The state's $14 million assault on poverty, the first such state plan in the nation, has not gone unnoticed by those who have put together President Johnson's programme.

The federal planners, frequently disorganized and arguing among themselves, have turned from time to time to the men who planned the North Carolina programme: Governor Terry Sanford, Paul Ylvisaker of the Ford Foundation, the principal contributor to the state's anti-poverty campaign and others. Copies of the booklet outlining the North Carolina plan have become dog-eared in recent weeks as federal planners have sought ideas on how best to combat poverty.

I will skip some paragraphs in the item and read the following:

"I have come to believe," the governor said [that is Governor Sanford of North Carolina] "that charity and relief are not the best answers to human suffering; that the schools are not the answer so long as only a third or a half of our students finish school—that the wealth of America is not the answer if many families have fifty-some cents a day per person for all expenses.

"In North Carolina," the governor went on, "we want to go into a few communities and say to the leaders of schools, government, welfare, health, charity, 'Look, let's get together. Let us see if together in a few neighbourhoods near here we cannot break the cycle of poverty and give these children a better chance'."

Fifty-one communities, both urban and rural, put together suggested plans of action. By mid April, those administering the programme will have chosen ten of those communities as sites for projects entitled to financial help. The local communities will operate the interracial projects and underwrite part of the costs.

The proposed projects include preschool teaching centres designed to offset bad home environments; counselling and job training; remedial education centres; adult education courses and services in budgeting and home care for low income families. Funds also will be used to establish a learning laboratory near both the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Duke University at Durham, to study methods of teaching slow learners and problem children and to improve teaching instruction.

The anti-poverty planners will also seek to recruit college graduates to work for a year or two in the project communities as part of a sort of domestic peace corps. All of these North Carolina projects, just as the federal programme unveiled today by President Johnson, will focus largely on young people, seeking to help them escape from poverty in which their families have been trapped for generations.

While generally considered one of the wealthiest and most progressive of southern states, North Carolina has widespread poverty, particularly among Negroes, who constitute a quarter of the population. "Definitions of poverty vary," the state anti-poverty planners noted in their policy booklet, "but, whatever the definition, the record in North Carolina is distressing."

Mr. Chairman, I think one could say the same with regard to the province of Ontario.

Whatever definition we use of poverty, the record of Ontario and of all of Canada is distressing. There have been a number of attempts made in United States to determine the magnitude of poverty and, of course, the figure one arrives at depends largely on the definition one uses as to what constitutes poverty.

The lowest definition, which anybody who has studied the problem has come up with, is that there are 30 million men, women and children in the United States at this time who are living in what can only be described as poverty. Michael Harrington, a student of this problem who has published a book on it recently, has given many valid reasons for believing that estimate is an under-estimate. He has arrived at a figure of 40 to 50 million people—men, women and children in the United States—living in poverty.

In other words, depending on whose estimate you accept, somewhere between one-sixth and one-quarter of the people of the United States live in poverty. Unfortunately, in this country, we seem to lag behind in so many things. We have really done no significant statistical study of the problem of poverty, and we have no figures. But I would suggest that it is not likely that the percentage of people living in poverty is any smaller in Ontario or in Canada than it is in the United States. If we take the figure for the United States of between one-sixth and one quarter of the population and apply it to Ontario, we arrive at the startling fact that between one million and 1.5 million of the men, women and children of this province are living in poverty.

Mr. G. H. Peck (Scarborough Centre): Oh, the hon. member is talking through his hat!

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Shame!

Mr. Bryden: We have just heard a typical Tory comment, in fact a comment indicating a great poverty of intellect, if not a poverty of the type that I am describing. As a matter of fact, one of the Pooh Bahs of the Tory party is a gentleman, a friend of mine I would even say—I hope I could say that—who was an opponent of mine not so terribly long ago. He is now trying to palm off on his party—apparently with some success—and on the public generally—I hope with no success—the preposterous proposition that the problem of welfare has now been solved. He suggests that policymakers should now turn their attention to what I would describe as—if I could put myself into his mode of thinking for a moment, which is difficult—the deserving rich, and to devise ways and means of looking after their interests, forgetting altogether about the poor who constitute a significant proportion of our population, and who live under circumstances which, as I said earlier, are very difficult for privileged people, such as ourselves sitting in this House, even to comprehend.

Mr. Peck: This is the 20th century.

Mr. Bryden: You know, one of our difficulties in dealing with this problem is that we have inherited, in our puritanical traditions, a pharisaical attitude towards people who are unfortunate enough to be poor. We consider that they suffer from some sort of moral turpitude; that this is what has reduced them to poverty; that it is because of some special fault of their own which we, fine Pharisees that we are, do not suffer—and therefore they live in poverty and we live in affluence, and that is their hard luck because they brought it upon themselves.

Or we become patronizing sometimes and we make a differentiation; we refer to the deserving poor. There are some, apparently, who are deserving; they are worthy objects of charity—people on whom we can bestow our great beneficence and make ourselves feel important by taking advantage of their suffering. And then also, of course, there are always the undeserving poor who do not even deserve our beneficence, but to whom we grudgingly hand out small benefits to prevent them from starving.

Well, I would say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no such thing as the deserving poor; no one deserves to be poor.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Get to the point.

Mr. Bryden: I would like to read from one of the leading experts in the welfare field, Professor Albert Rose of the University of Toronto School of Social Work, from an article which appeared some years ago in a magazine put out by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The title of his article was "Public Housing and Public Welfare." And he remarked as follows:

The "poor" are still commonly thought to be lazy, shiftless, wasteful persons who are either so devoid of energy that their earnings are nil or substandard or highly irregular; or so devoid of intelligence in their spending habits that the product of their labour is largely wasted or does not redound to the benefit of their families. The fact is that there are few such people in our society today, and those who might fit the descriptions are persons with a profound emotional sickness—the alcoholic, the drug addict and the like. . . .

The "poor" then [he says] are those individuals or families who experience serious and long-term poverty from which there is little prospect of escape. Such poverty stems from some disadvantageous situation usually beyond the control of the individual and his family.

And that, I think, is the finding of almost everybody who has studied the problem. People who are poor have become so because of misfortune, because of circumstances beyond their control. Circumstance has driven them down to the point where, by their own efforts, it is impossible for them to escape from the vicious circle of poverty.

These people clearly need special assistance, and the assistance they need is not merely financial, although certainly they need financial assistance. They need much more than financial assistance, especially if such assistance is on the very limited scale provided under our general welfare assistance in this province and in other provinces in Canada.

Merely to provide people with enough money to prevent them from starving will not in any way assist them to get out of the vicious circle of poverty and particularly it will not assist their children to escape from that vicious circle. We now have in this country families who are traditionally poor. In fact Michael Harrington stated in his book, The Other America, that there is in the United States a whole subculture of poverty—of people and their families who are condemned to permanent poverty, who have been rejected by the community at large, who live within the community but are not part of it and who have developed their own culture of poverty with its own conditions and its own customs. This is the place where we have to attack the problem, and we cannot attack it simply by inadequate welfare allowances—they merely perpetuate the subculture of poverty.

An exciting development in this field was undertaken by this department, whose estimates we are now considering, and I would like to convey, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) and his department my congratulations on the work they are doing in trying to find new approaches in dealing with the problem of the citizen who has been reduced to the lowest possible level. This department has conducted a number of interesting and important studies and experiments. One to which I want to refer is its most recent one, on which it reported just within the last month or two in a bulletin entitled: Long-term Assistance Families, with a sub-title: "A Demonstration Project."

This bulletin reported the results of an experiment undertaken by the department in co-operation with the welfare department of the city of Toronto. The project is well described in the deputy Minister's introduction to the bulletin. He said:

The two staff members assigned, under the supervision of the project director, Mr. E. V. Ralph, thus selected 100 cases for attention, while another 100 were chosen as a control group against which could be measured the results of concentrated service to their counterparts in the study group.

The department set up two groups of 100 each, one group consisting of people to whom special, concentrated, intensive counselling services were given; the other 100 were called a control group, and it consisted of a group of people who simply get the normal service — that is, mainly their bi-monthly hand-out. The deputy Minister commented as follows:

The outcome is significant. It indicates that a high proportion of long-term assistance families will, with stimulation and guidance, become independent within a comparatively brief time.

Most will improve their attitudes and habits to an extent that carries them a good way towards rehabilitation. Some were found to be eligible for provincial welfare programmes, rather than those of the municipality.

The implication is that it would be to the advantage of both welfare recipients and municipalities if there were a systematic review of the caseload in order to direct special help and attention to those who remain on the rolls for an unusually long time.

I would just like to give some of the statistical backing for the deputy Minister's statement. I would like to refer briefly to pages 8 and 9 of the report, in which it is stated:

The general conclusion of this study is that concentrated attention given to long-term assistance families results in significant improvements. One positive benefit was that 42 per cent of the study group left the municipal assistance rolls.

In other words, out of the 100 they started with, by the time the study was completed, 42 had left the assistance rolls altogether.

In the control group, that is the group that was not getting special services, only 23 out of 100 had left the welfare rolls in the same period of time. And then, almost equally significant, is this statement from the report:

A second positive result is that among those 58 cases remaining on the rolls there was a noticeable upgrading in economic, health and family circumstances for 54 of these and only four cases showed no favourable response.

So, to summarize the total situation, if you take the study group of 100, 42 got off the welfare rolls altogether, 54 improved substantially, and only four showed no noticeable improvement. Whereas, in the other group which was not receiving this special assistance, 23 got off the welfare rolls, 13 only showed significant improvement without getting off the rolls, and 64 showed no noticeable improvement.

Of course, this is just one study; I understand that the department has others under way, but this study is sensational enough in itself that I think it should give rise to a complete change in the direction of government policy under general welfare assistance. There should be a new stress on personal services, on individual counselling of these families. This will cost money, but it will cost nothing compared to what we are paying now in general welfare assistance.

Indeed, if one forgets about human values altogether and just considers dollars and cents and the welfare of the provincial Treasury, one would say that it is good business to pursue, on a large scale, the type of project the department has undertaken on an experimental basis only. The savings in costs over a period of years could be tremendous, both for the provincial government and for the municipalities.

I am hoping that this little bulletin, small as it is, may be indicative—or it may be the first harbinger, shall we say?—of a complete revolution in government welfare policy. Unfortunately, it is my observation, and the observation of most people, that The Department of Public Welfare is far more progressive than the hon. Minister of Public Welfare or the government. It keeps trying to push forward but it has to carry with it this great anchor of Tory indifference, as personified in the government. Perhaps the government can be appealed to on the basis of simply saving money; and even on that basis I think a new approach to the whole problem of welfare, and more particularly of general welfare assistance, should be undertaken.

It should not be confined only to this one facet to which I have referred here. We should, as I was trying to suggest earlier, be undertaking an overall attack on the whole problem of poverty. To do that we have to consider what are the basic causes of poverty. I tried to do that at some length in my contribution to the Throne Speech debate. I will not repeat now what I said there. I listed a great many categories of people who are more subject to poverty than others. I would now like to focus attention on some of the major causes of poverty.

I would like to quote two or three paragraphs from an article by Walter Lippmann which appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of March 24, 1964, entitled: "New Ideas Fight Poverty".

The article was devoted mainly to a description of President Johnson's new programme, but in the course of his discussion Mr. Lippmann called attention to what he considered to be the major causes of poverty as revealed by various studies undertaken in the United States, and I quote as follows:

The modern studies of poverty have demonstrated—I think beyond dispute—that the greatest of all causes of poverty is a lack of education.

The next greatest cause is discrimination, which makes a non-white family 2.5 times as likely to be poor as a white family.

Another great cause of poverty is poor health. Another is the absence of a full-time wage earner, due to the age of the parents or to the fact that the family is broken.

These are some of the major causes of poverty and, I think, are matters to which we should be directing our attention when we start considering the problems of the people who are covered by this vote dealing with general welfare assistance. I think that the point that Lippmann was making has been well expressed in an editorial in the Toronto Globe and Mail of March 20, 1964 entitled: "The U.S. War on Poverty."

The Globe and Mail had this to say:

What is revolutionary about the whole programme is that it puts the emphasis, not where it has always been before, on hand-outs to the poor—

As, for example, under the general welfare assistance branch—I continue:

—but on providing the poor with the tools of new skills, new environments and new hope with which to work themselves out of poverty.

"Like father like son" is an old tag with truth. Many of the poor in this country, as well as the United States, are poor because their fathers and forefathers were poor. Born in urban and rural slums, they grow up in them and raise their children in them. There is no family impulse to the education that could lift them, and no money to pay for it.

The problem of poverty begets ignorance, physical unfitness, mental damage, which in their turn beget more poverty. The cycle must be broken.

In Canada, we always do later what they have already started to do in the United States, but we cannot afford to be much later in launching our war on poverty. No more than they can we be a rich country while the poor are always with us.

In any case, it costs too much to keep the poor. In Toronto we have kept one such family poor for 25 years. We have given them hand-outs, but none of the help with which they could have worked themselves into prosperity. It has cost us $61,700 for this one family.

And the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) is worried about his financial problems. Here is a way he might consider solving them.

Mr. Chairman, I quoted a number of causes of poverty as isolated by Mr. Walter Lippmann, but one factor that he did not mention is at least as important as any of the others, and that is the problem of bad housing. I suppose that one cannot say that bad housing causes poverty. In a way we have a hen-and-egg situation. Poverty causes bad housing and bad housing causes more poverty, and so it goes on and on and on. But if we can accept the advice of Michael Harrington, another expert, if we want to really tackle the problem of poverty, we have got to head into the problem of housing.

I am not going to try to deal in detail with housing at this time because it comes under the estimates of another department. The hon. Minister of that department has indicated that he has important announcements to make with regard to housing policy. As far as this group is concerned, we will await his announcements with much interest, and I can assure him that we will give him every possible assistance in trying to develop a more dynamic housing programme in this province.

In the meantime, though I will not try to deal with the estimates of The Department of Economics and Development, I would like to make some references to the housing problem as it relates to the problem of poverty—which is the subject with which we are directly concerned at this time.

I would like to refer, for example, to an article which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail of February 19, 1964, by Jurgen Hesse, entitled: "Slums With High Rents." I am going to read a few paragraphs from this article, because I think, even if hon. members have already read it, it is worth hearing again:

The stench of poverty is permanent. It hovers in clothes, in the cracks of the wall where plaster is missing, underneath the sagging wood floors, in the threadbare upholstery. The three bedrooms upstairs have no built-in closets, the stairs are rickety, and the house has no bathtub, just a toilet.

Mrs. Mary Lapping and her six children live in this house on Trefann St. It is in one of the 59 slum pockets in Toronto proper. The monthly rent is $60, the heating bill in the winter about $30, electricity and water another $5. Mrs. Lapping has a wood and coal stove for which her son Lonie, 15, gathers scrap wood.

Her total monthly income is $204 from social welfare and $36 in family allowance—$240. She said that her husband is an epileptic, could not get a steady job as a result and has left Mrs. Lapping and the six children to fend for themselves. But this fending is tough since 40 per cent of her income goes toward rent and heat. To feed and clothe her family, Mrs. Lapping has exactly $145 a month, or $20.71 a head, or 66 cents a head per day.

Mrs. Lapping and her family are not a unique case of hardship. There are thousands like her in Toronto. Three million Canadians live on incomes of less than $3,000 a year. This applies also to families where the husband works and has not deserted his wife and children.

But nowhere in Canada are slum rents as high as Toronto. Nowhere in Canada is the proportion between rents and incomes so imbalanced as here. The relation should be 25 per cent of the income for rent. Mrs. Lapping pays 40 per cent and in some extreme cases there are families which line the slum landlords' pockets with 50 per cent of their income.

Mrs. Lapping almost could do better if she were to move into one of those spanking new apartment blocks in the suburbs where a two-bedroom suite costs $110 a month including heat and water.

The only trouble is that the apartment owner likely wouldn't permit six children in his beautiful building and chances are he wouldn't permit a social welfare recipient to live next door to well-groomed office girls, rising young executives and solid, responsible citizens. . . .

While Mrs. Lapping and thousands of other Toronto families try to eke out a decent living, Toronto slum landlords get rich. It is established practice in the 59 slum districts for landlords to send agents around on the first of the month to collect the rent.

This, I think, is one of the most brutal tragedies of our time, the way these vultures, the slum landlords, fatten on the misfortune of poor people who have been reduced, in most cases through no fault of their own, to a condition of poverty and then are maintained there because of the exorbitant demands of slum landlords. Yet public housing projects languish. A few proceed, but most of them get tangled up in red tape and this is the sort of result we get.

Here is an article in the Toronto Daily Star of March 12, 1964, which says:

Needy families have to wait as long as three years for low rental housing in Metro Toronto, and the longest waits face those who need a place most—those with seven children or more.

A report to the Metro housing authority has revealed that only 651 of 1,640 on Metro's waiting list could be placed in the 12-month period up to January 31, 1964.

The staff study showed there are 531 applications for three-bedroom apartments, 327 for four bedrooms and 121 for five bedrooms.

The housing authority has produced fewer than 400 family units in five years against a target of 5,000.

It gets 50 applications a week but can offer only 13 vacancies.

And so as a result of this, the slum landlords fatten on the poor people who have to live in the slums. The consequences extend in many directions. The problem of housing is related to the problem of education, which Walter Lippmann has cited as the most important single cause of poverty. Here is another story from the Toronto Daily Star of November 7, 1963, by Ben Rose, a staff writer.

Downtown areas of Toronto and other big Canadian cities spawn crime, alcoholism, drug addiction and disease, the Canadian Education Association reported today.

It also blamed downtown conditions for broken homes and conditions that seriously impair children's learning ability.

The report draws a composite picture of the central cores of Canadian cities being deserted by all but low-income families and immigrants and of such overcrowding that many children are forced to do their homework in restaurants.

Nearly 50 per cent of the cases of failures, dropouts, truancy and delinquency in the large Canadian cities come from the downtown schools, the CEA said.

There is a direct correlation between the learning capacity and achievement of children and the economic level of the district in which they live, said the report. Pupils from the downtown schools are invariably in the lowest categories and generally children from the poorest homes, economically, don't do as well in school or show as much ambition.

So here we have again the interrelationship of one evil piled upon another and compounding the other. Inadequacy in education is compounded by inadequacy in housing. Inadequacy in housing drives people further and further down so that we have a growing segment of our population who can only be described as permanent poor, and we hear only minor, tentative suggestions as to ways to get out of this vicious circle.

Mr. Chairman, I think the time has come to take a look at the whole problem; to tell ourselves once and for all that petty little hand-outs euphemistically called general welfare assistance are never going to solve this problem—as a matter of fact, in many ways they intensify it, they perpetuate it. We have to find a way out of the situation—it can be found—and we in this country surely have enough brains and intelligence to use the tremendous resources with which we are blessed to solve the problem of poverty. Not merely to alleviate it, but solve it once and for all!

In recent months, Mr. Chairman, we have heard many proposals from federal, provincial and municipal governments for projects to symbolize the hundredth anniversary of confederation in 1967. Most of these are proposals for buildings and other physical monuments, many of which are worthy in themselves but none of which in my opinion has that imaginative and dynamic quality which will give Canadians a real sense of pride in achieving 100 years of nationhood.

I propose that we should adopt a much more challenging and inspiring objective. We should now, not tomorrow or the next day but now, set ourselves the task of eliminating poverty throughout the length and breadth of Canada by 1967. This will obviously require a supreme effort by governments at all levels and by organizations of private citizens in many fields, but if we really believe in Canada we will not shrink from the task any more than our forefathers shrank from the task of carving a community out of a hostile wilderness in the face of most difficult economic circumstances.

The programmes undertaken will be many and varied but they should all be co-ordinated under federal leadership and directed towards the single overall objective of eliminating poverty. To focus public attention on this objective, I would suggest that it should be set forth in black and white, along with at least a general outline of the kinds of programmes by which it is to be achieved, in a document which I would call the Centennial Charter of Economic and Social Emancipation. This charter would recognize that our theoretical rights and liberties—theoretical for many people at any rate, not for all of us—that the rights and liberties of which we are justly proud are theoretical for many people and cannot in fact be exercised by citizens who are ground down by poverty.

At federal-provincial conferences it is not enough to argue about the details of pension plans and the division of tax revenues. These matters are important, but I believe that the major emphasis of the Ontario government in its relations with the Dominion at this time should be to try to inspire the federal government to give effective leadership in the war on poverty.

As evidence of good faith, the Ontario government should adopt a programme of its own without further delay, just as the government of North Carolina adopted a programme without waiting for the federal government in that country to get moving. The Ontario government should be prepared to co-ordinate its programme with any federal programme that might be developed, but if the federal government cannot be persuaded to accept the challenge of leadership, then I suggest that the Ontario government should proceed on its own. They should have a programme, in any case, co-ordinated with any federal plans which may be developed; but as long as there are no federal plans, then let us go ahead on our own with a programme to tackle this problem.

I am going to make a few specific suggestions as to the kind of measures which should be included in such a programme directed against poverty. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that in making these suggestions I am not attempting to be comprehensive. I put them forward merely as indications of the types of things that could be done, but a great many other suggestions could be made.

For example, there is one that comes to my own mind just at this moment, which I have not included in my list of examples. That is the whole question of health insurance. One of the major causes of poverty is ill health; especially when breadwinners suffer ill health. Families are then faced with large bills and, what is even worse, the family income is frequently cut off and the family is reduced into a condition from which sometimes, Mr. Chairman, it is almost impossible to escape.

It is time we went ahead with a full-scale medical care insurance programme; but not only that, we should also proceed with a programme to provide out-of-work benefits to people who lose work because of sickness or injury and who are not covered by workmen's compensation. That is another vital measure in the war on poverty. I have not included it among the specific suggestions I make here; I mention it only to indicate that there are many other suggestions in addition to those I list here.

I would like to refer briefly to seven suggestions which I think would make a very good nucleus for an all-out attack on the problem of poverty—which would appear very appropriately, in what I have suggested should be called a centennial charter of economic and social emancipation, as the lines of attack to be taken, not in reducing but in eliminating poverty in Canada. Here are seven measures I put forward as illustrative of the type of thinking that should be considered.

(1) A special committee of the Cabinet should be established, that is the Cabinet of Ontario, headed by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) himself—no one of less status would do in view of the magnitude of the job—to co-ordinate the activities of all departments with responsibilities in this field, such as Public Welfare, Labour, Education, Economics and Development and so on. A full-time secretariat should be provided for the committee, just as the Treasury board has a full-time staff.

(2) The government's entire policy on public welfare should be revolutionized, not merely reformed, to place major emphasis on the re-establishment of welfare recipients as self-supporting, self-reliant citizens.

(3) There should be a major expansion of individual counselling along the lines of the department's own bulletin, to which I have referred earlier.

(4) The present system of providing welfare assistance according to categories—which is, I think, in the jargon of the profession, referred to as categorical aid, in which the aid is given according to categories in which recipients are arbitrarily placed—that system should be replaced by a system in which all assistance is related to the need and rehabilitation potential of the families and individuals concerned.

My colleague, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) has dealt with this point before and I will not belabour it; no doubt he has some further useful observations to make. Surely there is no justice for determining the amount of assistance a person gets according to a category in which some bureaucrat has placed him.

If he fits into one category, he gets a certain level of assistance; if he fits into another one, he gets a different level. If he does not happen to fit into any category, he may have trouble getting assistance. But the needs of the human being are not the determining factor at all; it is the category into which he is placed. I suggest that that system of categories should be abandoned in favour of a system which takes into account the needs of the whole human being and the whole human family.

(5) Since lack of education is one of the greatest causes of poverty, there should be a completely new approach to the whole problem of remedial training and retraining; and much greater advantage should be taken of new developments in the field of programmed learning. A great deal has been learned—this is a matter which we can take up with the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) when his estimates are before us—as to improved methods of teaching people, and we make very, very little use of them in this province. It is about time—especially with slow learners, and with people who, fairly late in life, have to learn new skills and accumulate new information—that we start taking advantage of some of these new techniques and try to use them to assist people who have difficulty in learning.

(6) Existing rehabilitation services should be co-ordinated and greatly expanded. I will not dwell on that point at this time because I intend to refer to it more fully, a little later, when we come to vote 1808.

(7) In view of the close connection between bad housing and poverty, a separate department of housing and urban redevelopment should be established to mount a full-scale attack on the housing problem.

Mr. Chairman, I think that is the line of approach we should be taking. We should be developing past the stage of general welfare assistance, which is the purpose of this vote. We should be looking to new horizons; we should be looking to the day when general welfare assistance will not be necessary, when the problem of poverty will have been solved and when those who are unfortunate enough not to be able to care for themselves will not be on welfare—as the term is now used, in much the same way as the old term “on relief” used to be used or “on the pogy”, or whatever you want to call it. We should look to the day when those who are unfortunate and need assistance will get assistance of a kind which will assist them to re-establish themselves as independent, self-reliant citizens and will not keep them in a permanent, vicious circle of poverty.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the challenge we face. Nothing less than a full-scale answer to that challenge is adequate in a country as favourably blessed as Canada is. I suggest that we should not be prepared to celebrate any centenary in 1967, but instead should hang our heads in shame when 1967 comes, if we have not by that time adopted full-scale programmes which will eliminate poverty forever.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Chairman, some three weeks ago on the occasion of our last discussion of the estimates of this department, the question of the 80-20 grants to municipalities for general welfare assistance had come in for substantial criticism, and was fairly discussed by my hon. colleague, the member for Parkdale, and others. It was fairly well established, I think, and again today by the hon. member for Woodbine, that the policy of the department left much to be desired.

The question of whether this grant structure was adequate for suffering families, so far, has been left fairly well up in the air although fairly well talked about; but, in order to get back on the track of welfare, as it is distributed or as it is paid out by the municipalities, I would like to mention that I have no desire, first of all, to embarrass The Department of Public Welfare, but I certainly have a desire—and, in fact, I am determined—to get some answers and some evidence that the department is ready to commit itself to a constructive effort to cure a situation to which I am going to refer.

As one who has acted in the capacity of mayor and on councils for a good many years in municipalities much less favoured than some economically, and certainly during times much less affluent than this, I know something about dispensing public welfare. I think I have enough knowledge to discuss this problem properly without, as the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) mentioned the other day, reading from a book and I think I can manage without any ridiculous stories about soup kitchens from the hon. Minister. Those of us who have had experience along this line do realize that in organized municipalities a measure of control is exercised by municipal bodies and therefore welfare assistance is kept at a minimum and works to the advantage of the department and to the protection of the taxpayer.

Now I would also mention at this point that the one thing that makes this department tick in my opinion is the dedication of some of the senior people who administer public welfare for this department.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Farquhar: I will be very much surprised if there is any hon. member in this House who does not owe a debt of gratitude, for instance, to the effective way that the deputy Minister handles his job.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Farquhar: Now this brings me to the problem that arises in areas of unorganized municipalities, of which we have many in the north, and in which areas public welfare is administered by Queen's Park without the benefit of the municipal controls that I have mentioned.

To my certain knowledge, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister and members of his senior staff are well aware of the situations that have developed in some of these unorganized municipalities and which have become a complete and absolute disgrace, not only to the department but to this whole government.

For the benefit of hon. members who are not aware of this situation, I point out that public welfare recipients have developed an organized racket and this situation is spreading though many sections in the north. I want to mention also that while the regional administrators do their best to control this situation their hands are completely tied by a lack of policy and a lack of effort on the part of the hon. Minister to support their efforts.

I know, for instance, of a situation whereby the administrator, a Mr. MacDonald from Sault Ste. Marie, dispenses welfare cheques and during the course of his efforts to control the funds is told, not asked, by this group what he must do. These groups, which have organized themselves for the sole purpose of exploiting public welfare funds, travel about the country soliciting members to increase the ranks of their organization, arguing that since these people are having trouble obtaining welfare they should, "join our ranks and we will get you welfare." The end part of this thing, Mr. Chairman, is that they do get welfare through this group—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Have they got that unionized, too?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): They did that in my riding, join the Tory party and you will get—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Farquhar: Mr. Chairman, through this whole frustrating discussion of this department's estimates I did not interfere with anybody and I would like to be given the opportunity to make a point or two.

Mr. Chairman, you can imagine the allegations and suggestions that are prevalent in the area to the effect that this group has access to senior officials in the department from whom they can obtain almost any amount of public welfare while good citizens of our communities are held strictly to the statutes governing this portion of public welfare. I can document without any trouble the actual facts of this situation. I have known these people for several years on a doorstep basis, and although I am in no position to state that there is direct collusion between these people and the department, at least something is wrong.

I do not know whether the situation has resulted from laziness or a desire to avoid controversy or whether it has just been politically expedient to pay rather than to argue. For some reason or other this situation has been allowed to grow and develop and has spread like a poison throughout our society. It is to the disgrace of this government that this insidious poison has been allowed to attain such proportions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I might as well mention it is not necessarily politically expedient for me to declare war on a group of my good constituents, but I do not intend to back away from this problem and I ask the hon. Minister here now to advise the House what steps have been undertaken or are being contemplated to correct this situation.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Chairman, I really welcome the words of my friend, the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin because if he thinks that the certain group he speaks about has been a headache in the area, it has been a terrific one with us here. As a matter of fact I can assure you, sir, that if you are disliked by them: they do not dislike me, they hate me more than might be expected. If all the hate in Ontario were concentrated against me, that group would have most of it, because we have dealt with them, I think, as severely as we can.

But at the same time I must say that I have no objection to disquieting them because I have no love for them, I assure you. A certain group call themselves the Union of Electors and they wear white caps. Some of these persons, naturally, have qualified for general welfare assistance in the same manner as other persons in the area. I think, as a matter of fact, that the gentleman to whom the hon. member referred has had much trouble with them and he has been very severe with them.

I can assure you that one gentleman, who unfortunately is not with us any more, Mr. Bosanquet, had many dealings with them and I think he has treated them fairly, but certainly not over-zealously. I think we have the same feeling in that particular respect that you have.

I have had representation from Blind River, from the Catholic priest there and from other people, along the same lines as you have. We have made investigations, and we are now making investigations, of some of these people to see if they are really deserving of welfare in the way they have claimed. We have found many faults so far and I think we will be able to take some action pretty soon. I will be very glad to advise my hon. friend when we do that and on what basis we are doing it. I can assure him that there is nothing that we have been doing for these people other than what we are strictly bound by regulations to do.

As a matter of fact, I might go so far as to tell you this: you can really say there are two or three fomenters of this trouble. As a matter of fact I have even offered to pay—and this may be the worst thing I could do, to impose them on some other province—I have offered to pay the full passage for whole families if I could transplant them some other place, I can assure you of that.

I would go further than this. I shall not give the name, but apparently somebody from Blind River was in to see me and he wanted to have an open war, or an open season on them, which naturally I could not go for, because after all we have to preserve certain human instincts. But surely anything the hon. member can bring forward will be helpful and I am glad he objected because I did so myself. We have wanted to be as humane as possible. But I know that he knows the situation better than I do and better than maybe I ever will. He knows it, because he lives with these people. The remarks which he made will help us to find these people and eradicate them from the rolls. I shall forever owe him a debt of thanks.

Mr. Farquhar: Mr. Chairman, I did not get the answer I hoped for because I would like to advise the hon. Minister that there is an answer to this situation. I do not think that he is naive enough to have overlooked it to this point, because, as I say, there is an answer.

We expect, as I mentioned in the first part of my remarks, organized municipalities to do a job of controlling this type of thing. In places where we have not such a municipal structure—and this is administered straight from Queen's Park — we have to expect Queen's Park to control this situation. I think, if the hon. Minister took from my remarks that I am suggesting further control—further, not control because I am not thinking of control, but further rough measures on these people to eliminate this, this is not the answer I am suggesting. The answer I am suggesting is a little help along the lines I have suggested.

For instance, to try to promote the economy in the area, establish an economy—in one way or another, and several ways are quite apparent—to produce a payroll which will eliminate the need for welfare.

We certainly cannot say that these people do not need welfare and therefore we must take stringent measures to cut them off welfare because a good many of these people are deserving of a lot more welfare assistance than they are getting. The whole point of the thing is that this government has not made any constructive or effective effort to solve the basic problem. The basic problem is the type of economy that is prevalent in this area.

Along this line—and I do not know why I should take all this responsibility—but along this line, I have been to visit the regional offices of The Department of Lands and Forests, both in Sault Ste. Marie and in Sudbury. I find that these people are perfectly willing, sir, or at least they see the advantage, for instance, of instituting a programme of tree planting in the area. I wonder if The Department of Public Welfare finds it beneath themselves to go, for instance, to some of these departments for help in a situation like this?

Is there any reason why, for instance, a little co-operation between The Department of Lands and Forests, The Department of Labour and The Department of Highways—goodness knows there is plenty of work to be done in that area by all of these departments—could not produce an economy which might help these people and eradicate the need for this kind of welfare; and, by that token, possibly eliminate the need for the racket in the organized welfare situation we have there? This is the kind of answer I was hoping to get from the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, first I might just say, further to this, that I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin because I know he faces a problem. But he agrees with me, I am sure, that it is not the general group which is doing this. It is three or four leaders of that group who are now under investigation; they are promoting an idea exactly the opposite of what the hon. member is promoting over there. The leaders do not want these people to accept any work if they can avoid it. The people themselves, I am sure, will do what they can and we have made efforts along that line.

Of that I am satisfied. I am advised of that. We have made efforts along the line of employment; but against that there are certain leaders who will not co-operate and they will say to their people exactly the words you quoted a moment ago: "You come along with us and we will find you welfare, regardless if you want to work or not." But I am quite sure the general bulk of them are exactly what you state; we have been making efforts along that line, and, I am quite sure we are prepared to go along with the suggestion of the hon. member.

In the meantime, I might tell him while we are doing this, we will also investigate the three or four heads who are running this show, or so-called show. I think the investigation might prove very beneficial. We can eradicate the false leadership. I think that is where the canker is, if there is one. If we can eliminate these groups who are advising these people, accordingly I think we will have some measure of success. We are not only providing investigation, but help. After all, as you stated a moment ago, we cannot refuse them the need. They have no work, and I am sure that in the particular area about which you speak, you did not name it—I do not suppose we should mention it—but we all know the area, and there is not the work there that there would be in some other areas.

We have tried to move people back to where they were before. A lot of them were not original residents. They have been brought in there, a lot of them, by these particular leaders. Once we can find out about that aspect—and we have high hopes of doing so in the very near future—then I think we might at least partly solve it or be on the way to solving it.

I want the hon. member to really know from me that I appreciate his remarks very much on that. We are going along trying to eradicate the problem, or at least improve it from what it is right now, by finding out what exactly is the trouble. I think you and I will agree that not everyone of them thinks that way; there are a few only—I could possibly count on half the fingers of one hand—those who are running, or trying to run, the show.

You could come to my office. I have correspondence stacked high from these particular three persons. They have threatened me with all the powers of evil—might it be on this side of the world or on the other side. But we are looking at this question right now and I am sure some of those people have been in court.

If I remember rightly, I think the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) had one as a client at one time. We know exactly what they are thinking and we are trying, right now, to see what solution we can arrive at so that these people who are conducting themselves in that particular way will benefit by whatever can be done for them—not only in the line of welfare but also in the line of finding them some work.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, might I ask the hon. Minister: In respect to the long-term assistance families demonstration project, the leaflet or booklet which came to our desks recently, the hon. member for Woodbine dealt with this experiment at some length. I would like to bring the hon. Minister back to this, and ask him to what extent the department is considering similar projects, and an extension of this kind of project, to the whole welfare field in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I might advise the hon. member that we are now in the formation of what we call teams to go out and continue the long-term studies of the project.

I might tell him at the present time that our staff is at the moment collaborating with the city of Hamilton's welfare department; and we have also assured Windsor, which has also made a request for our help. We also will lend assistance to the city of Ottawa in the very near future.

So we are in the formation, now, of teams and will go about and look at this particular feature, the results of which have been so encouraging. And you can appreciate, with me, that there is always the perennial problem of obtaining the increased staff to carry out these extra duties. But we are in the process now of forming these teams and I can assure you that the success of what has been done right now, with the co-operation of the city of Toronto, certainly leads us to carry it on further to the best of our ability in all respects.

I might say, in passing, that I certainly enjoyed and I agreed with a lot of what was said by the hon. member for Woodbine a moment ago; he mentioned this project as a feature that should be part of the general picture. I think he was right. I can assure hon. members that this project is not strictly a trial balloon; it is something that is here with us to stay and will continue to be improved. Any suggestions along that line will be welcome, I can assure you.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister—we seem to be giving, I would say, very substantial sums in connection with general welfare assistance.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Would the hon. member repeat that? I did not hear it.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry. I would say that we seem to be giving large amounts for general welfare assistance. I look at the sum of $18 million in connection with this item that we are on. I would also say that the hon. Minister has been in that post for a great number of years and I am sure that in that time he must know and would be able to tell us very succinctly and quickly, what are the major causes for people being on welfare.

Would the hon. Minister say that unemployment, that health, that housing and that education, the lack of these things, are the reasons for people going to apply for welfare?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that those are very important features of welfare because of the world we live in today. You can maybe blame a bit on automation for that matter, because people have to be re-educated in some form or another so that they can apply themselves to another job. Another thing that is striking in our province is that where large developments take place—for instance, the Seaway building in the Cornwall area—there is a period of adjustment afterwards. Then the moving out of the excess population was slow because these people were not close to a large centre like Toronto or Hamilton. It took a little longer period to re-establish people in the area or else outside of the area. That is also one of the reasons, but that is not a reason that would be continuous, it is just the reason for a certain isolated situation that gradually cures itself, I believe.

I think the main reasons are what the hon. member has cited. I do not disagree with that at all. As far as housing is concerned, well, I suppose that would be a more prevalent problem in a larger centre than it would be in a smaller centre. In a smaller centre, for some reason or another, these matters can be rectified much more easily and better than in a large centre where people do not know one another and there is a certain amount of—what should I say?—an unsympathetic attitude between people. I do not know if that is the proper way of expressing it, but that is one way of looking at it. What the hon. member has stated, I think, gives what are the basic reasons.

Mr. Thompson: If I can follow up on this then, I appreciate the hon. Minister would agree with me that the main reason for people needing welfare, being on welfare, is unemployment, health, housing, education; and he has added automation—I could suggest some side effects of automation.

Another was the loneliness with respect to urbanization, and I think perhaps in the back of his mind he is thinking of one group, the Indian groups who have come from reserves. I am just trying to follow the thinking of the hon. Minister on it. Could I ask the hon. Minister: We now have $18 million which we are giving for general assistance and I would assume that he is a man who believes that if he knows what the causes are that then when he gives finances he is giving them in order to get at the root causes. I would appreciate if the hon. Minister could tell us how his general welfare assistance branch is tackling the situation of housing, for example, which he says is a root cause in creating welfare recipients. Perhaps I could start with that and ask how he is tackling that.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, the statement perhaps I should make in this respect right now is that general welfare assistance is essentially a municipal programme, in that the municipalities administer the relief and issue payments to individuals. Senior governments, of course, share a per cent of the cost of the issuance within the limits of the legislation and the provincial agreement with the federal government.

It is the decision of the municipal authorities as to who receives relief and how much is paid. The provincial Act does not limit the municipal administration, it ensures that standards are complied with and it states the items and amount that the senior governments will subsidize. But the municipality, as you know, can supplement this service in any way it sees fit. They have the authority to help persons in any circumstances to the extent they find necessary. So it is really a programme which is controlled by the municipal governments and subsidized by the senior governments.

Mind you, I do not avoid the hon. member's question in this respect. I am not saying that the municipalities do not also have some control on housing and maybe that problem should be brought to their attention and at the present moment I think we are doing just that.

Mr. Thompson: If I could respectfully suggest it, the hon. Minister has given me a reply which has shown me the administration of funds. He has suggested that it is really the responsibility of the municipalities in connection with welfare. But surely a Department of Public Welfare, of which the hon. Minister is the head, has an overall responsibility to the people applying for welfare. Surely if we are being asked to pass on an $18 million item, he just cannot tell us that the responsibility for all this is with municipal councils. Perhaps then instead of discussing it here we should be going to municipal councils to give our vote to them.

I would like to come back again to the point that the hon. Minister has suggested that there are five root problems that cause people to go on welfare. I know him as a man with a legal mind; if there are root problems he would believe surely that the best approach in connection with the people's money is to tackle those root problems. The hon. Minister has told me that with his experience—and believe me, I respect that, he has a vast and long experience as the Minister of Public Welfare—he has told me that in his experience housing is one of the problems. When I asked him how, under the general welfare assistance, of which we are being asked to pass an $18 million item, is that going to tackle one of the root problems in connection with welfare—housing—he does not reply to me. He tells me it really has something to do with municipal councils.

Perhaps the hon. Minister feels he does not have an adequate programme on this. Could the hon. Minister tell us how he tackles the root problem of poor housing, which he says is one of the real problems for people being on welfare?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, that might be quite so. In spite of the fact that I admit a root problem might be housing or it might be education, it does not mean that I am administering that type of programme. I am really administering a welfare programme in conjunction with the municipalities and the federal government in the sense that I am subsidizing with the senior government what is expended for the purposes which my hon. friend from Woodbine mentioned a moment ago. We at least aim to keep body and soul together and to give shelter, paying for part of shelter, and also for clothing or food as needed.

Now, as far as housing is concerned, I do not disagree with my hon. friend when he says that is one of the basic reasons. But I do not know what I can do administratively in that respect, except advise the municipalities and the other people who are entrusted with that responsibility that an improvement is necessary.

At the same time, I might mention one of the basic projects we have finished just recently which was mentioned a moment ago; the long-term assistance family project is dealing with people to find out whether they should really be on relief or how they should get off it, either through their own resources, or else if it is impossible for them to do so alone, to assist them to do so. This is something new and on which I would not dare at the present moment make even the smallest prediction, but so far I think there has been some accomplishment.

That, I think, is the work of this department and not the task of trying to find housing or to provide education and that sort of thing. In that respect, it is possible I did not understand my hon. friend well. But that is what I believe that this department is here for. It is a service department providing the necessities of life in this particular respect. Suggesting, yes, and advising as to these matters you speak about; but administering them, no!

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, just to follow up on the point developed by my hon. colleague from Dovercourt. The hon. Minister surely will recall the programme launched by the former Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Macaulay) which was hailed apparently through the width and breadth of North America as the most outstanding contribution for public housing that anyone had ever heard of.

There were all sorts of pictures and citations and quotations from one and all. And I would presume, as I heard that gentleman bring forward the programme, that this had been carefully discussed in Cabinet; and the hon. Minister of Public Welfare would have applauded it along with his colleagues and said, "Here is, at long last, a programme that is going to produce public housing."

But this is most relevant, Mr. Chairman, because my hon. friend established the point that one of the causes for people being in need of welfare assistance was lack of proper housing; and my hon. friend was asking, and I do not think we have had a proper answer yet, what is being done about housing. As I understood the hon. Minister, he said that he is concerned but it really is not his fault. I am suggesting that it is a collective responsibility of the whole Cabinet to see that there is adequate housing for those people who cannot afford it.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): And especially this hon. Minister.

Mr. Singer: Indeed so, and that is why I am most interested in finding out what this hon. Minister has done about the collapse of the Macaulay plan to provide housing; because it has collapsed. That Minister has gone; the new hon. Minister (Mr. Randall) has made no pronouncements as yet on housing. Somebody has to assume the responsibility, and since this hon. Minister is asking for the expenditure of many millions of dollars of the public money of Ontario, perhaps he can get into the housing field because apparently nobody else on that side of the House is doing this.

Mr. Sopha: What they need is another Macaulay.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I think I will leave that question to be asked of the hon. Minister when he does speak. I do not agree with exactly what my hon. friend has stated; that is a matter of opinion.

However, Mr. Chairman, I think it would be more appropriately asked when the proper estimates come up.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, implicit in what the hon. member who last spoke had to say is the key point we have been trying to make throughout all these estimates; that is that the hon. Minister is obviously the fifth wheel to the carriage in The Department of Public Welfare. And clearly, after years in the department, his detailed knowledge of what goes on in the department is about as close to nil as is possible. One shudders to think of how little impact he must have in the Cabinet in fighting for welfare matters.

Housing, education—all of these other factors which contribute to poverty—are in effect creating the conditions for which we have to spend $18 million in The Department of Public Welfare. Sooner or later we, in the House, have to face up to the fact: What is this hon. Minister doing to fight—to cope with—the conditions of welfare?

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Nothing, nothing.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, he has indicated nothing in the House—and this year we are taking the gloves off because he was so indiscreet—I would say, politically inept—to deal with the issue on a political level in such a 19th-century obscurantist approach as to indicate that he is incompetent to deal with welfare matters. He not only knows nothing of the detail of it; he indicated in some of his comments that he personally—in his instincts and his attitude, apart from the sort of camaraderie that is his general answer to queries from this side of the House—he is opposed to most of the ideas which are emerging from his own deputy Minister and from most of his advisers. I think the time has come when we have got to face up to it. One has a sense of futility in facing up to it, because one wonders if the hon. Minister has really any appreciation of what one is talking about. But in spite of that—

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order! We are dealing with item 4, general welfare assistance.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, Mr. Chairman, and I hope you have not been paying as little attention as the hon. Minister; because if you have, we have been talking about poverty, which is the whole problem in relating to general welfare assistance. We are going to continue to talk about it, Mr. Chairman—even if I must be forceful about it—because we are pouring $18 million down the drain and perpetuating the problems these people have to cope with.

The department has done some good work in charting new horizons toward which we might be working, that would solve them; and if this government, for one reason or the other, wants to leave a Minister in the post who is perpetuating the conditions, whose attitudes are such that they are not going to improve the situation, we in this House have to exercise our responsibility and our obligation on this side of the House.

I do not know how long this is going to go on, but as long as it goes on, we are going to accept our responsibility. And yes, when the hon. Minister sitting next to him smiles, it is because we have had to take the gloves off with regard to him; and perhaps we will have to do it again when his estimates come before the House; then we will do it once again, because this whole Cabinet is riddled with deadwood.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order! I am going to ask the Minister of this department to explain this item of general welfare assistance so we can vote on it afterwards.

Mr. MacDonald: Now just a minute, before we get away from it.

Mr. Sopha: If somebody left the Cabinet they would be on welfare.

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order! Order! I have asked the Minister to explain this item and then I will allow you to speak after that.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, very good.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, if I could speak on a point of order, I would say that the hon. Minister has clarified the general welfare assistance item most fundamentally and clearly. He told us that the causes are unemployment, health, housing, education, automation and urbanization; and, at the moment, sir, we are discussing the matter of housing, which the hon. Minister has told us is one of the root problems.

Mr. Chairman: Order! I would ask the Minister to explain general welfare assistance.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, in respect to housing, my hon. friend a moment ago asked a question and answered it himself and asked me if I would agree with his answer. He asked: Was lack of education part of the reason why we have people on relief or on welfare, and were other reasons housing and health? I think, as far as housing is concerned, as I said a moment ago welfare administration is with the municipality and the housing authorities are also, I think, with the municipality. I can only pray, with him, that that matter is looked into. I encourage it as he would, and as he does. This matter should be looked after, but why this department should be saddled with the administration of housing, I do not understand. What does my hon. friend mean?

Mr. Thompson: Do you want me to explain it to you, sir? I would say, sir, that the hon. Minister has asked me a question, Mr. Chairman, and I would be delighted to answer him. I would say, sir, that with respect to housing he should be saddled with the worry of it. I say definitely that the reason he should be saddled with it is that he himself has admitted poor housing is a root cause of poverty.

If you, sir, are taking a genuine and responsible attitude toward your department—and that is to cure poverty, to alleviate it—then you must go to the root of the problem and try to do something about it; and if your hon. colleagues are not doing something about it and you want to take a responsible attitude, you will see that they do something about it or resign.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: So I would suggest, sir, that you shuffle off housing—poor housing. The first time you told me it was the responsibility of the municipalities. Not having been able to escape that area, you say it is the responsibility of a Cabinet colleague. Surely you believe in Cabinet solidarity? Let us get a collective action in connection with poverty.

You have been incisive enough to agree with "war on poverty" by the United States, and with the study that was done by your deputy Minister, and with others—that there are five major root causes. We are discussing the expenditure of $18 million in order to alleviate poverty; then we will discuss the root causes. The first one I frankly will not dwell on any more because it is so deplorably obvious that the hon. Minister is not interested in one of the root causes—or he has no answer to it. Therefore, sir, I will move to the next one considered a root cause—health. I would ask the hon. Minister what he is doing about health, which is a root cause in connection with which he is giving $18 million to alleviate poverty? What, sir, is the hon. Minister doing with respect to health?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, this item is not an item to alleviate poverty as far as I can understand it. We were talking in a general way, in a philosophical way but this $18 million the hon. member talks about is not to alleviate poverty. That I can assure him.

Mr. Bryden: What is it for?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: It is just, as my hon. friend stated a moment ago, to provide some people with money. Is it sufficient? This I cannot answer. I have to go along with the tables that are set forth by the experts. This money is used strictly to provide for people who are out of work, for reasons that are not their own fault—who are out of work because they are between jobs and are not in receipt of any unemployment insurance.

I quite agree that it is not a very high living but it is a living of some sort until they can rehabilitate themselves. As this report that has been made here states, we have tried to find out the causes of this and I think we have obtained some measure of success. But this is not a matter of alleviating poverty I can assure the hon. member.

I am sure my hon. friend agrees with me on that. This is strictly a subsidy handed over to the municipality to pay for the bill that they have to pay; and we in turn receive an amount from the senior government at Ottawa. Certainly if I may use an expression which is a very bad one, it is not to alleviate poverty. It might be to alleviate the need of people who are poor, but cannot eradicate poverty.

That is an entirely different concept. At least we do not conceive the problem in the same way. The problem of poverty is a wide one and we know that the programme which has been started in the United States is a good one. I hope it has some results and I hope we have the same thing here on a national basis. I am sure that if there is one,

I will be the first to recommend that we should co-operate on that particular matter.

This certainly has nothing to do with the particular programme the hon. member for Woodbine was speaking about.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, I think there are several things the hon. Minister has said that are of interest to us as we are voting.

The first, sir, is that the hope has been raised that we might have something like they have in the United States in connection with war on poverty, and the hon. Minister's suggestion that if such a thing should come along that he would co-operate.

Just who does the hon. Minister envisage that he is? Is he not sitting as the Minister responsible for welfare for the whole of this province? He is the man who should not just hope, but should initiate a programme. That is my first remark about that, sir.

My second remark is that the hon. Minister asks us to give $18 million, and I hope I am correct in paraphrasing what he has said, in order to help people who are between jobs. As he says it might not be enough, and that there are dietary laws that he is not quite sure about.

What a shocking statement by a responsible Minister of the Crown—to tell us vaguely that we hand out this $18 million for people in between jobs. He is not sure, if it is sufficient or not, but he hopes that hon. members appreciate what this is being passed for.

I find it very hard to think that the hon. Minister is being serious in connection with his estimates. It is like an Alice in Wonderland situation. He wants us to vote on a vague kind of Christmas tree atmosphere and he is not even sure whether it is enough to help people or not.

This is an admission from the government benches of that vagueness about the purpose of which we are asked to pass $18 million; an admission that the hon. Minister has a lack of knowledge about whether it is enough on dietary reasons or not. Well, sir, assuming that the hon. Minister has this kind of superficial thinking, there is really not much point in our going on talking about the root problems.

I, sir, had really complimented the hon. Minister when I suggested that he might have thought there were root problems, as other research people have discovered there are, to poverty, and I thought that when we were voting $18 million, we would be voting on a means to eradicate these problems and I was going to go through these problems systematically.

I will, sir—perhaps in a vain hope—ask the hon. Minister, would it surely not be wiser when we are giving $18 million to people who are on relief, to look at the reasons why they are on relief and try to eradicate those reasons, rather than just handing out $18 million—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is the study we are making now.

Mr. Thompson: Well, the hon. Minister has suggested to me, that with his years of experience—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I never mentioned the years of experience.

Mr. Thompson: No, sir, I am saying that the hon. Minister was more modest than to say that. I am the one who said he had years of experience and I suggested that when he has had years of experience, that he might also have years of insight and I suggested that he might have defined from the insight that he has, what are the root problems. And we are agreed on the root problems. I am suggesting since we have agreed on the root problems, let us discuss those root problems and let the hon. Minister let us know what he is doing about them. Therefore, as I say, because I am an optimist even in a discussion like this, I now ask the hon. Minister what is he doing about health, which is one of the root problems?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, as you know, we pay $1.25 for medical coverage of each recipient under all the categorical programmes and the bill for anybody having a physician attending them at home, or in the physician's office, is sent to the medical association and then the doctor is paid. That is one thing that we do in a definite way with respect to health.

Now, I do not know how far my hon. friend is thinking along this line—if he means hospital beds, hospitalization, or hospital insurance, that is another story. But if he is asking me exactly what is in the budget for those people who are in receipt of welfare allowances, well, that is the answer as far as the categorical programmes are concerned and also in respect of the relief programmes.

We also have emergency dental treatment for the welfare programmes and we pay, as you know, 70 cents per child for those who receive mothers' allowances. Those are specific things that we do in respect to health, and I am sure that all the field workers and supervisors also look at the general conditions that exist, and advise—at least they are told to advise—everybody in the family to consult the doctor, or nurse, when necessary. I am sure the different health units in the area also are asked by the municipality, as well as our own field workers, to look after certain families who would be in need of that help. Apart from anything more specific than that, as far as the department is concerned, I think that just about covers it.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I appreciate your answer, sir, but would you consider that this health programme is sufficient? I want to stress that you, sir, with me, agree that health, poor health, is one of the reasons for people having to be on relief. Do you, sir, feel that the structure that we have in this province—one of the wealthiest provinces, I presume, in the world—that the structure that we have with respect to health, is satisfactory?

Are you satisfied with this—with the health administration for the people? And if you are not satisfied, what proposals have you brought forward to your government because I can see, sir, that you feel most sympathetic that bad health is a problem and I assume that you would have ideas on a government level how this could be changed.

I am asking, are you satisfied with this $1.25 or $1.50 you provide on relief, plus dental treatment, and if you are not satisfied, what proposals you would make? You have been Minister of Public Welfare now for a number of years, could you tell us when you proposed any suggestions of a broader approach to health, having agreed that health is one of the problems of people being on relief?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is a matter on which the hon. member is asking me to make either a political pronouncement or something of that description, which I am not in a habit of doing in that particular respect. However, I might say that I do not think any of us, regardless of where we sit, will ever be satisfied that any programme of that description is one that is good enough, and should be fixed at where we have it at any time.

I think we must continue at all times to try to better it in as many ways as possible.

As far as the $1.25 is concerned, this is a matter of agreement between the doctors; 70 cents is also a matter of agreement with the dentists. Every four or five years we look at this matter again to see if it compensates the doctors well enough to look after this particular job. There are areas with people on relief, where the municipality pays for dental and surgical costs entirely, while we deal with other matters which come under general relief and pay the 80 per cent prescribed as shareable.

There are still some fields in which we are not perfect. We hope, and I have high hopes, Mr. Chairman, that when we meet in Ottawa many of these problems, instead of having different categorical programmes, will be under one general agreement. I must congratulate the Ottawa government in this respect; they have expressed the view of possibly going along with that change. We shall know about this on May 11, 12 or 13 and I hope it comes to pass. Maybe we will be able to enlarge these programmes more as we would like to at the present time.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to continue on this because we both realize that it is such a root problem. You have hopes, sir, for the future in connection with agreements with the federal government. Could I ask you, for example, in connection with the health of the people of this province, what advances in the past three years you have advocated and implemented in connection with the programme for the health of the people of this province? Again, always stressing that this is one of the root problems that causes relief, in the past three years, what have you done, what have you changed in a dynamic aggressive way, in connection with the health of the people?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: One feature, if I recall well, Mr. Chairman, is that we prepay the hospital insurance premium—which is certainly a large item. I can assure the hon. member that I will be fighting very hard for the same thing to happen when the other matter comes in to be legislated upon.

Mr. Bryden: You mean that doctors' services be prepaid?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Somewhat as they are now under our plan.

Mr. Thompson: Sir, I appreciate these sentiments of yours. When you say "the other matter," are you referring to the medical insurance plan?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes. I hope these people will have it on the same basis they have it now—free; that they will have to pay no premiums as—

Mr. MacDonald: Is that government policy?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Does that mean it is government policy, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I was asked to give my own impression, and I am giving it. I do not know if it will be government policy, but you were asking what I think of it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: Sir, I appreciate this is probably one of the most enlightening days we have had from the hon. Minister of Public Welfare. I said, I remember, in the last estimates that somewhere you would be a knight on a white horse. Clouds misted that vision, I must admit, for a long time but at long last the vision is coming to me. I am sure, sir, that you speak for the government because we all agree with the principle of Cabinet solidarity. We have seen occasions when that has not completely applied—

Mr. Reilly: Oh, let us get on!

Mr. Thompson: Let me tell you this is very fundamental. A Minister stands there and tells us he is for medical insurance programmes—I can appreciate that the hon. member says, “Oh, let us get on.” There are people in this province who have been waiting for years—

Several hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: —and they did not bring in a medical insurance programme; and we are not going to—

Mr. Reilly: In 1919 a Liberal federal government promised a health plan—

Mr. Thompson: We are not going to listen to the cries of these fellows saying, “Let us get on!”

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Thompson: Again, as I would emphasize for our poor deluded friends, I am talking about the root problem which the discerning hon. Minister enunciated as the basis of relief. If our friends are disinterested in this, if they want to throw aside these root problems, sir, I would suggest to them that they can either resign or leave this Chamber while we are discussing them.

Mr. Reilly: Denounce your own friends in Ottawa!

An hon. member: Go to the hockey game!

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate then, sir, that you have come to the conclusion that there should be a medical insurance programme, a comprehensive medical insurance programme.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, I did not say that. I said I would like those people to be treated, if there is any medical insurance plan, the same way as they are under the hospitalization plan, if at all possible.

Mr. Sopha: No, you did not exactly say that.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is what I said. Do not paraphrase me, putting words into my mouth.

Mr. Thompson: And I would like to come to education, which the hon. Minister pointed out as one of the root problems.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Thompson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say again that I have sat in this House now for four years and I have not become completely conditioned to the cynicism and arrogance on the part of certain people. To me, $18 million of welfare can give hope to mothers and to children, if we are giving it with a proper, forward-looking approach. I can remember, sir, walking through my own riding at one point, then standing in this House and talking about some of the homes I had visited. I talked about one where a little girl had come out and told me there was only one pair of shoes for the children. I told this in this House, and I remember one particular Minister, across the way, who pulled out a handkerchief to mock me and pretended he was wiping tears from his eyes—

An hon. member: Crocodile tears.

Mr. Thompson: —and I would say this cynicism, if anything, made me proud and also resolve that I would stay a Liberal, even though we stay on this side for years. And we will not. But if anything makes me proud to be part of it, it was the fact that at least we can remain true to the cause of people who are in suffering. And if they are bored, the government members, that is fine with me because I intend to pursue this subject. Now I come to education.

Mr. E. A. Dunlop (Forest Hill): Try to elucidate it, too.

Mr. Thompson: I will try, sir. The problem is that we want the hon. Minister to elucidate. He, after all, is responsible for the programme. It has taken a long time, perhaps, to get some elucidations from him but could I ask you, sir, with respect to education: You agree that lack of education is one of the root causes of people being on welfare? You have also agreed that there are generations of welfare cases.

Could I ask what kind of dynamic approach you are taking? We have seen in the United States, and I am sure you have read some of their studies—have you seen the approaches they have taken with special teachers in poor economic areas? We have seen the Atkinson Foundation study, for example, showing where, in low economic areas, there is a situation of not getting as good an education for the children as otherwise. I ask the hon. Minister then, in view of recognizing these problems, what is he doing about that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member asking me as a member of the government, or asking me as a private member?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I can say that I do not know. I do not know that in this province there is any child who wants to be educated who cannot be educated. I think our school system has to take a bow to no one else, not only in Canada but indeed in North America. We can get educated here.

Naturally I do not expect, and I trust the hon. member does not expect me or anyone of my staff to go around and tell the people who are on relief or otherwise, to take their children to school and see that they are educated. Surely, in this day and age, there are enough facilities of learning available, not only in the city of Toronto but right across the province, and I am quite sure the people of the province of Ontario are wise enough to know this and take full advantage of it.

If you go into the upper echelon, of matters of high school and technical school and all that, I think there again these facilities exist. And all I can do—I am quite sure I cannot do anything else—if the hon. member has anything to suggest to me other than this, I would be very pleased to know about it. All we can do is to try to educate the people and the parents generally that this is exactly the position and they should make use of education. As you know, the laws of the province, in the primary sense at least, are very stringent and this has been, I think, pretty well followed across the province. This school attendance has not been a problem and I am quite sure that encouragement has been given in a general way, so much so that I would dare anybody in this House to say that there is any better system of education in Canada than that which we have here in Ontario.

Mr. Thompson: Well if you add this approach of such utter blindness to the conditions that really exist across this province—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I do not agree with the hon. member. I think my word is as good as his.

Mr. Thompson: I am not talking about words between the hon. Minister and myself, I am talking about research being done on this.

Again, I would refer the hon. Minister to some of the Atkinson research in connection with children who can go on to university. He may come to a sudden revelation that university and higher education is still to an extent a privilege for those who can afford it. I would suggest to the hon. Minister as well that if—and I question in fact, I would ask him to answer me: has he read this study that is being done in the United States in connection with the war on poverty, the economic council study? Could I ask the hon. Minister if he has read it?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: As to the economic study that is taking place in the United States at the present moment, I have not read it extensively as the hon. member might have. But I certainly have listened to many discourses on it, especially President Johnson's address in this particular respect, a copy of which I have at home. I have listened to it and I am quite sure that many of us here have. But not to say that I might have gone into the subject extensively, as the hon. member has, and he has taken a special tangent. I appreciate that—and I admit to the hon. member that I do not know everything, that is for sure. Sometimes, many times, those sitting on either side of the House certainly have some knowledge which is of benefit to all of us and which benefits me too. I appreciate that and I make no bones about it, because it is true. However, to say that I have studied the topic really deeply, I must confess to the hon. member, no. I do not know where I would find the time to do all these things in the first place.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate the hon. Minister saying he does not know everything, and I would agree with him. No, I do not want to say it in that sense. I would say I certainly do not know everything either.

My only hope is that as the Minister of Public Welfare he might know some points about welfare and give us some answers.

I say again on this; in connection with education, he asked did I have any suggestions. Well I suggest first of all, as a priority I would give some reading to the discussions going on in the United States about war on poverty. As another priority I suggest that the hon. Minister might read the book which the hon. member for Woodbine has suggested, that might give him a frame of mind, a philosophy, towards the problems of welfare.

And then, sir, I would say this, that having read those I think the hon. Minister might look at some of the studies being done with respect to education. I am thinking of the Atkinson research study. I even suggested before this session had adjourned that he might have a look at the situation in British Columbia and the problem there—it is a particularly different one, it is a cultural one—but it is the problem with generation after generation having hidebound attitudes. I am speaking of the Doukhobors, the radical Sons of Freedom. The approach there is that they have tried to change the younger generation, and I suggest this might, in a sense, be applicable to hardcore family cases. In other words, with the young people, if we could concentrate on encouraging them with education and providing grants, and doing in fact what the hon. Minister says that he would feel I would never suggest, that is to go out to these families, tell them of the opportunities of education and to provide opportunities.

I had thought on the general welfare assistance Acts—and I have asked this previously—I thought that there were opportunities for the children, for example, to secure the help they needed to go to university. I asked that about four years ago because even at that time I could sense the needs of young children who live in an economically deprived home for opportunities to give them a broader vision. At that time the hon. Minister told me there were no provisions for this. Having made, I hope, some suggestions to the hon. Minister with respect to education, I trust we are both agreed that education plays a great part in rehabilitating a person, far more than just giving them some financial assistance.

The hon. Minister mentioned unemployment, and tied that in with automation. When I think of unemployment and automation I am thinking of the tie-in with retraining and so on, and I wonder if the hon. Minister could enlarge on that for us?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if I want to enter into a discourse on automation and unemployment. We have heard some very able speeches made here by the hon. member for Scarborough West and also the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) I think had some words about this. Also the hon. Minister of Economics and Development made some remarks about it. I am sure that they have expressed views on which I could not elaborate because their knowledge on that is much larger than mine, and certainly their research was.

Another thing that I might say, Mr. Chairman, is that in Ontario here the unemployment figure is about 3.8 per cent at the present moment. I do not think it has ever been as good. All these people who are receiving welfare allowances today are certainly not people who are out of work because of the fact that they are not able to find work. The percentage who are able to work is very small. But as to the general impression that unemployment causes relief, or anything like that; sure, it is a part and parcel of the picture, but it is certainly not the largest part of the picture.

I would say that maybe the matter of health is the greatest part of it. There are people who are unable to work because of health conditions, because of the fact that they are crippled or the fact that they have a certain heart sickness or some other sickness and are not able to do any work but are not eligible in a categorical programme, so they go on relief. But those who are employable and do not receive unemployment insurance, I think represent a very small number as far as we have it now. To say that it is not a cause of what we mentioned as the general causes would be, I think, not correct; but I think it is a very small cause compared to the others at the present moment.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister thinks that we have a very small number of unemployed who could work and are unemployed, why is it that he pays such a miserly sum of $1.68 a day for a man who is unemployed? One man at $1.86 a day! How does the hon. Minister expect him to pay rent and to live and get by? And yet he says there is a small number of them.

I think the hon. Minister is very wrong on that, but how you can be a Minister of Public Welfare and pay such a miserly sum, I do not know. I would like to know if the hon. Minister could answer this question. Do you believe that a human being in the city of Toronto can live on $1.86 a day? Can you answer that question?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, the only thing I can say in respect to this, as I said a moment ago the allowances for food have always been based on the Canadian dietary standards as approved by the Canadian Council on Nutrition.

Mr. Trotter: The welfare council will not support a $1.86—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: You are speaking of a single person?

Mr. Trotter: Yes, a single man.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: A single man?

Mr. Trotter: Gets $1.86 a day to live on!

Hon. Mr. Cecile: A single man now will receive, at least as of April 1—it has gone up $10—will receive a matter of about $60 to $70 per month. He can go up to $70. This includes electric light.

Mr. Trotter: It is $1.86 a day, unless the rates have gone up since January 15.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, since April 1 of this year.

Mr. Trotter: Since April 1 of this year. Now it is $2 a day. Fourteen cents more.

Mr. Thompson: I would just like to—

Mr. Chairman: Order! The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, now that the hon. Minister has struck trenchantly to the philosophic core of why we have a welfare programme, I would like to have him strike to the core of justifying the nature of The General Welfare Assistance Act and, in essence, the underlying philosophy of that Act—which is categorical assistance.

Aid is divided into categories in this province, an approach which we of the New Democratic Party have repudiated; and we have repudiated it, I think, basically for two reasons. You establish categories into which recipients must arbitrarily fall and beyond which maximum allowance they cannot possibly draw.

Now I do not believe, like the hon. member for Dovercourt, that a Minister of Public Welfare, administering a certain limited number of Acts, would not be able to explain to this House justifications for the regulations and sections of those Acts. So I should like to ask the hon. Minister some specific questions relating to the regulations of The General Welfare Assistance Act, in order to demonstrate the nature of categorical assistance and what it implies for human beings.

Let us start with something he just referred to. He mentioned the Canadian Council on Nutrition, a group which has been advising the federal department of health since 1937.

Mr. Minister, under section 12 of the regulations in general welfare assistance, you make certain special dietary provisions for pregnant women. I have a couple of questions I would like to ask you. You say there should be an additional supply of milk and vitamin D for pregnant women in their last five months of pregnancy; then you say there should be an additional supply of milk, food, and vitamin D for women in the period of lactation. Now could the hon. Minister explain to me—and this leads to something about the Canadian Council on Nutrition to which I want to come—can the hon. Minister explain to me why food is necessary in one instance as a supplement for women nursing, and why is it not necessary in the other instance?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well again, Mr. Chairman, I say this is a question which I am quite sure could be answered better by my friend the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond).

Mr. Bryden: Well, they are your regulations.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The regulations, yes. As I mentioned a moment ago, I have the regulations as they are formulated. I am guided completely by them in the sense that they are formulated by the nutrition experts, as I stated a moment ago, by the late Dr. McHenry, I think, the professor of public health nutrition at the University of Toronto, as well as the qualified nutritionist we have on our staff in the department—who continually reviews the adequacy of food allowances, to an actual and detailed analysis of prepared food costs.

I confess that, being a layman in this respect, I could not tell you the value of one food or another, but I have to follow these people who are supposed to know about these things; that is the way we deal with it. Again I state that this matter is completely under the control and the jurisdiction of the municipality, with the instructions we have handed over to deal with this.

I might cite, as an example of the present amount included in the pre-added budgets as a food allowance under general welfare assistance, as compared with the average monthly food requirements which have been calculated by the visiting homemakers, for instance, in Toronto, and compared also with the most recent food cost analysis of our staff nutritionist. I suppose that is the best way to do it. If I take an example of a family, for instance, of six persons, including father and mother and four children, let us say they are eleven, six, three, and eight months, if you wish to have a baby in there—we find that the allowance which would be granted to this family for food would amount to $104.75. The monthly amount for the same family, as calculated from the figures supplied by the homemakers association, would be $94.44; while the latest nutritionist calculation provides an amount of $99.51.

You have those figures, I have no doubt, and you will note that the food allowance as provided for in the regulations is in excess, naturally, of the calculations. Clothing allowances in the pre-added budget for the family are also calculated on the basis of $36 per year per person—and $72 for two, $96 for three and so on. Nominal amounts of up to $3 are provided for household sundries, depending on the size of the family. I do not like to say that because somebody is doing worse or better than me that is the way things should be, but in the United States, generally, it is much lower across the board.

I might say that now, as you know, the maximum shareable budget since April 1, right across the board in Ontario—the $75 for rental has not been included in the pre-added budget, so you can go up to $255 a month allowance. These regulations are based upon what we have received from people who are supposed to know about these things, and that is how I have to conduct myself accordingly. To say that it has not worked; well, surely the people who are administering this matter, the municipalities, would certainly have been on our back from way back but they have not done so. The only thing they really have been at us for, for some time now, is the matter of rent; and we added to that before in respect to the larger cities—now it is right across the board for Ontario.

As far as the municipal administration is concerned, I must say, Mr. Chairman, that they seem to have been carrying out the purposes of the legislation pretty well. I am not saying that is the reason they have not asked us for anything. We admit that maybe, if it was necessary, we would look at needs further upon their request, but at the present moment that is the way the situation stands. If my hon. friend expects me to give him the difference between a nursing mother and, as he mentioned a moment ago, a woman in a certain condition, well I confess to him that I could not answer that.

Mr. S. Lewis: I do not expect, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister to tell me the number of tablets a woman is required to take for a protein supplement during pregnancy, but I do expect the hon. Minister to be able to justify certain regulations before this House. I raised this in the aftermath of something he said quite purposely, because again we have this peculiar situation of his own advisers contradicting the contents and material of the department. I shall quote to you what the Canadian Council on Nutrition thinks should be a supplement for a young woman in such a situation—and they do not say milk and vitamin D. They say three quarts of milk, four eggs, one pound of fresh fruit, one pound of green vegetables, 12 ounces of meat, four ounces of fish, several vitamin supplements, and they come up with a figure somewhat beyond that of the department.

If the department is, in fact, being advised by the Canadian Council of Nutrition, then it contradicts its own advisors. I think that the explanation comes basically to the fact that the hon. Minister has set up these peculiar, irrelevant and arbitrary categories into which people are supposed to fall.

I want to take that another step further in the general assistance regulations. I would like the hon. Minister to explain to me, and to the House as a whole, why, in determining the circumstances under which people are entitled to welfare, 40 per cent is removed from any allowance they may be otherwise receiving under a blind assistance or disabled assistance or mothers' allowances, or old age assistance. I will go further: Why do you deduct 40 per cent from people on welfare when somebody in the same house with them is receiving some other allowance? After that, I should like the hon. Minister to tell me how, when people are thereby driven to such impossible circumstances, he can suggest that he understands the root causes of a welfare programme.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The only answer I can give is this—I presume my hon. friend means that there is a reduction because a person, one of those receiving a pension or some other form of categorical aid has also another source of income such as a boarder. That is why the reduction is made. It is the same thing. I imagine, as in the case of someone who is on a partial pension because of the fact that other revenues are coming in—such as a rent that should be charged, or is charged against the allowance or pension.

Mr. S. Lewis: What the hon. Minister is saying then, and I think we should get it down, is that if there is a disabled person living in the house with an individual who is on welfare, that man who receives welfare has his allowance cut by 40 per cent of the amount which the disabled person is receiving. What is the hon. Minister trying to achieve? Does he think the disabled person should be required to live on less? Does he believe the welfare recipient should be required to live on less? Just who is the department discriminating against?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is calculated, as I stated a moment ago, on the fact that a person, regardless of what he is receiving either from a pension or disabled persons allowance is supposed to pay rent. He pays rent, and that is revenue for the person to whom it is paid.

Mr. S. Lewis: Let me ask the hon. Minister, then, why he would remove from a person, requiring general welfare under the regulations, all income from any pension, small or otherwise, which he may have accumulated. I would like to ask the hon. Minister, who has a closer association with this than I have: Why is it that a man who has contributed his productive capacities to society for a period of 20 or 30 years, and has accumulated perhaps a pittance of a pension, let us say $5 or $10 a week, and then finds himself on general welfare—why must his pension, as a result of his contribution to society, be deducted from the amount the department gives?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: What is my hon. friend suggesting by that, may I ask him? Is he suggesting no limit in this respect, or must there be a limit some place?

Mr. S. Lewis: I am asking the hon. Minister to explain this aspect of it. If he explains it in terms of limits, then we can pursue it a step further. I should like to know how the department explains the regulation.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: As the hon. member knows, there is a limit. You can give just so much welfare, depending on what society permits or the individual needs. There is a limit there. If you belong to a categorical programme you have a right to earn so much; and over and above that there is a reduction on your pension. I would presume the same principle applies everywhere.

Mr. S. Lewis: The setting of arbitrary limits is precisely what we take offence to, because you cannot expect people in society to be suffocated within the boundaries of arbitrary limits which bear no relation whatsoever to their economic and social needs. If you set some limits, we suggest, on the basis of what a family legitimately needs, rather than on the basis of what will keep them in perpetual indigence, then you have a much more realistic development. Let me ask the hon. Minister how he explains the figures which do exist, which his department hands out.

I see by the regulations that a single person, unattached, receives under general welfare assistance, $29.85 a month, pre-added budget. That is $358 a year. Then he receives, for rent, $35 a month for a heated premises. That is $420 per year. So the department pays a single person on general welfare $778.20 a year.

There are some single people in this Legislature. There is the hon. member for Kent West (Mr. McKeough) on my immediate left; there is the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers) left of him again. I wonder if it is conceivable, in the course of time and fate, that they might no longer sit in this august Assembly. When they return to the constituency from whence they came they may not again fit into the employment category they were pursuing before election. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, about these people, who would then have to live on an income—I feel very sadly for them—of $778.20 a year. I ask the hon. Minister: Does he think that is a reasonable income for a single man who is unemployed and on general welfare—$778.20 a year?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I still think that is a very nice philosophy which I could discuss for a long, long while. I presume—it all depends in what part of Ontario you are. You might live very handily with that in some areas but in some other places it would be with very great difficulty. Then, as I stated a moment ago, this programme is absolutely and entirely administered by the municipality which can give this person any amount but the federal government and the provincial government, or the senior governments, subsidize up to 80 per cent of that part which is under regulation, but there is nothing stopping the municipality from going beyond that. As a matter of fact they receive, right now, some unconditional grants which are related to welfare. I am quite sure, and I am satisfied by meeting many of the people who deal with this problem in the different cities, that they do exceed the maximums shareable to a large extent. They do that to a very large extent where the need is shown.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I continue on this particular attack only to demonstrate that there is not that much of a discrepancy—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis: I am getting to that, gentlemen.

An hon. member: Put it on the record.

Mr. S. Lewis: I know, Mr. Chairman, that the august members of deserved affluence in this House find it difficult at times to comprehend discussions of welfare but we ask them—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis: We are coming to that. Mr. Minister, from your various advisors, who have suggested what is required for people living on a general welfare pattern or living at any point of subsistence level, you have received carefully calculated minimum family budgets. You referred to one source yourself at the outset of your remarks, put out by the homemakers association of Toronto. In every single instance, in the budget which they consider a minimum, a budget which relates to maintenance of a minimum standard of health and self respect, in almost every instance, experts in the field, who have dealt with human beings in need and welfare applicants, suggest $1,000 more a year for individuals, for families, for whatever size group you would wish.

Now these are minimum figures, the minimum—so it is written in the preface—necessary to maintain a standard of health and self respect. And most of them rise as high as $1,000 greater than this department is prepared to allocate. These are the people from whom you receive advice. And it does not jibe. Again the hon. Minister's advisors, his consultative agencies, run counter to what he himself has put forward in the departmental estimates and in the regulations of this particular Act.

I have one more specific question to ask on the issue of categories, because I think that is what it resolves itself to—fitting people into arbitrary income allowances, destroying any possibilities which exist for self-respect and integration into the society as working human beings. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if it is not true that a mother with two fatherless children under general welfare assistance receives less than a mother with two fatherless children under mother's allowance?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, I think there would be a differential there, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. S. Lewis: Could the hon. Minister tell me why it is—and again we come to this incredible situation of categories—that the children, fatherless in one instance, receive more than children who are fatherless in another instance? How does The Department of Public Welfare justify it, how does he explain it?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that under the general welfare assistance in this respect, or relief if you want to make it definite, these are used for short-term purposes and the other, the mothers' allowances, are on a long-term basis and are much higher.

Mr. S. Lewis: Does the hon. Minister then contend that people are any the less needy in the short term?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, I would suggest that, yes.

Mr. S. Lewis: The hon. Minister would suggest that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, because on a short-term basis you might have some funds at your disposition that you would not have on a long-term basis.

Mr. S. Lewis: In other words, if a mother finds herself with two fatherless children, for whatever tragic reason, in January of 1964, you are arguing Mr. Minister, that, in January and February, under one category her needs would be less than under another category?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, if I may at this moment—I should have said this before but it just crossed my mind at the present time—that this is one programme that we have looked at over the years and have been reducing the waiting period from twelve months to six months. I do not think I am giving out any secrets, because I am going to bring it in here later in legislation—this waiting period will be reduced—as I hope to have my colleagues agree with me on this matter, and I think the House will too—I hope to decrease that period to three months. This will apply in cases of desertion by father, or whatever has happened in this respect. So it will really be on a very short term. This will also apply as far as jail terms to the breadwinner are concerned. We hope to bring this in at this very session.

Mr. S. Lewis: All what would be reduced? The length of time would be telescoped?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, the short term the hon. member speaks about would be three months only.

Mr. S. Lewis: All right. Suppose it is three months only. I ask the hon. Minister how he justifies it? I cannot see it and he says he does justify it. He says he justifies it because of some strange short-term versus long-term formula. We are not dealing with preferred shares, we are dealing with a mother and fatherless children. Now how does he justify giving them less for three months with precisely the same needs under one category as under another? I think that the House deserves some kind of explanation.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I suppose there is a place where you must put a termination or a beginning. As far as we are concerned this period used to be a full year, and at one time there was nothing at all if you could find the deserting father. But this the hon. member must also realize—and I am sure that I will not cause any harm or grieve anyone when I say this—that at the same time, while I am trying to protect or help these people, at the same time I do not want any of the deserting husbands or that sort of thing to take unfair advantage of welfare and be gone every now and then. It has been found in our investigations this has been done in Toronto and other places, that is what is happening. I have to draw the line some place. If I have not drawn it at the proper place, this is a question that will have to be determined in our studies as we go along; but so far we have appreciated the fact that the six-months period was maybe a little too long. I am not claiming that it is perfect, but at the present time in our studies we think that it will serve the purpose for the time being at least.

I think we have reduced it to three months now for all the cases that come under desertion. If a man is sent to prison for a period of three months or more you get on to it immediately and that is the way we have made a decision in that respect. Now that decision may be changed later on, I do not know, but for now that is what it is.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I have sat and listened with very great care and I have reflected upon the various statements and sallies that have been made across the floor and it strikes me, sir, that fundamentally, though it has been a very useful debate, a very useful and enlightening one in this matter of welfare which is of grave concern to all sides of the House, that fundamentally the problem is one of philosophy and a divergence and a difference of philosophy between the hon. Minister and his hon. colleagues—especially the hon. Minister, because he has been the articulate one—on one side of the House and those of us on the other side of the House.

Really, the hon. Minister let the cat out of the bag and disclosed his hand, he did not play his cards very close to the vest, when he first introduced his estimates in this House on March 18, as long ago as that day when we commenced a discussion of estimates. The hon. member for York South is right when he alludes to the fact that in the previous four or five years the estimates have gone through this House relatively easily. Now it may be that no estimates from now on are going to go through this House during the next three or four sessions with facility, but until this year, in my recollection, there has not been the analytical approach to these estimates that we have had this year.

On March 18 the hon. Minister displayed for all who would see—and that includes even the most obtuse—his philosophy to the problem of welfare. When he said in summing up his views about the remarks of the hon. member for Scarborough West that when we come to the day that the people of Ontario are regimented and paternalized, then perhaps the suggestions of the hon. member for Scarborough West, which are not fundamentally different in principle and philosophy from the remarks of the hon. member for Dovercourt and my hon. friend from Parkdale, who is a man who feels deeply these things, there is no difference in philosophy between them—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Sopha: I am speaking of welfare and welfare assistance. I will get specific, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister in his mind and the use of his intellect seems to be saying that we on this side of the House want to keep these people in their state, that we want to increase the grant to them so that they do not suffer discomfort, anxiety and distress. He seems to be saying that we believe that all we need do is increase the amount of money that is given to them.

Nothing could be further from the truth, if one listened with any ordinary degree of care at all to the hon. member for Scarborough West and the hon. member for Dovercourt, for inherent in their remarks is always the supervening and compelling principle that what we on this side of the House are concerned about is to raise these people out of their state and once again to return them to a useful and an active role within society so that they are not dependent upon the public purse or anybody else's charity.

That is what the hon. member for Dovercourt was saying when he delineated the five root factors. He made the House cognizant of the reasons for the need for welfare among people who come to the public purse and beg charity; if you analyze them, then you take a large step in the direction of alleviating, improving and removing their condition. That is the thinking behind all the words that emit from this side of the House. The hon. Minister, I am sad to say—because he is a likeable fellow, really he is a likeable fellow, one has to like him for his personality—but it saddens me to have to stand in the House and say that the hon. Minister, I fear, being as objective as I can though I am a politician, I fear he does not comprehend these things. He does not understand them at all.

Now, in the matter of welfare under this vote—what is the number? Vote 1806?

An hon. member: Vote 1806.

Mr. Sopha: One hears a great deal recently about shared cost programmes. They are much in the news. They have been since the end of March. This is a shared cost programme between the provincial government and the municipalities and perhaps the time has come when we might have a look at this shared cost between this Legislature and the municipalities who share the cost with us on an 80-20 ratio, is it? We put up 80 per cent of the money and they put up 20 per cent and, speaking for myself entirely, exercising the freedom inherent in being a member of the Opposition as opposed to being a Minister of the Crown, I wonder whether in 1964 we have not come to the day when the province ought to absorb all of the cost of welfare and its administration.

The reason I say that—I could give many reasons, but I will give only one—I will give one with which I have become impressed as a result of reading that study, inaugurated by the deputy Minister of this department, into the problems of long-term assistance programmes. I was convinced that I was right when I read the part of that study which indicated that they had evaluated the principle that, when there was counselling of these people and their families, they saw a result which, in the words of the deputy Minister, “exceeded all expectations”. What a wonderful result—when all they had sought to do was to bring scientific technique to bear to see what could be done for and toward these people, and the results “exceeded all expectations”. They found in group B, of 100 families, that where they were given all possible help and treatment and personal counselling twice as many of those people, as on a voluntary basis, had to a large measure become alleviated in their condition within six months.

I am impressed with family counselling. I am impressed with it, not only from the point of view of what it might do to restore these people to a useful role in society—but, coming from the community I come from, I am impressed with it as a possible means of preventing homicide. Homicide—which we have had in my community since Christmas. We have had three startling demonstrations of homicide. That, some will say, is a matter for the criminal law. A matter of detection. Punishment. But I hurl it back and I say it is a matter of prevention; for when people get into a state of family dislocation so that the anxieties and the stresses and the strains are more than they can bear, and they have no place to turn, they have no place to go for succour and help and assistance and sympathy, then in many cases, and in my community since Christmas, they have resorted to homicide.

In two cases whole families were wiped out. The entire family was wiped out and little children, a number of them; how many do they number? They number seven or eight, and their distressed and anxious and perhaps paranoiac parent decided that he or she had come to the end of the rope. The string had snapped and all reason had disappeared; then that parent took the lives of the children.

That is what impels me to the conclusion that the time has come when the provincial government must take over the whole responsibility of welfare, for I see it as the only means whereby we will have the establishment soon, in our province, at least in large urban centres, of family counselling services. Yes—call them what you will. I call them family counselling services.

You have an agency. It will be an agency, staffed by trained people—sociologists, trained social workers—to whom recourse might be made by people who suffer from family dislocation and disharmony, whether it comes from alcohol or whether it comes from gambling or whether it comes from the fact that the parent no longer is interested, in an affectionate way, in his wife and is perhaps wandering to the arms of someone else. Whatever the reason, maybe then there will be an agency to which these people might turn and seek help and advice. And beyond that, an agency which will exercise follow-up care.

Where do they go now? Where does a mother go now when she needs advice about her family problems? Generally speaking, she goes to one of three persons—she might go to all three of them. She goes to the clergyman; she goes to the medical practitioner, their doctor, the family doctor; or she goes to the lawyer.

And apart from the clergyman—and I do not speak for them because I do not know a great deal about their life and work—but apart from the clergyman, who may be qualified to give advice and may be able to exercise some follow-up inspection, I do say that when she goes to the doctor or the lawyer she is going to people who are unqualified. Unqualified in the sense that they have no formal training to advise in family disharmony. They did not learn it at any university.

The only qualifications that are in them are those they have picked up from the ordinary experience of living and seeing the problems; but apart from that, the lawyer is no more qualified, and perhaps is less qualified, to advise on family life than the baker or the man who delivers the milk to the house. And besides, the doctor and the lawyer, when all is said and done, are much too busy. They are much too busy to give advice.

I have seen these women—mostly women—I have seen hundreds of them. And I felt inadequate and unsure about what I said to them.

I think I related the story about when, as a lawyer, I was in a police station one night recently, and a woman came in and deposited a gun with the sergeant of police—deposited a gun and ammunition with them. I was rather dumbfounded. I said to the sergeant, "Does that happen often?" He said, "Two or three times a week a woman brings a gun and ammunition in and leaves it with us." I do not need to spell out the reason she does that.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): You got that in twice.

Mr. Sopha: I am not going to tarry to discuss it with the hon. Provincial Secretary. I say to my friend, because he has been my friend, the hon. Minister of Public Welfare, that if he will but open his eyes and see the possibilities of this department in the improvement of our society, that if he will just approach his task in this House in presenting and piloting his estimates through, we, in the Liberal party, will not vote to reduce his travelling expenses. We will give him more if he wants. We will be agreeable to give him more. But if he will just listen to the discussion from the point of view that every hon. member on each side of the House who speaks is not interested in socializing and regimenting these people, what we say here is emitted from the point of view that we want to improve our society.

You know, really, the philosophy of the hon. Minister made me reflect on the night I saw Professor Frank Underhill on the television, discussing with—by George, I think it was Senator Grattan O'Leary, the man much in the news now. They were discussing things, and Professor Underhill said the difference between a Conservative and a Liberal is that the Conservative believes in the doctrine of original sin and a Liberal does not. Perhaps there is a lot of truth in that. There is a lot of truth in it. To me a Liberal believes in the possibility of the betterment of the human condition at all times.

Finally, we, in this party, and we can safely say for our hon. friends on the left here, we, in this party, are not interested only in a society where, as the hon. Minister says, there is only 3.8 per cent unemployment, a society of such affluence that the rich get richer and the poor get poorer. We are not really interested in the rich at all. They can look after themselves. What we really are interested in is these people who are the recipients of this $18 million that we are asked to vote, because they cannot look after themselves without advice and aid and sympathy and constructive assistance in order to remove them from that condition of poverty that my hon. friend from Woodbine speaks about, and that they may be lifted up out of that condition into a condition of dignity that is the right of all mankind. I say to the hon. Minister, that is the philosophical basis with which we, on this side of the House, speak to him and would implore him to receive our suggestions according to that vein.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to return to the point that my hon. friend from Scarborough West was dealing with a few minutes ago, the question of the mother with small children, where there is no father in the house.

Now sometimes it is a little difficult to hear the hon. Minister, those microphones seem to be rather a long way away from him and I am not quite sure I understood his answers. I want to raise this problem in relation to women in a specific situation, where they have been deserted by their husbands, or at any rate by the father of their children. The husband and father has been located, his whereabouts is known, and if he is earning any income, some sort of a court award can be got against him for maintenance. Now, in a situation of this kind, does that woman ever get on mother's allowance?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, when my hon. friend from Woodbine raises former occasions it reminds me that there have been many recollections mentioned here before, so if he does not mind, I will recall former days.

There used to be a great gentleman sitting where my hon. friend from York South is sitting today, from Ansonville, I think. He used to make a great speech about husbands who desert their families. I think it would be very salutary for all of us to read it, as he certainly had no use and no sympathy for these deserting husbands as we call them. However, I do not exactly know if I can answer the question properly. I understand that in the case of a deserting husband, and I hope to introduce legislation on this at this session, if he is not to be found, let us say for a period of three months, then the wife in question is eligible for mother's allowance on the basis of the fact that her husband is gone. Before this it was six months, but now we hope to put it at three months. If the husband is found, meanwhile, I think there is another period which must lapse before the mother's allowance payments are discontinued to allow the restored husband to start work. If it is impossible for him to work for physical reasons or otherwise, well, then the mother's allowance will be continued. Does that answer the question?

Mr. Bryden: I think, in part, Mr. Chairman. At least it answered the question as far as I posed it. There are some further aspects of it with which I would like to deal. I think the plans the hon. Minister has announced represent a step forward, and we can certainly always welcome steps forward, even if we would like to see even further progress made. But excepting the fact that the regulations that I believe he has in mind are not yet in effect, or am I right in assuming that these are regulations that you are still considering and hope—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: These are not regulations, Mr. Chairman. It will be a bill presented—

Mr. Bryden: Well, there will be legislation that you hope to bring before this House and that you hope the House will pass.

What about the mother then? As I take it from the answer you gave, under this proposed new legislation if a deserting husband is not found in three months, then the woman will qualify for mother's allowance. If he is found, but has not got anything and cannot pay anything for the maintenance of the children, there will be another period before she will qualify. Well—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No. There will be a period of grace before the allowance will be discontinued.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, I see. Yes. Well, then, what about the case where the husband is found, he is known to have an income, there is an order from the family court against him to pay a certain amount for the maintenance of the children for whom he certainly should be held responsible and that amount does not add up to as much as the woman would get under mother's allowance, what sort of help will she get?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that there are not too many, thank God, of these cases, but that matter is now under review. This, I can assure you, is under review and I think we will be able to deal with it in the same sense as the others in providing a supplement in that respect.

However, I have nothing exactly in that particular field at the present moment. I can assure my hon. friend that there are very few of these. As I say, I am not an awfully sympathetic fellow with respect to these deserters. I might take the suggestion of my friend, Mr. Grummett, in those days, that these people should not be allowed to roam around. We should put them away some place so as to allow the mother and her children to be raised properly, even if the need might be very small, because this kind of example is not very good. That was the general tenor of the speeches as I can recall them.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I do not know how many are affected. I suspect the hon. Minister may be a little sanguine when he says the number is very small. But even if there is only one, I think there is a problem, and since the matter is now under active consideration, this might be an appropriate time to put forward suggestions that are amateurish, no doubt, but are based at least on some personal experience in trying to assist women who find themselves in this situation.

As far as the deserting father is concerned, I have no sympathy for him. I certainly think that everything possible should be done to make him fulfil his obligations. I remember many of the comments that Mr. Grummett, I think he is the gentleman the hon. Minister is referring to, has made, and I think that many of those comments were well taken.

However, my concern is not so much with the man who has deserted his children and his children's mother, but with the mother and the children, they are the people I think we should be mainly concerned about. As to the hard hand of the law coming down on the father, I do not think there is any harm in that, but let us not penalize the mother and her children. This is what we are doing now. I know of cases, I have dealt with cases—and I will say that the deputy Minister and his department have given tremendous assistance in these cases within the framework of the law in which they must operate—cases of women who spend endless time going down to family court, trying to collect on an order made by the court. Unfortunately we have situations where a mother with two or three small children is deserted by her husband, his whereabouts is known, he is earning an income, there is a court order against him for the maintenance of his children, which is all as it should be, but we come now to the point where I think there should be a change. Who is fundamentally responsible for making sure that he pays up to the mother? If he does not pay she has to go down to family court and they have to chase after him. He may pay or he may not. If he does not, she can get some general welfare assistance. If he does, well, then she will carry on for another month with perhaps a lower level of general welfare assistance.

But a mother with two, three or four small children—and no father in the house—entirely responsible for the upbringing of those children, and with very limited resources for that purpose, should not have to worry herself with this perpetual trek to the family court to try to make sure that the father accepts his responsibility. I will quite agree that the father should be made to accept his responsibilities, if it is humanly possible, but I think that the mother should be in a position where she can relieve herself of any worry in that connection.

I am going to suggest to the hon. Minister that some sort of system should be worked out whereby a mother in those circumstances may, if she wishes, assign her claim against the father to the department. Then the department will pay her mother's allowances in exactly the same way it would pay mother's allowances to a widow and various other categories of women with children to bring up without any father to provide for them.

I think the woman has enough worries as it is and should be relieved of this additional worry. The department could relieve her if they were allowed to take assignments of her claims against the father and then pay the mother's allowance at the regular scale. Let the mother devote all of her energy and attention to looking after her children. It is just too much of a strain on her now to have this constant worry, and certainly there are many of these court orders which have to be enforced over and over again.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

It being 6 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

On vote 1806:

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) spoke about the national importance of an incident tonight. I understand that the Attorney General of the United States is speaking here tonight, too, and we would have appreciated an opportunity to hear that; but now, to get to assistance in welfare.

The 1963 public accounts show the amount of some $12 million-odd in general welfare assistance. I notice this here under the heading of general welfare assistance. Is it $18 million, in the estimates?

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) in his reply to the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) indicated that the reason for so much welfare assistance was because of the health of the nation. I understood him to say that the people on welfare are mostly those who are unable to work. Does that mean, sir, that the health of this province has so deteriorated in one year that $6 million more is required?

I notice also that it is rather interesting, comparing my own metropolitan area in North Bay with the two surrounding townships—approximately 45,000 people. The welfare assistance to that area amounts to less than $40,000. I will look at some of the hon. Ministers' areas—the hon. Minister of Public Welfare's own area—Hawkesbury, a town, I think, of a comparatively few thousand, has $89,000 in welfare; Brockville—the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld) again—less than 20,000 population, $50,000 in welfare. We look to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) and we find, for the town of Dunnville, a very high percentage of welfare. Look at the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) in the town of Timmins—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Troy: Well, it is $248,000—

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton): We can read it all, too.

Mr. Troy: I know you can read it all—

Mr. Kerr: We can read the whole book—

Mr. Troy: Well, I do not have to read the whole book. I just have to read a few of these striking examples.

Does it mean, then, that this district—shall I say, of Nipissing, which in the election campaign needed various things—does it mean that it is such a busy area or such a healthy area? The hon. Minister says that people are on relief mostly because of reasons of health. Does it mean—

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): I did not say anything of the kind—

Mr. Troy: Are you the Minister? Are you the one who made the—

Hon. Mr. Spooner: No, but you are talking to me about Timmins.

Mr. Troy: I am not talking to you—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Do not get excited!

Mr. Troy: Let us not get excited. I just said that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs—you are the Minister of Municipal Affairs, sir—you are from the town of Timmins. Your welfare assistance is up to $200,000 and more, and the hon. Minister said it is because the people are in poor health; that is why there is so much relief.

There were four causes mentioned by the hon. member for Dovercourt, and he discussed unemployment, education, health—

An hon. member: Five.

Mr. Troy: Five—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: Well, these people are reading your mind. There was a fifth one I did not know about, but one of them—and then you said both of them, because they were unable to work.

Mr. A. E. Reuter (Waterloo South): What is your point, Leo?

Mr. Troy: The point is this: If there is $6 million extra this year what has the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) been doing about the situation in this province, if we have to have 50 per cent more for welfare because of the fact that the bulk of the people are unable to work? Is that it?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Troy: Well, in Hawkesbury; in London, Ontario; the city of Peterborough—50,000-odd people, almost $470,000 in welfare. Then, I notice in today's Toronto Telegram, I think it is—yes, Tuesday, April 14—it is with regard to the city welfare commissioner. I would like to get the hon. Minister's comments. I quote:

Toronto will fight Ontario's proposed Medicare scheme for fear it will burden municipal taxpayers.

The reason will be that there will be so many indigents and then they will be forced to contribute to the medical expenses of these in drugs, eyeglasses, nursing, dental care and so on; and they are not covered. So it says that the provincial Medicare plan which is envisaged—would seem, forces municipalities to determine the eligibility of "medical indigents" for assistance.

It will mean a great increase in general welfare assistance. Would the hon. Minister comment on the two things I brought up—the increase in welfare assistance from $12 million to $18 million and the impact of this on the health of the nation, and then the proposed Medicare plan that the province envisages without any coverage for any dental, drugs, nursing and eyeglasses? What effect will that have on increasing general welfare assistance?

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): The answer to my hon. friend's question would be that this now includes dependent fathers, who were formerly in mothers' allowance to the amount of $2.4 million; then widows and unmarried women, which is also due and which will amount to $2.8 million.

Mr. Troy: That means $2 million extra this year in addition to those things?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes. That is what makes the difference between the $12 million and the $18 million.

Mr. Troy: A rough sum in addition—I thought you said $2.4 million and—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Troy: From my figures the addition would be about $4 million.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Dependent father cases formerly included in mothers' allowances cost an amount of $1 million the last year they were included in mother's allowances. This year they are included in general welfare assistance for an amount of $2.4 million. Widows' and unmarried women's allowances, $2.8 million, are new also, which makes a total of $5.2 million in new costs.

Mr. Troy: Does that cover the whole addition?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: For the most part, yes.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, I assure the hon. Minister there is not a hint of political innuendo in this question. If in fact there are over 50,000 people in the area of Peterborough charging up over $400,000 to general welfare assistance, this must surely be abnormal in the province. I am curious. Could the hon. Minister tell why there is such a concentration of general welfare recipients in that particular area?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I will try to find that out.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well I have here, for instance, I am going to take two of them—like the Cornwall area which was 42,356 population in 1964, has 7 per cent population on relief; 1963 was 7.7 per cent on relief; which means, in January of 1964, 3,004 people on relief. In Peterborough, with 51,000 in 1964, there is 3.4 per cent on relief; and in 1963, 3.9 on relief for the amount of 1,730 people—as of January this year. So it would be primarily, I think, unemployment.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 1806 carried?

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): On vote 1806, am I correct; did I understand the hon. Minister correctly when he said he was going to institute studies in the Windsor area concerning the hard core of those receiving welfare?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: They have asked us to carry out the programme I was speaking of in Toronto here, and we are, as I said, creating the means to do that, and we will do that.

Mr. Newman: I think we really welcome that into the area, because we still have almost 4,000 people on welfare, and an unemployed total of almost 7,000 people. If the studies can point to some way of lowering those two figures, it would be a real asset to the community.

The hon. member for Dovercourt has mentioned something concerning education and adult retraining. One of the difficulties in the retraining programme, as I have brought out previously before the adjournment of the House, was the fact that individuals on welfare quite often refuse to take retraining because of the loss of welfare benefits. There seems to be no incentive. Has the department ever approached the National Employment Service with the intention of attempting to encourage, in some fashion, those on welfare to take retraining?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that The Department of Labour in Ottawa is now presently studying this question so as to provide for more money along the lines I trust the hon. member is talking about, in respect to these retraining programmes.

Mr. Newman: In other words, the individual taking the retraining course now would not be deprived of any welfare benefits that he might be entitled to? Is that the idea?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, there is some supplementing of cases. By the way, I was glad to find out that the Windsor area, which is a very striking example, decreased in January, 1964 from January, 1963 by 24.7 per cent, which I think is good.

Mr. Newman: That still leaves us with well over 3,700 people, I think it is, on welfare, which is too high a figure. It is almost 3.5 per cent of the population, and we still have well over eight per cent of our work force unemployed.

Mr. Chairman, the other question that I had was concerning the payments to individuals for home visits. What are the payments for home visits today?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The hon. member is talking about homemakers?

Mr. Newman: Homemakers, yes.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that we share 50 per cent of $8.

Mr. Newman: Is the hon. Minister aware then that the Ontario Welfare Council has suggested that the figure of $8 is not realistic at all in today's times and strongly recommended that it be extended or increased?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, we have had that report. I have no quarrel with it, it is a very fine report. As a matter of fact, it is under study right now.

Mr. Newman: Is the hon. Minister taking it into consideration with the intention of implementing or increasing the payment to homemaker services?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. Newman: Right. I thank the hon. Minister.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am sure my hon. friends in the Conservative camp will be pleased to know that we are going to try to subject the homemakers and nurses services to a bit of scrutiny at this point, because I think perhaps they need it. We would not want a service as important as this to get lost in the general welfare assistance area.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. S. Lewis: I know the raw nerve ends demonstrate themselves during welfare estimates; but I think they might be contained. Could I ask the hon. Minister one or two specific questions? First, how many municipalities are actually participating in the homemaker programme?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: One hundred and eighty-seven.

Mr. S. Lewis: Am I right in thinking that there are some 900 municipalities in the province?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I beg your pardon?

Mr. S. Lewis: Are there some 900 municipalities in the province? I should be looking at the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs when I say this.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That seems possible, yes.

Mr. S. Lewis: Could I ask how many homemaker services were administered by municipalities or through municipalities last year?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Before we go into this, I should just state the number of participating municipalities are included in the two counties as such.

I do not know if I can answer the question of the hon. member directly, but perhaps these figures might be interesting in this respect. I have here: number of hours' service of homemakers in addition to eight hours a day, 29,060; number of days' service, 26,377; number of children at home served, 9,000-plus; number of adults, 4,400; number of cases as such, 3,105.

Mr. S. Lewis: That is in the hon. Minister's report and I appreciate it. I was curious to know whether the service had been extended to an increasing number of municipalities. I am aware that there are more people being served.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I only have the figures on a percentage basis, and that is 19.2 per cent increase.

Mr. S. Lewis: That is in the number of hours of service provided?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is as administered through the municipalities. Oh, I am sorry, the increase is 14.2 and the total cost as shared has increased 19.2 per cent. The increase as such in the number of municipalities is 14.2 per cent. The increase in total cost is 19.2, which is $204,374.

I might say this is one programme that I am quite sure that the hon. member will appreciate, after all, cannot be imposed on municipalities, but we are encouraging it, I can assure him. No municipality which has wanted to come into the picture has been refused, but instead has been encouraged to go along with it, to provide for the services.

I have a figure here that 40 new municipalities came in.

Mr. S. Lewis: How precisely is the hon. Minister encouraging the involvement of municipalities in the homemaker programme? What is there within the homemakers branch of the department which allows them to encourage municipalities beyond the mere distribution of literature?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: There has been added in the staff here one other person dealing with that exclusively. Naturally, we deal with the municipalities themselves through the administrators of the different programmes. Participation is also suggested by all the field workers we have in the field and more especially by the administrators in municipalities and cities where there is industry especially, which calls for this type of work.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Minister, I raised this particular line because I too think it is a profoundly important piece of social legislation. I am delighted it is in effect in this province and recognize that in a very real sense it breaks new ground. But I am very concerned that it is not in fact being widely used. One could not pretend otherwise when saying 187 out of 900 municipalities use it. I wonder if the hon. Minister is aware of the special study which said, and I am quoting now:

—that all the various homemaker associations express concern regarding the lack of experience and knowledge of welfare administrators in small municipalities who seem to be unaware of the provisions of the Act.

The report goes further to suggest that they sometimes seem to be unaware of the Act entirely. Now if, in fact, the welfare department takes the Act seriously, then I think—as in the field of day nurseries, a similar or parallel branch in this department—that there should be a much more vigorous prosecution of establishing units and services throughout Ontario.

I wonder if some of it is not handicapped by lack of funds. You said to the hon. member who spoke earlier that you were thinking of revising the per diem payments upward. Am I right in that? May I also ask whether you are thinking of revising the number of hours which you allow, upward? At the moment you allow an eight-hour maximum, if I am right?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: All in the same package, yes.

Mr. S. Lewis: You intend to revise it? I am sure the people in the field will be interested to know. May I now ask, from The Department of Public Welfare's most recent annual report, services of homemakers and nurses services amount to $205,000. Could you indicate to me which portion of that was homemakers services?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: On the nurses services for the calendar year January 1, 1963 to December 31, 1963, I have a total cost, shared 50-50 by the province and municipalities, of $310,993.32. That is nurses services. The homemakers services, which I have for the same calendar year, amounted to $204,574.20.

Mr. S. Lewis: I am reliably informed by a visiting homemaker, Mr. Minister, that it is one to nothing for the Leafs.

Before proceeding further into the homemaker area, I would like to make these observations. Mr. Minister, I think the field of homemakers services in the province of Ontario is indispensable and I think the hon. Minister is inclining, inadvertently or otherwise, to destroy the service at birth by making it impossible for any meaningful functioning with the present financial strictures. There has been a very valuable report documenting all the areas of homemaker needs. Page after page of the report enunciates that it is necessary to curtail services, indispensable human services, because either the province will not give the money or the municipalities will not participate in the repayment formula.

I think this situation has reached a serious, indeed, crisis proportion, because if a government speaks seriously, if a Minister speaks seriously as you have been doing, about the need to take the pressure off hospitals and about the need to provide home care for older people and about the need generally to give rehabilitation and substance to your whole public welfare apparatus, then something has to be done about homemakers services in the province. Mr. Minister, you have a report on homemakers services in Ontario given to you in February of this year, as itemized and carefully drawn together a report as one could possibly wish. On the committee, Mr. Minister, the sub-committee on homemakers services of the Ontario Welfare Council, there sit the following people: Miss Margaret Wilkie, section supervisor, child welfare hospitalization, Department of Public Welfare; Miss Doris Moore, supervisor, homemakers services, Department of Public Welfare; Dr. B. T. Dale, Wellington County Health Unit; Mrs. Jack Barter, administrative assistant, Pilot Home Care Programme, Department of Public Health; and several other eminent people in the field. But the crux of the listing is that people directly linked with your own department participated in the formation of a sub-committee which then proceeded to establish a study body whose wholesale contention at the end of a very careful study was that the higher intent of the Act, the objective of the Act, was seriously undermined by the regulations.

Now, I think I have suggested this on previous occasions, but this is what distresses me about the nature of The Department of Public Welfare. Because with all the best sentiments possible—and even if those of us on this side of the House do not agree with your priorities and with your attitude, one cannot deny the sincerity of the sentiment—yet the sentiments have no relevance to the legislation that is handed down and thus makes it very difficult for people on this side to have confidence.

Now, in the little pamphlet which you were good enough to send to every single hon. member of this House, homemakers and nurses services were described thusly, and I think it is instructive to repeat it:

The services of a homemaker may be used to keep a family together when the mother is ill or in hospital.

That is to prevent family disintegration at a time of acute health need.

Elderly, handicapped and convalescent persons may also benefit from this programme and thus remain in their own homes while receiving all necessary care and attention.

Now what could possibly be more worthwhile than that? And yet every page of the report suggests that the gap between the demand for the services and the resources available to meet those services is constantly growing. If the department does not want to strangle the homemakers services at the outset, because it is the embryonic period which will make the difference here, then the department has to change its approach.

Let me be more specific, Mr. Minister. I am sure you are aware that only 51 per cent of the people who applied last year for homemakers services to the three major voluntary homemaker associations in Toronto, Hamilton and Ottawa and the Red Cross branches through the province could be attended to. All the rest had to be denied and yet—and this is surely significant—all of them, 100 per cent of them, made their requests on the basis of some health need. So that 49 per cent of the people—and this was averaged out on a study of the month of May, in 1963, and felt to be applicable to the whole year—almost half of the people who applied because of a serious health need, were turned away. What were some of the instances of people turned away? Perhaps the hon. members would be interested:

A doctor's nurse called concerning an East York couple. The husband was 80 and frail and his wife, aged 77, had a broken patella. She could be hospitalized but the husband would need help in the house and his meals cooked. Their income was too limited to employ private help.

Mr. and Mrs. F. were in their early seventies. Mr. F. due to be discharged from hospital. Mrs. F. had arthritis quite badly and said she really did not know how to cope with the extra work a semi-invalid would create.

Or further:

Mr. S., social worker at The Department of Veterans' Affairs, was seeking help for an elderly veteran who had had a stroke. His wife urgently needed an operation to save her sight and she refused to be admitted until there was some plan worked out to look after her husband.

These examples are taken from the Visiting Homemakers Association in Toronto. They are the types of cases that an association set up for precisely this purpose was forced to turn down categorically because they lacked provincial assistance.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, the curtailment works in every field. It now discriminates heavily against the elderly, for which this programme was devised. The Toronto Homemakers Association can give no services to the elderly whatsoever. They have had to cut them off.

It now discriminates against all mothers on a normal confinement basis, because there are no funds to look after them. It is also forced to discriminate against any long-term chronic care.

Unless one imputes the wrong thing to using the word discriminate, I should say the association is necessarily prevented from helping these areas of human need because the province has refused to see fit to grant what necessary financial assistance they suggested under their own legislation.

Now, Mr. Minister, the municipalities in this province are unaware of the homemakers legislation. There is just no question about that.

They could not be otherwise. You cannot have two or three people in an entire province of this size pursuing a piece of social legislation and expect to get a reaction from a large number of municipalities. It is humanly impossible and it is characteristic of many programmes in the department.

It is worth noting that in the month of May, 1963, out of 1,377 cases referred to various homemakers groups, 41 out of the 1,377 came from public welfare offices. Two or three per cent of the referrals were from that source.

Again, it reduces the legislation to a travesty. One asks why is it on the books? If a public welfare apparatus were apprised of the government's intention to pursue this particular course—so be it—but obviously the municipalities are not aware.

An hon. member: Oh yes, they are.

Mr. S. Lewis: Obviously the municipalities are not aware or there would have been much greater advantage taken of this aspect. There is no problem in municipalities taking advantage of mothers' allowance, or general welfare assistance or of all the other shared programmes administered by this department. But when it comes to the showpiece legislation of this department, when it comes to the areas of day nurseries and of homemakers services, then the department fails noticeably, and that I think is an unfortunate thing. The municipalities do not accept their sense of responsibility because it has not been communicated to them. On page 18 of the report—

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): How do you know that?

Mr. S. Lewis: The report compiled by the advisers to the hon. Minister said so and I can think of no better source for justifying it. On page 18 of the report—

An hon. member: Get the hockey game back on.

Mr. S. Lewis: —there are a couple of quotes given, which I think hon. members of the House if they are not too thick-skinned, hard-boiled and otherwise to appreciate, might well sympathize with.

Mother with three small children admitted to hospital for fourth confinement. Father working as salesman earning $250 per month. Application made by supervisor for financial assistance for family under Act 148 without effect.

Another example:

Public health unit requested homemakers service for family, husband, wife and five children under nine years of age. Family recently arrived from another province. Mother admitted to Ontario Hospital for complete nervous breakdown. Father had been unemployed for a long period, was due to start training in insurance business. Family had temporary accommodation with relatives but no income apart from family allowance. Family deep in debt which contributed to the breakdown in mother's health. Assistance under Act 148 applied for. Application refused.

The report of people from the hon. Minister's own department, indicates cases of municipalities simply refusing to accept working agreements under this social legislation. If the hon. Minister is satisfied with that particular set of circumstances, so be it, but it simply does not jibe with the stated objectives of the department. Again one wonders whether the primary intent here is not destroyed by the regulations.

I appreciate some of the interjections; let some of them be made when the hon. members rise to their feet. I am documenting this from the hon. Minister's own material. That is the approach we have followed throughout these estimates so it would not be possible to stray, and I am sure the hon. Minister will be able to give an explanation for it.

The other aspect of homemakers legislation which is seriously distressing, is that within the legislation it suggests that for those families capable of part payment, services will be provided. As the hon. Minister well knows, that simply is not the case. I suggest to him strongly that he participates in a misleading deception when he puts that in the literature of the homemakers branch. In fact, experience after experience with individual homemakers associations shows that unless people are capable of paying the entire amount themselves, or unless they are totally indigent, the municipality will have nothing to do with payment. If they fall in the intermediate category, the municipality simply will not contribute anything. That is generally true for the city of Toronto and I think it is also worth pointing out what the report says about Ottawa, which has one of the most active voluntary homemakers associations.

The analysis of these case histories shows that service is given primarily to the indigent and to families with adequate incomes. The majority of the families in the community fall between these two extremes and are not receiving service because the agency has no way of financing services to the group and the municipalities simply will not participate.

In fact, for the Toronto Homemakers Association, 80 per cent of the money comes from The United Appeal, five per cent comes from individual contributions and only 15 per cent comes via the provincial legislation which was supposed to break such ground in this new and important field. So again, the policy of the department stands at least partially indicted, and I hope when the new regulations are tabled that they will give some promise of change.

The analysis of the per diem and the number of hours need not be gone into in any great detail except to say that to suggest that an $8 cost per diem is the average cost, is, as the hon. Minister knows, totally absurd. The average cost in Toronto is $12.06 a day.

In Hamilton it is $10.41 a day. In Ottawa it is $11.40 a day and even in the Red Cross units it is $9.52 a day. To pass legislation basing per diem payments on totally unrealistic figures—and we are going to get into this again in The Charitable Institutions Act and the homes for the aged branch coming up—is too much to ask from the Opposition for anything but a lack of confidence to develop. Only the Red Cross branches are perhaps capable of functioning properly on this basis.

I simply appeal to the hon. Minister that when these regulations are changed, they are changed with the report in mind. The Ontario Welfare Council subcommittee—and I emphasized again, comprising the hon. Minister's own people—made certain recommendations. One of them underlines that emphasis be placed on more effective interpretation of the legislation to municipalities. The other recommendations are as follows: a nine-and-a-half-hour work day instead of the present eight-hour-day; a 24-hour continuous service where needed; a more realistic per diem payment in relation to costs in a variety of communities; and that all information in the report lead to a province-wide study undertaken by a committee, representative of all such services, to present the hon. Minister with some kind of definitive report.

I think that I would now appreciate some comments from the hon. Minister on the area of homemakers services. I take for granted that his department, having passed the legislation, considers it of consequence. I also take for granted on the basis of his own studies, that the morale, the objectives, and the purpose of the legislation are being seriously undermined by the total refusal to face the realities involved, and that this cannot be when the nature of the problem is as extensive as it is.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, the only comment that I would like to make at this time is that I appreciate the comments of the hon. member for Scarborough West. I would say this, that the report as he stated came in in February of this year. It is a very good report—I agree with the hon. member, it is a very good report.

I would just like to point out to him that this is rather a new programme. I am far from saying that it is a perfect programme, as yet. It is a very new programme, it has been in operation only for some four years, and surely there have been some advances made on this. This study which has been brought about has now introduced the whole department to that particular area and action is under study.

I can assure the hon. member, as I stated a moment ago to someone else, that we are studying this matter and we are going to take the report into deep consideration. I can assure him that we have found some very good thoughts in it and some very good material which we hope to be able to carry out in view of some of the conclusions that are set out in that report. Further than that, in respect to educating the municipalities to adopt the programme, well I do not know what might be suggested except that I do not know of any municipality that does not know about it. If they do not know about it, it is because they do not choose to know about it for some reasons of their own. But I am quite sure that this department cannot be blamed for the municipalities not going into the programme in respect of them not knowing about it, because I think they do know about it.

So, Mr. Chairman, the only thing I can tell the hon. member at this moment in the House is that we are taking under serious consideration the report that he mentioned and we hope to be able to come up with some improvements, either in the regulations or in the general design of the Act.

Mr. S. Lewis: May I follow it up simply by asking this, Mr. Minister: Has Miss Doris Moore any other particular area of activity apart from homemaker services?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, it is primarily the homemaker services, and nurses, that is what she deals with.

Mr. S. Lewis: Primarily. Is she then involved in some other project?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Homemakers and nurses services; that is what she does, nothing else.

Mr. S. Lewis: Nothing else. Then may I ask how many other full-time people there are at the centre of this programme, apart from clerical staff?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: One other full-time person.

Mr. S. Lewis: One other full-time person!

Now, Mr. Minister, this is a modern age. I think it is generally accepted by those in the public relations field that if you circulate one piece of literature advertising a programme you do not get a very overwhelming response. I suggest to the hon. Minister that when he says to me: "I don't know why the municipalities shouldn't know of it", part of the answer lies in two people doing the major job of disseminating the information to 900 municipalities, plus whatever the welfare officers in the field are able to do—they have a desperate job coping with the mere administration of the governmental programmes at their level, let alone pursuing these other programmes.

The hon. Minister admits that there are only two people involved in the centre; there should be ten or a dozen people for a programme of this kind.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis: It is never any problem in this House—I want to say to this House, to my good friends here on the left and to the hon. members opposite—it is always in good taste in a provincial Legislature to talk about financing certain projects and construction relating to public works or highways or any similar industrial or semi-industrial or municipal field. There is always much applause and much appreciation and much camaraderie amongst all the government members, and much jumping to feet and suggesting that we should be going further. But once a member on this side of the House has the temerity to suggest a modest extension in social services to human beings, then the hounds begin to bay.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis: It is a sad and illustrative comment on the kind of mentality with which one is dealing.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): He might have said donkeys.

An hon. member: The hon. member for Sudbury has been braying enough today.

Mr. S. Lewis: I am going to pay the hon. Minister the compliment of suggesting—and I feel confident of this—that this is certainly not characteristic of his department—may not be characteristic of him. We can only assume on this side of the House that it is characteristic of those who sit in the Treasury benches; and from the eloquent interventions heard here by way of heckling during the course of today's debates, it is obviously characteristic of the government as a whole, and that is a sad commentary.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister: In general welfare assistance what is the percentage of repayments you get in the share cost programme from the federal government?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Fifty per cent, less medical services.

Mr. Troy: Fifty per cent less medical services! In regard to our Indian bands, does the federal government assume the full welfare assistance or is it just the same as other areas?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: In some areas we do and in some areas they share proportionately as we do with the rest of the province.

Mr. Troy: The treaty Indians, I suppose, get the full assistance. Thank you.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask of the hon. Minister: What is the maximum allowance for each home visit by a nurse?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I will get that figure for the hon. member.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like the figure, because one year ago I brought up in the House a resolution passed by the city of Windsor concerning the fact that the amount paid was much too low. At that time the hon. Minister replied an upward revision was under consideration. I understand there has been no revision at all, yet it was on April 16, 1962, that the hon. Minister was made aware of a resolution passed by the city of Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The hon. member will appreciate that most of the discussions were held in regard to the Victorian Order of Nurses, I suppose that is what the hon. member had in mind at the time. This matter is still being discussed with them. As the hon. member knows, there is an amount of $80,000 in the grant. We are discussing it with them now to see if that grant could not be incorporated in a per diem rate, which I think would be the best thing to do. Personally, I do favour that, and I think that maybe they are thinking along that line. However, up to a certain point the Victorian Order of Nurses is also a national body, and this is where the discussion has not been completed as far as they are concerned. But I understand that there is a figure of $2.50 per visit, that is $5 total.

Mr. Newman: It has gone up to $5. It was only $2.50 a year ago, is that right?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is our share.

Mr. Newman: When the hon. Minister says $5, he means it is his share, the $5? Or is this the total amount including the municipality's share?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The total amount is $2.50.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have one short question left about which I am very curious. If we could revert back to general welfare assistance for a moment; can the hon. Minister tell me how many people in the province of Ontario are receiving incapacitation allowances?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am afraid I do not have that figure here, but I will get it for the hon. member.

Mr. S. Lewis: The hon. Minister has no rough idea?

Mr. E. A. Dunlop (Forest Hill): What are you referring to as incapacitation allowance?

Mr. S. Lewis: That is what I am trying to find out.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: You mean you have in mind the borderline cases who do not comply with the regulations?

Mr. S. Lewis: I have the regulations in front of me and I could not believe this regulation when I read it. That is why I am asking the question. I wonder if, as in some of the child welfare areas the municipal co-ordination apparatus just might not be obsolete or inoperative. What is this incapacitation allowance; or at least—is it used at all in the province?

I see here, Mr. Chairman, that to be entitled to it one has to be an unemployable person, not merely unemployed, but unemployable; that one cannot be eligible for allowance under The Disabled Persons' Allowances Act; that one cannot be a patient or resident in any public or private hospital, any sanatoria, or institutions under The Homes for the Aged Act, charitable institutions, and so on; that one must not be provided with rehabilitation services; that one cannot live with a parent or a person in loco parentis who is financially able to provide for one's maintenance; that one's liquid assets are not more than $250, and that one cannot have an income, including the allowance, of more than $70 a month. This means that somewhere, some people in this province are living on $840 a year who are almost totally disabled and unemployable.

Now, if the province sanctions such an allowance how many people are thus covered and who are they?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The note I have here, Mr. Chairman, says that we capitulate it separately. For that reason we cannot give an exact figure. I am quite sure and as I said this afternoon we are satisfied, that the federal government is moving along that line—that if we can put through a programme as a whole, instead of the different programmes we have. These categorical grants, as we know them, which exist, will all go into one; and this will disappear completely.

Mr. S. Lewis: I see. Can the hon. Minister describe to the House, because I do not have total faith as yet in the federal government, what kind of a person would be eligible for this, who would not fall under The Disabled Persons' Allowances Act?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The other Act, if the hon. member will recall this, asks that the person should be totally and permanently disabled. Those you have in mind, I would imagine, would be those who do not enter into that category—which we all call here, rightly or not, borderline cases.

Mr. S. Lewis: So they would be, in effect, temporarily disabled; but totally temporarily disabled—according to the definition in the regulations—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, but not permanently.

Mr. S. Lewis: But not permanently; and, during the period of temporary total disability, this government pays them $70 a month maximum. The regulation says $48 a month, but they can have an income bringing it up to $70. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, I guess that is right.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, again the hon. Minister will forgive consternation. I did not think he had it in him—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: There are very few along that line, I can assure the hon. member.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, suppose there were half a dozen, Mr. Chairman. If one of them came to an individual in his individual riding a great deal would be felt by the member involved. It is not sufficient to say that there are very few of them: there are very few thalidomide children in the province of Ontario, but the reaction is absolute. There may be very few temporarily total disabilities, but the reaction should be absolute; and an absolute reaction to that kind of need does not embrace $48 to $70 a month.

That is preposterous, and I hope this particular regulation does disappear. I would be curious to know why one has not heard anything about it.

I am further inclined, as I slip over pages, under the same general welfare assistance, to ask a question about the emergency dental services.

Am I right, Mr. Chairman, that to qualify for emergency dental services the patient who is on welfare can only have an extraction and no other form of dental service?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, suppose, Mr. Chairman, that the man's teeth were rotting. Supposing his teeth were in a state of serious decay; suppose he needed cavities filled and was in serious pain. He could not have anything done under general welfare assistance, short of emergency extraction?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: My hon. friend could go to any length to bring cases like that, but I have to tell him that it is only in the matter of extractions that it is done.

Mr. S. Lewis: All I am trying to point out, Mr. Chairman, is that these regulations are obsolete. These regulations have no relevance to human needs in the 1960s; they have no relevance to human needs at any time. They are categorical regulations. They force people into arbitrary categories; they force a man to have teeth extracted when he has a toothache. He has no alternative under this particular regulation.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The municipality can do it, if they wish to.

Mr. S. Lewis: The municipality, but is it not —

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The municipality can do it, if they wish to.

Mr. S. Lewis: The municipality; but is it not usual for the municipality to undertake things for which they can be reimbursed 80 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, not always—not always. I am sure that the city of Toronto does a lot of those—a lot of those—additional services.

Mr. S. Lewis: A lot of those?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, in an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail not very long ago the head of the public dental clinic, I believe it was at Toronto General Hospital, indicated that the most serious sort of public problem faced was that he had countless numbers of people in need of tooth "renovation", and all he could deal with were extractions.

I do not want to belabour the picayune points; I get as frustrated with them as other hon. members of this House. But I think the essential principle remains the same, Mr. Chairman: that if, federally and provincially, we are going to work out a new cost-sharing basis, or if certain major services are to be turned back into the hands of the province, then general welfare regulations such as this should be consigned to the scrap heap. An entirely new apparatus should be established, which bases grants and allowances on need and not on categories.

Mr. Troy: I certainly agree with that, Mr. Chairman. I had a situation where this chap applied for a disabled person's allowance. He was unable to work at all; the letter sent to him said that if his situation deteriorated to any extent then he should apply again. It deteriorated so quickly that about a week after receiving that letter, he was in the ground—six feet under.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I intended to bring this problem up under vote 1809, but apparently it fits into this vote 1806 a little better; that is dental work.

One year ago I asked the hon. Minister for a grant to the Civitan Dental Clinic in my community. They had been doing work among the youngsters on welfare and, just as the hon. member for Scarborough West mentioned, only extractions were allowed. Dental work was not permitted at all under the Act.

I would like to bring to the hon. Minister's attention that extractions are only a very small portion of the amount of work done to the individual.

In 1960, the Civitan Dental Clinic spent a total of $6,900—only $1,100 of which was for extraction. In 1961, of $6,300 they spent in operating their clinic, $1,300 was for extractions. In 1962—and they only operated for four months because The Department of the Attorney General forbade the raffling of automobiles in my community and yet permitted it in other communities; as a result, the Civitan Dental Clinic could not get sufficient funds to operate and had to curtail their programme very markedly. In that year 1962 they operated for only four months and their extractions amounted to $490, whereas their total bill for dental services was $3,600. In 1964, for a two-month period, extractions were only $52, whereas the total amount of dental services provided was $500.

I think that the department should undertake to use the Civitan Dental Clinic as a pilot project to see the feasibility of instituting such similar projects throughout the province of Ontario. This group—the Civitans—provided a very much needed service to youngsters on welfare, and the department should go all out in some attempt to use this as a pilot project to see and to judge as to the merits of the programme.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 1806 carried?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I have one question to ask. Did I understand the hon. Minister to say this afternoon that deserted wives, after six months, now become eligible for mothers' allowance?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Right now it is six months, yes.

Mr. Whicher: Since when did that come into force? I understood it had to be two or three years?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The last time that was introduced, I understand was around maybe 1957 or 1958; I am not too sure. That was dropped to six months.

Vote 1806 agreed to.

On vote 1807:

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. Minister whether it is the intention of his department to revise upwards the per diem payments under The Charitable Institutions Act in the province.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is, Mr. Chairman, at the present time, being reviewed. I have nothing in the estimates for this year; but we are studying that factor. We are discussing this matter, and discussing it is the plan for this year.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well this Act came into effect, Mr. Chairman, in 1958, if I am correct. I believe there are some 60 institutions involved. I would be interested to know if the deputy Minister might tell us how many people are in those 60 institutions.

There are some 60 institutions in the schedule under The Charitable Institutions Act for which the province pays 75 per cent of the deficit up to $3.40 a day over and above what the individuals themselves are able to provide. That rate was set in 1958. Costs go up. It is now 1964. Last September, there was a meeting of all Ontario Homes for the Aged representatives, who made recommendations, regarding infirmary patients, special care units and all other patients, of a major increase in payment—75 per cent of a $5 minimum, or in their submission even 100 per cent in total. Can the hon. Minister inform this House what he thinks of those recommendations and whether he intends to act on the recommendations from the various homes falling under his department's Act?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am told that there is approximately 8,000 population in the institutions. I do not know if I can say any more about this. Mr. Chairman, except to say that we have been in communication with them. They have been in communication with us. We are discussing this presently. I am quite satisfied that we are looking not for the level to stand still or go down, we are looking for the level to go up and I am quite sure that there will be some change. I cannot tell you exactly what. These matters are still under discussion with them, but there is a revision and the revision is up. That is about all I can say.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well I am glad to get it on the record. I know the people who are involved in the charitable institutions themselves will be pleased to know it, as the people in the children's institutions and in the homemakers field will be pleased to know that the hon. Minister plans a similar upward revision in the contributions.

The hon. Minister is aware of these aspects as I am.

One of the largest such institutions lies in the very heart of my riding, Providence Villa. There are several hundred people in the Villa, well over 500 who fall within this institution serviced by the hon. Minister's department. It pays 75 per cent of the deficit up to $3.40 a day. Actual costs last year of Providence Villa were $3.90 a day for normal care. Not only was it getting just 75 per cent, but like every other regulation, it was getting that percentage based on an unrealistic figure.

Much more than that; some of these institutions—certainly it is true of Baycrest and certainly it is true of Providence Villa—have specific infirmary units. There the cost is $5.83 per day and, of course, this includes the necessity of having as many as eight nurses on a day shift at any given time. Yet for the infirmary areas, the department only pays 75 per cent, I believe it is, up to $4 a day, despite the fact that the realistic cost is $5.83 a day. Again, the department is providing only three-quarters of the cost of a totally unrealistic figure and, beg as they may, the charitable institutions cannot get any specific promise of a revision upward of the regulations.

These institutions are going seriously into debt. I think it fair to say, without revealing confidences, that one at least of those I have mentioned, and many others of the 60, have serious operating deficits and serious capital deficits. Those deficits continue to mount because the province refuses to give them monies related to a realistic appraisal of costs. One asks no more than that. Again I submit that if the province establishes certain Acts and certain regulations, it has to fulfil those regulations or not bother establishing the Act at all.

Might I ask the hon. Minister why it is that for municipal homes for the aged, the department is willing to pay up to 100 per cent, but that in charitable institutions the department is willing to pay 75 per cent? What is the philosophic distinction there?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I missed the first part of it.

Mr. S. Lewis: I gather that for municipal homes for the aged, the department is prepared to rise to 100 per cent of cost, but that in charitable institutions it pays 75 per cent of the deficit up to an arbitrary level.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I have here, Mr. Chairman, information that for bed care to an institution which has 120 beds, 75 per cent of $5 per day was paid—that is the institution you spoke about—and the actual per diem rate apparently is under $4.50.

Mr. S. Lewis: With respect, Mr. Minister, that is what it looks like on the surface. That is not what it is in practice. The bed care rate should be 75 per cent up to a maximum of $5 per day, but in fact when you tabulate the 75 per cent figure, you average in all the beds in the institution, so that in fact they receive only $4 a day. This may be a very clever method of financial computing, but it does not solve the problems of the institution.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: As I stated a moment ago to my hon. friend, that is the overall picture, and that is the way we work toward making our revision upwards. I think the 75 per cent, as he stated a moment ago, is shared; we have the report and we hope we can arrive at some conclusion in that respect. The revision is going up.

Mr. S. Lewis: Can you just answer the question I asked — there may be a valid answer to it? Why can it be 100 per cent in the case of certain municipal homes and why 75 per cent in the case of charitable institutions?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: There again I am advised that in this—I would hate to mention names in this respect—but some who are very prominent in the field have sanctioned the figure of 75 per cent. These are very prominent figures in the field—those who operate most of these institutions, as a matter of fact—and they did not think that going to 100 per cent would be the proper thing to do.

Mr. S. Lewis: I am intrigued by that. I understand that a September 1963 conference with representatives from homes for the aged right across the province of Ontario—both municipal and charitable—felt that there should be 100 per cent cost assumed by the province. Frankly, I, too, think there should be 100 per cent cost in this instance assumed by the province. If certain charitable agencies are willing to undertake this kind of service to the people of the province, then there is no reason why the province should not contribute in this fashion. It certainly is no reason why the province should make invidious distinctions between different kinds of institutions pursuing precisely the same objectives.

Perhaps in a less eloquent fashion than the hon. member for Sudbury this afternoon, I might say, Mr. Chairman, that I think the consequences of old age, and the geriatric problem generally, merit a total provincial responsibility rather than a very partial responsibility which drives the charitable institutions into serious debt.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: If the hon. member was making a comparison of public homes and charitable institutions when he mentioned 100 per cent, that is true. One hundred per cent is paid through public funds but 70 per cent of it is met by the province in public homes. The other public funds do not come from the province. They come from the counties or cities which are dealing with these municipal homes. The province does not pay the 100 per cent.

Mr. S. Lewis: The province pays no 100 per cent for any of the homes for the aged?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: We recognize the 100 per cent because I suppose it is all public monies.

Mr. S. Lewis: Exactly.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, but it is not the government of Ontario, as such, reimbursing 100 per cent. The municipalities or the counties pay the 30 per cent of costs where it is needed.

Mr. S. Lewis: But, in precisely the same context, you recognize the figure of 75 per cent when dealing with charitable institutions.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: At one time there was nothing at all.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, at one time there was only the wheel. I admit that if one goes back far enough one can find roots, for anything, which are somewhat different from what exists today. That does not justify the situation.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am not quarrelling with the hon. member's point, but I want to point out that we have been progressively moving along according to our line of thinking, and in line with what is in the report. I am not stating that 100 per cent is a bad thing. The only thing is that we have discussed this matter and some people in the field themselves do not think it is the proper thing to do; though some others do. That is what we are discussing now, trying to weed out what information we can and arrive at some arrangement one way or the other.

I have no personal objection to what the hon. member says in this respect. I just want to point out that at one time the charitable institutions got no subsidies. I think, as a matter of fact, we were the first to establish these subsidies in that particular field. We established the homes for the aged, away back when the people there were committed to an institution of that description; but it is very much different today. In going along with the upward revision of these rates, I have no set principle or set idea in my mind that it should not happen; but how it will get there is one of those things we are looking at.

Mr. S. Lewis: Ah, sweet mysteries of life, how will it get there? The hon. Minister says he genuinely agrees—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: We have done pretty well.

Mr. S. Lewis: The hon. Minister says that he follows his advisors, and the advisors suggest that that is the way it should go, and then we are confronted with this insoluble enigma: How will it get there? I suggest to the hon. Minister that it will get there precisely the way all the legislation in The Department of Public Welfare should get there, by the hon. Minister himself taking a militant and persuasive stand.

When the hon. Minister says he has inaugurated good legislation, no one denies that, but let us remember some of the things which have been revealed in these estimates.

The $100-a-month contribution for children's aid societies, i.e. the $100 a month granted per employee, was first established in 1956; it is now 1964 and it has not yet been revised upward. These regulations were first established in 1958; it is now 1964 and they have not been revised upward. It is not as if one were talking about a gap of six months or a year; one is always talking about anywhere from five years to a decade. I think in that context the Opposition has the right to raise it, and ask that something be done, other than general suggestions that "We are revising upwards," with uplifting sweeps of the arm.

An hon. member: In the fullness of time.

Mr. S. Lewis: Precisely.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, a question of the hon. Minister. Has the hon. Minister statistics concerning the age levels of people in communities; in other words, the number of 60-year-olds, 61-year-olds, 62-year-olds, and so forth? Does the department have such statistics?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The residents of the homes or the general population?

Mr. Newman: Just the general population.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am sure I have not that here with me right at this moment.

Mr. Newman: No, but does the department keep records like that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, I think we can find that figure; we have it.

Mr. Newman: Very well, then. More than likely the department is aware that the city of Windsor has a disproportionately large population of aged. Has the department taken into consideration the fact that there are more aged in the city of Windsor than the average, and the fact that likewise there is only the one home for the aged? And, having taken all that into consideration, should not the department initiate discussions with the community with the hope of setting up another home for the aged?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member. There have been some discussions along that line, but surely Windsor should have the initiative to bring this to us? We are willing to sit down and talk with them at any time.

Mr. Newman: Has the department pointed out to the community the fact that there is the need for one?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, surely the city of Windsor should know that.

Mr. Newman: Does the department have any liaison with The Department of Economics and Development?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes.

Mr. Newman: They do? Well, can the hon. Minister tell me if there is need then for senior citizens' housing in Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I presume that as for housing for senior citizens in the city of Windsor—and I must say this by the way: It was one of the first cities to introduce that particular phase of housing and has done a very good job with it. If there is one city in Ontario which is cognizant of its needs, I am sure the city of Windsor is one of the best in respect to housing. I am sure that it has taken full advantage of whatever legislation there was in that particular respect and, as was said before, when the hon. Minister (Mr. Randall) brings his estimates before you, that would be a very good question as to what his programme is up there, and what he has in mind in Windsor. And I am sure it will be very interesting.

There is one city in the province of Ontario which I must congratulate along that line; it has been a pioneer in many of these programmes and has led the way. I am sure there is not one city in Ontario which has more knowledge about those things than the city of Windsor.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the hon. Minister: Does he give any grants to private nursing homes?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Directly, Mr. Chairman, no. But through the municipalities, yes.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I would hope that the hon. Minister might prevail upon the hon. Minister of Health to recognize a private nursing home in Nipissing. The doctors say there is need for such an institution; the OHSC says no. It is there, and unfortunately people with small incomes have to pay the full amount.

I know of one gentleman who had a couple of heart attacks. He had an income of some $210 a month; it cost him $180 for his wife's care in that nursing home, so he had to go to work in order to pay it even though he himself had had two heart attacks.

There is a need for a nursing home in Nipissing, a private nursing home, and I ask the hon. Minister to support the medical association in that area and try to impress upon the hon. Minister of Health to approve it.

Vote 1807 agreed to.

On vote 1808:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, in regard to vote 1808, I would like to say, first of all, that I believe the department has done a remarkably good job with quite modest resources in its rehabilitation services branch. I would even venture to say that there is no area, in all of the nearly $1.5 billion the government is asking for this year, where it gets as good value for its money as it does under this vote.

The quite modest sum of $407,000 is being asked for, to carry on the work of the rehabilitation services branch. I am rather disappointed, Mr. Chairman, that it is not more than this. Last year the amount we were asked to vote was $400,000, so apparently it is envisaged that the activities of this branch will be carried on on much the same scale as last year. This, I think, is unfortunate. I think this branch should be expanded. I think it has done very good work in the past.

I will say that in my own experience I have found that the rehabilitation services branch of The Department of Public Welfare gets better results in assisting people in difficult situations to find employment than any other agency I know of. I would like to see this vote increased, and increased greatly, for the purpose of increasing the services of the branch. I think that spending on this branch would save us money in the long run. The more people we can get off the welfare rolls and into gainful employment, the more money we will save for the hon. Provincial Treasurer. And what is probably even more important, the—my hesitation at the moment, Mr. Chairman, is due to my attempt to interpret the signal system of the hon. Provincial Treasurer with regard to, I take it, the hockey game, and I think I have got his signal.

I will now return to the matter under consideration. I think the hon. Provincial Treasurer should be thinking more about this vote too, because this is a place where he could save himself money in welfare costs. If he and the Treasury board could persuade the hon. Minister to increase this vote, they could save themselves money in the long run. What is even more important, they could contribute to the economic growth of the country, because after all, a person who is on welfare is contributing nothing to the wealth of the province. A person who is in gainful employment is making a useful contribution. This branch has done important work in bringing people into gainful employment and I think their efforts should be expanded.

There is one area in particular where I would like to see an expansion of their activities. I raised this matter before, and I am going to raise it again. This relates to the problem of the epileptic. I am not suggesting that the rehabilitation services branch does not do anything for epileptics. I know of cases where it has tried to be of assistance and has been of assistance. But the problems that epileptics face in finding employment are so great that a branch such as this cannot possibly do the kind of job that is required with the resources now placed at its disposal.

I raised the problems of the epileptic under the estimates of The Department of Health and I must say that I did not get very far at the time, so I am trying again now. I think perhaps that this is a more appropriate place to raise them.

At any rate surely there is some place where we can raise the problems of epileptics. Surely there is some agency of this government that will take an interest in this problem to the extent not merely of assisting a relatively small number of individuals who come to the attention of the agency concerned, but of developing a full-scale programme to develop a change in public attitudes with regard to the epileptic; to educate employers to the point of view that an epileptic can do good work as well as anybody else; the fact that he may occasionally suffer a small seizure is no reason for alarm.

There is no reason to advise the National Employment Service—an employer advised them in a case in which I am interested just a few days ago that they do not want anybody like that sent back to them. This is stupid prejudice, based on nothing, and I think these people should have an opportunity to find gainful employment in the community.

It is impossible for them in most cases to do it on their own. Somebody has to act as an intermediary for them to prepare the way for them, to find openings for them. I believe from my own observation of the rehabilitation services branch that, given the facilities, it can do the job. I would like to see its activities expanded, not only for general purposes but more particularly for the epileptic.

I would like to read to the House a letter I received after I raised this matter under the estimates of The Department of Health.

Allow me to thank you for the stand you took in the Legislature on the question of jobs for epileptics. Being an epileptic myself, I quite understand the prejudice and ignorance that exists among most employers. Although I am one of the fortunate few who managed through the years to get positions with understanding employers, I have also had a lot of struggle before obtaining these positions.

For instance, when I first started working, too many times I was fired because I committed the crime of having a petit mal, a small seizure.

Another thing I found was that the special placement department of the NES expected me to take jobs—I am a stenographer below the standard wage because of my condition.

I had the same experience in the NES a few years ago when I decided to go back to work instead of being a full-time housewife. My answer to them was the same as at first: "I am not selling my condition, I am selling my work."

Eventually, through the ads, I got into an office with fair pay and where there is no prejudice.

In answer to Dr. Dymond, I would like to say that although I have been working approximately 20 years, I have never had an accident. Incidentally, before working in an office I worked in a needle trade factory operating a power machine and no accidents occurred.

However, not everyone has the luck I had. There are far too many epileptics who are forced to go on welfare because they are denied the right to work. When that right is taken away, it becomes not only an economic problem, but also a problem of health, as the seizures have a tendency to increase when the morale of the patient is down.

I would also like to point out the terrific costs there are for an epileptic to be controlled as much as possible. I spend approximately $20 a month in the drug store, although I go to a discount store, and that's not counting the money needed for the doctor. No one can tell me that our medical laws are the best.

Can the Legislature not do anything in the way of educating the employers on the abilities of people with handicaps of one kind or another?

I would very much appreciate hearing from you if anything develops in that end.

Unfortunately, I am not in a position to advise the author of this letter that anything has developed, but I am hopeful that either I or the hon. Minister or someone will be able to advise her in the near future that we are going to undertake a programme to assist epileptics to play their rightful part in the community. I would like to read an item that appeared in the Toronto Star on March 6, 1964, not long after I raised this matter in the Legislature:

About one person in every 200 suffers from some form of epilepsy, the Rotary Club of Toronto was told today.

Dr. John S. Prichard added that anyone can get it at any time—and run into unreasonable prejudice.

Dr. Prichard, chairman of the medical advisory committee of the Ontario Epilepsy Association, said the disease is a symptom, just like a cough.

It indicates that something is happening in the brain, just as a cough indicates something is happening in the respiratory system, he told a noon luncheon. Both symptoms could be caused by any number of things, he added.

However, the doctor said, unlike victims of other diseases, epilepsy sufferers often face discrimination and prejudice.

He quoted Ken Bryden, New Democratic Party member for Woodbine, who recently told the Legislature about an intelligent young man who couldn't get a job when employers learned he suffered from epilepsy.

"I have to say that is very accurate," said the doctor, adding that as a staff doctor at the Hospital for Sick Children he knew the same kind of discrimination existed for children.

Even children are discriminated against if they are unfortunate enough to suffer from this malady.

"Parents tell me of prejudice at school and at play," he said. "Other youngsters aren't allowed to play with epilepsy victims. It's a deplorable state of affairs, and most unreasonable."

Dr. Prichard asked Rotary members to convince their fellow citizens that epilepsy is nothing but a normal sort of disease, and a common one. Victims can do their jobs as well as any other individual, and should be hired, just as palsy victims.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I could add anything to what has already been said in this letter and in this report of a speech by Dr. Prichard of the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto.

Surely the time has come when the unreasonable prejudice against epileptics can be beaten down. Surely we can carry on an educational programme that will induce employers to give these people the same sort of chance they give to any other people. I think that this branch in The Department of Public Welfare can do this job. I know the kind of work it has done in other fields. I would like to see it given the money to undertake a real programme to assist epileptics in finding employment. I am certain that what is needed is the kind of personal service that this branch gives in educating employers, in preparing them to accept people with this handicap. I am certain from the epileptics I know, that if they are given the chance, they will be able to do the job. All that is required is for someone to prepare the way so they can be given the chance.

I would like to leave that thought with the hon. Minister. I congratulate him and the department on the work that the rehabilitation services branch has already done. I suggest that its activities should be greatly expanded and that an immediate need is in this field of helping epileptics find employment.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I would first of all like to thank very kindly the hon. member for Woodbine. I would like to relay these thanks to the chairman of this committee on rehabilitation, which is the hon. member for Forest Hill, who has done a great job in this respect. I am sure that the words of the hon. member for Woodbine have pleased him very much in this respect.

I also very much appreciate the problem—and I have seen it personally. There are not too many in the area where I live now, but I well understand when he speaks about the epileptics. It is really a tragedy to watch sometimes. They are very able persons but for some reason or another their employment does not stay with them because of the consequences of that particular disease. I quite appreciate the words of my hon. friend, and I understand. Possibly the hon. member for Forest Hill might state that some of these cases have been rehabilitated.

As you know, in this shared programme, beyond the amount that is mentioned here, there is also another some $200,000 from the federal government that comes into this picture. I understand we expect to extend our services with ten new social workers who will come into the field this year in this particular area. We hope to carry on with the work further and I can assure my friend that he has made an impression in many places; might it be with those who share this problem with us, and who understand with us the particular plea that he made. I welcome it and possibly the hon. member for Forest Hill might have a few words to say about this, because this is of very deep interest to him.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, does the department have many cases from the Workmen's Compensation Board that it has to rehabilitate, because quite often an individual is injured on the job—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, it has its own programme which is pretty complete.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I beg to differ with the hon. Minister, because I know of two instances within the past week at home, where an individual was injured in a plant and received workmen's compensation. They have a partial disability. Workmen's compensation claims that they are capable of returning to work. The individual gets from his own doctor a certificate stating that he is not able to work. Now the man cannot carry on the same type of work he had been doing before, and as a result has to be rehabilitated. He may have been doing quite heavy lifting type of work in a factory. No longer can he do that work, yet workmen's compensation refuses to retrain him or find him employment in a lighter field of endeavour.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Is my friend suggesting that there is a dispute between the doctors of compensation and his own doctor in this respect?

Mr. Newman: Absolutely.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: There is none?

Mr. Newman: There is a dispute between the two doctors, yes.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Naturally, I could quite appreciate the situation. If there is no more compensation for this man then we would be very pleased to have his name taken for our own programme.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, if I may explain to the hon. Minister. The individual has been working, let us say, in an automobile factory, working on a production line. He received an injury. He was treated by workmen's compensation but no longer could return to that same type of job because the injury was such that required much lighter work. The manufacturer does not have that type of work. So what happens to the individual? He is unemployed. He needs rehabilitation, so that he can qualify for some type of lighter work. Workmen's compensation does not rehabilitate the man for a lighter type of work at all. It claims that its duties as far as the man is concerned, were finished once they treated him and gave him a partial disability pension.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that as long as the person in question is under workmen's compensation—which I understand has a complete programme of rehabilitation—or is receiving benefits from compensation, he is not eligible for our programme. The moment he is out of it, we would like to have his name and we will consider him, I am sure. Naturally, if there is a question of dispute between his own doctor and the doctor of the compensation, this is a matter to be settled amongst themselves. It has to be that way. I cannot come into the dispute, I am sure.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Minister, my simplest answer to this is that I will turn the name over to Mr. Band there and he can have a field representative look into it.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Be glad to.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Could I ask the hon. Minister, sir, about this rehabilitation services branch? I wonder if he would be good enough to clarify for me, please, if this rehabilitation is for people who suffer from a physical handicap, rather than people who unfortunately have mental inability or are mentally retarded.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: We have both. We have physical and mental handicaps to deal with.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask, sir, has there been any study done in connection with the numbers—I presume you have a definition of what you mean by handicapped and I am just wondering what number this involves in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that we have on the payroll, on an average, 400 a month.

Mr. Thompson: The department services 400 a month?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes.

Mr. Thompson: I assume the hon. Minister has a definition of what a handicapped person is and I just wondered if he knew the proportion of our population that fits into this category.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I understand that there is an assessment board which deals with questions as to whether there is a handicap, and decides upon that. As far as a definition is concerned, I would think a handicapped person, as I read the Act, means a person with a physical or mental impairment which substantially prevents him from engaging in remunerative employment. I am giving the definition as it is stated in the Act. Each case goes before an assessment board which looks at these people.

Mr. Thompson: What I am really trying to find out, sir, is that 400 people seems to me to be quite a large number of people, but I am wondering whether this is just scratching the surface of a serious social problem that we have. Has the hon. Minister any idea whether the department is really helping the majority of people who fit under this definition or just helping a small portion of them?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, all the referrals who come to our attention from hospitals or private agencies and so on, are taken in—this is my information. I understand here there is a total case load of some 2,000. As I said, at present 400 to 500 are in training.

Mr. Thompson: Could I follow up on this—and the hon. Minister could probably correct me on this. I understand there are certain countries—and I do not know whether the hon. Minister would agree with this approach that they take or not, and again I say I stand to be corrected on it—but as I understand it, for example, in West Germany, first they know the number of people who do fit under a definition of being handicapped and then, knowing the number, they encourage industries to employ these people by perhaps employing two or three people; then there are certain tax deductions. Frankly, as I say, I have read this; but I do not know whether this really does take place.

I wondered if the hon. Minister had thought of some kind of approach like this. What I am getting at is whether the situation is so severe here that it would warrant further approach, or whether the hon. Minister is satisfied with the rehabilitation services he has.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that we have not gone that far as yet, because about 80 per cent of placements are rehabilitated now in actual fact; so that we have been able to place them pretty consistently. The figure of 80 per cent certainly is a pretty good figure. We look around for placements.

Vote 1808 agreed to.

On vote 1809:

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, on vote 1809, I would like to get some information from the hon. Minister, if possible, with regard to the future of the various shared programmes, as they are called, the ones in which the federal government accepts a share.

I have been somewhat alarmed to note the glib way in which the current federal government at Ottawa seems ready to abandon the shared programmes in which the federal government is now involved. It has been freely offering, starting I believe with the Budget speech of Mr. Walter Gordon and continuing with various statements by the Prime Minister of Canada, to turn over shared programmes to the provinces and to make some sort of adjustment as far as the sharing of tax fields is concerned.

I am one of those people who like to think of themselves as Canadians. I was born in Ontario and have lived most of my life in Ontario and am proud of Ontario. But as far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, anything which benefits Canada will benefit Ontario and Ontario's interests can only be considered in relation to the interests of our whole country. I am alarmed at the tendency towards balkanization which is almost promoted by the Liberal Party at Ottawa, and in which this government seems to be acquiescing—in fact, in which it is, one would think, almost eagerly participating.

It is an old story for Ontario and Quebec, the two most powerful provinces, to gang up on the federal government to look for special privileges for themselves. But I think we should be thinking in terms of our responsibilities as Canadians—not to sacrifice any legitimate interests of the people of Ontario, because I do not think that is involved—but to think of the whole country.

An abandonment of the shared programmes will have most serious consequences for this country—not so much for Ontario. I am sure, with our sources of tax revenues, we can look after those programmes perhaps as well as they are being looked after now. But I am thinking of other provinces, of the Maritime provinces. After all, let us remember that the Maritime provinces have suffered severely because of federal policies which benefited Ontario and Quebec; tariff policies, transportation policies, and so on. And now are we going to abandon them and tell them, with their limited and inadequate resources, that they have to carry on some of these programmes which are now shared?

I think that Ontario should object to any suggestion that the federal government will pull out of the shared programmes. In fact I think it should be increasing its contributions, and increasing its responsibilities in this field. I do not know what the position of the Ontario government is on this matter. As a matter of fact, I would say, Mr. Chairman, as a member of this Legislature, that I regret that we do not seem to know what the position of the Ontario government is on almost anything relating to federal-provincial relations.

I think this House is entitled to a statement, at an early date, as to where the government stands on many of these vital questions which are being negotiated at federal-provincial conferences. I do not think we should have to be satisfied, and I do not think the people of Ontario should have to be satisfied, with the close-to-the-vest statements in which apparently the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) finds such satisfaction.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister right now, what the stand of this government is with regard to the future of the shared programmes. Is this government prepared to take a stand in favour of their continuance, or is it willing to work out some sort of deal to get a bit more tax revenue and let the federal government get out from under its responsibilities in this field? I would like to hear a statement of government policy on this matter. I think one is long overdue, and I think we should get one right now.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I will speak to this, Mr. Chairman. The old question of shared programmes and how they were to be dealt with perhaps does not come under the estimates of this department, but I would be happy to make a brief statement on the whole field; because, as the hon. members of this House know, shared programmes extend through all activities of government. There are some 70-odd—

Mr. Bryden: At this time I am asking specifically about those relating to welfare.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, those specifically. To answer that question I cannot, in a nutshell, tell the hon. member the position we have taken in regard to shared programmes. We recognize the great benefit they have been and, I think I have said this in various statements on various occasions, shared programmes have done a great deal for this country. I agree with the hon. member for Woodbine that over the years they have done things we all know about: (a) they have established common standards from coast to coast, at least some attempted common standards from coast to coast; and (b) from a financial point of view, they have given aid to many areas of Canada which might not be able to institute some of these programmes themselves. They offered encouragement to many areas of Canada to institute various programmes; we recognize all these things and we have been participants in many programmes, and we accept the shared programme concept as such.

There is no policy on the part of this government, and I attempted to make this very clear, by which we would, as a matter of policy, opt out of shared programmes as such—whether they are in welfare or in health, whether they are in highway building, or in the field of agriculture.

That is your answer for the programmes in the estimates of this specific department. It is not our intent. The programmes themselves are so complex; there are so many of them; and the method of sharing and the results of sharing vary tremendously from programme to programme; and this is one matter which came up at the last federal-provincial conference.

For instance, the federal government has obviously adopted a policy by which they are going to recognize the right of any province to contract out; or, in many cases, it is a case of not contracting in rather than contracting out, because any of these programmes are really the prerogative, and the constitutional prerogative, of the provinces. And when a province does not contract out, it contracts in when it enters into an arrangement with the federal government.

The province of Quebec obviously has adopted, as an overall policy, that it chooses to run its own show, so to speak, and wants to contract out, and wants the fiscal equivalent—was the term developed at this last conference—the fiscal equivalent of its position, where it can begin the programme. Namely, if the federal government would spend X numbers of dollars in any given province in a shared programme; Quebec's point is, we want that amount of money that would come into Quebec from the federal government but we do not want it as part of a shared programme, we want the money in order to run a similar programme ourselves.

Well, now you can see the immediate difficulty you are in as far as establishing common standards is concerned, as far as the maintenance of standards and as far as increasing standards through shared programmes are concerned.

But I think we must take it for granted in all the pronouncements that have been made that the federal government has adopted this policy, that it is not going to attempt to keep the provinces within shared programmes. To answer your questions as far as this department is concerned, and indeed in the broader picture of all shared programmes, this government does not adopt the policy that we wish to contract out. We are well aware of our Canadian responsibilities and I think that in many of these things we all feel alike in this House, regardless of where we may sit.

We are Canadians first and foremost. This does not mean necessarily that we would be in every shared programme. There may be some programmes in which it would be beneficial and proper for us not to be in and in not being in we will not be doing anyone else any harm. In other words, there is an element of choice in this situation. I think that we would err as much on the other side if we were to adopt a policy that whatever programme was offered by the federal government we must automatically join in it. I think there is an element of choice here as to whether we are in or out.

The real point is that the shared programme and the concept of it, in the opinion of this government, has been a very valuable thing for our country as a whole and we do not adopt the position that we propose to contract out when the opportunity offers. There is a middle ground even here, because some of the shared programmes have not been as effective as they might be because of the rigidities in them.

For instance, some of the maritime provinces simply say we are unable to take advantage of this shared programme because we have not enough money to put up our share, therefore we have in this programme a credit we can use, of $6 million or $7 million, which we cannot get at because we cannot put up the money to start the programme and perhaps that programme does not suit our local needs.

They say why can we not move that $6 million which we cannot use there, over into this programme. Then we would be able to use it in a way that is more suitable to the local needs and to the needs of our province.

Now this is the difficulty with shared programmes in which you attempt to establish a set of relatively rigid rules that would apply through ten provinces because, let us face it, the facts and the circumstances are not the same in all the ten provinces of Canada. So it has been suggested, and it was suggested vehemently and I think supported by all the provinces, that in these shared programmes there might be some readjustment of the basis upon which you operate so that if one in the field of health—the hon. Minister of Health is very aware of this, Mr. Chairman—in the field of health there are various programmes where we might want to put the stress in Ontario on one branch of health whereas another province might want to put it on another branch of health. This is a further refinement of the position that New Brunswick put as far as money for hospitals was concerned, when they really needed money for schools.

If we can, through this discussion of shared programmes, get to a position where we loosen up the rigidities of the requirements of the federal government before they would share, then of course the shared programme can become a much more flexible and much more effective instrument in many provinces than it is today.

Very briefly, those are some of the elements which were discussed in the adjustment of shared cost programmes.

Now the majority of the shared cost programmes are in areas where there is shared jurisdiction between the federal and the provincial governments or where it may be, under The British North America Act, provincial jurisdiction alone. I must say that when the province of Quebec says that they wish to run their own show but want the equivalent amount of money, they really are not asking for any favours. I think that this should be understood. In many instances, they are merely asking to exercise rights that are fundamentally theirs under The British North America Act. But we have no policy whereby we, as a government, are interested in contracting out of all shared programmes.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make one or two specific references on vote 1809. Let me preface my remarks—I hope I am not out of order—by saying to the hon. Prime Minister that on at least a personal basis—and I think I speak for others in this House—we welcome the gist of those remarks.

I think that it is indispensable at this point in the federal government's efforts to dismantle Confederation, that it be somehow prevented. We will watch with interest the evolution of this cost-sharing formula. It is good to know that somewhere a wholesale federal turning over of funds which undermines the standards and the basis of development of Canada for decades, will not be embraced carte blanche.

Mr. Chairman, in this particular vote there is the mothers' allowance section and I want once again to come back to the categories under the regulations and ask the hon. Minister to explain what is involved in some of them. As he knows, mothers who receive the mothers' allowance cannot have liquid assets of more than $1,000. Has that been upgraded recently?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: It is $1,000 for mother and child plus $200 for each additional child.

Mr. S. Lewis: One thousand dollars for mother and child, and $200 for every additional child.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. Minister what one does in the case of a mother who has, let us say, $1,300 and two children. What does the field worker say to that mother to bring her within the regulations? Obviously, she cannot qualify because of being $100 above in liquid assets and this, I think, illustrates the folly of categorization generally. How is such a mother brought down within the category? What is said to her? What would the hon. Minister say to such a woman? How should she dispose of her $100?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, there again there must be a place where a direction must be used. I am sure that my hon. friend is really bringing up a borderline case. I do not know of any mother, or any person of that particular category, who will not get what is offered by the regulations as such. Naturally, my hon. friend gives me a case which is really one that is borderline and very difficult to make up one's mind about.

I am sure, sir, that the mother, with all her resources and all her instincts about doing things, will, without being dishonest, arrive at the figure that is required. I am sure she would find a way of dealing with that situation to become eligible very quickly.

Mr. S. Lewis: In other words, what I am getting at, and apparently the hon. Minister concurs, is that somehow one has to get rid of one's savings, illicitly or otherwise, to fit within the category. The fact that the savings may be desperately needed by the mother is totally irrelevant to fitting within the particular strictures devised by the department.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am sure that in a week or a month that amount could be spent very easily.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, perhaps you could. I am not sure that that would be a sufficient answer to a mother to whom $100 might mean a great deal—if you said to her, in rather cavalier fashion, "Well, Mrs. Brown, you can spend the $100 in a week or a month rather easily." I suspect that that might not sit well where there are fatherless children involved.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: My friend seems to have a great way of rephrasing statements of that description, but he knows very well that these cases are dealt with very kindly. We are not trying to make a person, for the sake of getting on some particular programme, despoil herself of any earnings of any description. I think the hon. member knows very well what I mean.

If there are assets there I cannot come along and say, "Because you have $1,300 I have to include you and ignore the regulations." The regulations are set as such, and they have to be considered as such. We have to have a line of demarcation somewhere. I am sure that there would be some things in the house she might need—things that she might have to repair, something like that—so that funds could be used for that purpose and make her eligible.

Surely we are not going to discuss matters which are so close to the vest as that. And I consider that putting words in my mouth is unfair. I would not try to tell this woman to be dishonest with me or dishonest with the field worker, or to do things like that. I am quite sure that there are some cases which come close to the line but I do not know of any who have suffered from it to such an extent that they might be left destitute for that particular reason.

Mr. S. Lewis: I am not quite so sure that is true, Mr. Chairman. As a private member in this House, I have been very hard pressed in several instances as to what to advise such people when they say, "I am a few hundred dollars over in liquid or fixed assets, and I must have mothers' allowance to survive. How do I fall within the category?"

As the hon. Minister knows, such a mother is not allowed to take in boarders. Or, if one does taken in boarders to maintain a house, which, let us assume, has been left by a woman's husband, a large percentage of the income is subtracted from her mothers' allowance. So she finds herself in the anomalous position of having to reject the boarders, receive the mothers' allowance, not be able to keep up the payments on the house, lose the house, and then become a charge on the municipality. This is not a particularly unusual case.

There are many such specific instances which have passed through our party offices; and one or two of them are fairly carefully enunciated in this story in the Toronto Globe and Mail of Thursday, February 27, on fatherless children.

The point, I think, is not so much that there are such individual cases. The point is that the establishing of arbitrary categories necessitates such cases; because when you set arbitrary limits of that kind, which are totally false and irrelevant, they inevitably bear no relation at any given point in time to needs. They are fixed peremptorily. When that is done individual cases are bound to be done an injustice. I would therefore again urge upon the department that when regulations are revised—be it in this kind of legislation or any other—contributions and allowances should be based totally on an evaluation of need made by the social worker on the spot.

I think that some basic approach could be established whereby a department would have a group of skilled people sufficient to make an assessment of family needs, and not force mothers with fatherless children into special categories so that they cannot have more than a certain amount of liquid assets or cannot earn any more than a certain amount of money, and if they do, 75 per cent of the income is subtracted from their allowance; or they cannot work more than 24 hours a week; or they cannot take in boarders, or if they do, 40 per cent is subtracted from their allowance.

It is psychologically and administratively wrong to approach welfare on that basis. Inevitably it costs the government a great deal more money and results in a great deal of human distress.

Vote 1809 agreed to.

On vote 1810:

Mr. E. G. Freeman (Fort William): There is one question I should like to direct to the hon. Minister. It has to do with disabled persons, and in this it covers the question of mental retardation and so on. In connection with that matter, I would like to read this communication to the hon. members present. The letter is addressed to me. It reads:

Dear Sir:

I am writing about a matter that I am convinced is a gross injustice against an incapacitated man, incapacitated to the extent that he would find it next to an impossibility to obtain steady employment or to plan a worthwhile and happy future. This is a case that cries "Shame" upon a government, and a government department that would allow this sort of thing to happen, and I am sincerely hoping that there is something that could be done to correct this injustice.

The case concerns my brother-in-law, Mr. Stewart Hillocks, aged approximately 35, former patient in the Ontario Hospital, Port Arthur and in an Edmonton institution. His records are now in the Port Arthur institution and, I believe, The Department of Public Welfare disabled persons' allowance branch, Toronto. He is mentally retarded. I believe he has been in the Ontario Hospital and various other institutions since the early age of 13. Each time he was discharged he would work in various capacities for a while and then require readmittance for further treatment.

Quite frequently he would be in a form of amnesia and even to this day his memory is quite vague and often distorted in regard to past years. The last time my wife, Stewart's sister, knew of his whereabouts, until of course the last two or three years, was when he visited her in Fort William about 1950. He had a job at that time in a bakery in Winnipeg. Shortly after his return to Winnipeg she lost all track of him until December, 1960 when she received a Christmas card from him from the Provincial Mental Institute in Edmonton, Alberta, where overall he had spent three and a half years. He had just started to regain his memory with regard to his family. He is still not clear in remembering a great deal of the time prior to his hospitalization in regard to where he has been, just a vague recollection of wandering the prairie provinces and working on various farms.

My wife and I, with the help of the authorities, effected Stewart's transfer to the Ontario Hospital, Port Arthur, the city of his birth, in 1961. And in June 1962, as we were moving to the country to try our hand at farming and in co-operation with the rehabilitation services, we gave Stewart a home, effecting his discharge from the hospital.

At the time, we had an understanding with the rehabilitation officer that we would require formal assistance, not being in a position to, at the time, carry the full responsibility. The rehabilitation officer approached Mr. Doherty, of The Ontario Department of Public Welfare, Port Arthur, in regard to welfare for Stewart. However, he was advised that it might be best to apply for a disabled person's allowance.

This was applied for, refused, an appeal was made, again refused. Quite a while later, Stewart was interviewed by a doctor from Toronto. A third appeal was filed.

Today, my wife received a letter from The Department of Public Welfare, Toronto; the copy is enclosed, that for sheer stupidity beats anything I have ever heard or read. I ask you in all fairness, I challenge even the Premier himself, how in the name of God can a diagnosed mentally retarded person, suffering in the past from total lapse of memory, be expected to remember anything, and I charge that this is only an excuse to keep from paying out anything.

The man that signed this letter received today, needs to be educated in many things, in my opinion. For anyone to leave the country is not so easy. To visit the USA, one requires adequate identification and birth certificate. To work they need a special visa from the American Consulate. To leave for a foreign country, a passport is needed.

Stewart has not even a birth certificate in his possession. The National Employment Service, Edmonton, Alberta, I believe, will have a record of Stewart's registering in 1958. Is it left to people like ourselves to try to trace and prove what this man himself cannot remember?

Early this year, application was made to the township of Paipoonge, in which we reside, for welfare on Stewart's behalf and since that time it has been a constant fight to receive anything. First we received an order for clothing, not even adequate; then one food budget for $15. We are constantly put off with a steady chain of excuses, one being that the government will only pay a percentage of a certain amount. I am sure it must be more than $15. Overall, in two years we have received $67 from welfare. Every cent was a major campaign. If there is any justice or fairness in the province, then I hope you can find it for us, for I am fast losing faith in the country I served for. I would sincerely appreciate the enclosed letter back when it is no longer of any use . . . and so on.

(Signed)

R. ANDERSON

The enclosed letter, Mr. Chairman, is a letter signed for Mr. W. A. Chalmers, I take it, director, Welfare Allowances Branch. It is not signed by Mr. Chalmers; actually it is initialled as signed for him. The letter is dated February 13, 1964, to Mrs. Anderson.

The application of Mr. Stewart Hillocks for an allowance under The Disabled Persons' Allowance Act has received careful consideration and we would advise as follows:

The Act provides that an applicant must have resided in Canada for ten years immediately preceding the date of application or if he has not so resided, has been present in Canada prior to this ten years for an aggregate period equal to twice the aggregate period of absences from Canada during those ten years. We regret that Mr. Hillocks did not provide us with proof of ten years' residence in Canada. We are therefore unable to grant an allowance on his behalf at this time.

It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that somebody in The Department of Public Welfare definitely slipped in this case. Surely it is obvious that a mentally retarded person would have difficulty in trying to remember where he had been, over a period of ten years any place in the world, whether it be in Canada or anyplace else.

I suggest, sir, that at this time, if this sort of thing is going on in The Department of Public Welfare, and cases are coming to the attention of the elected members of this Legislature because of this type of action on the part of senior civil servants, that the hon. Minister of Public Welfare would do well to chastise people very effectively in cases of this type. I investigated it personally, and this definitely is a deserving case and has been for a long, long period of time. I recommend it to the hon. Minister's attention.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I would just like to point out this: Can my hon. friend establish the fact that the person has been here ten years in Canada? Because you know, we have no discretion here. This is a federal rule and we have no discretion under that particular—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): How could he get out?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I do not know but if it can be proved that the man has been for ten years in Canada, I will be very glad to have a close look at the case and I would appreciate it very much—

Mr. MacDonald: Suppose we put it the other way, that he was not here ten years.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am sorry to say that I have no discretion on this. The regulations are federal regulations and the onus is entirely upon the person, but if eligibility can be shown to me, I will be very glad to take up the case and then the discretion will be taken away completely. That is, I will be within the discretion of dealing with it. I completely agree with my hon. friend that this is too rigid and I hope that when we go to Ottawa on the shared programme discussion next month—that is May 11, 12 and 13—we will be able to "unrigid", or loosen, many of these regulations. This is one with which I do not agree, I can assure you.

Mr. MacDonald: With respect, Mr. Minister, this is not rigid; this is nonsensical.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, I agree there, too.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: This is not rigid; this is nonsensical. The person could not leave the country unless he had a birth certificate. He would have to get permission from a consul. He would have to get a work permit in the United States. Obviously he has not got any of those. Their bits of information indicate he was in Winnipeg, he was in Edmonton, he was in various other places—always in Canada. In other words, there is plenty of evidence to suggest he has been in Canada all the time. To impose upon him the requirement to provide documentary proof that he has been in the country when he is a person who is retarded and is subject to amnesia, I think the department has made itself a bit ridiculous in this. I do not think it is the rigidity of the federal regulation.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I want to bring something to the attention of the hon. Minister, too. I listened with great interest to the very articulate hon. member for Scarborough West when he pointed out there should be a change in categories and need should be of prime consideration.

Recently in my own area, a man was drowned. He had taken his car out on the ice and unfortunately the ice was not strong enough and he was drowned. The car had to be taken up because it was a menace to navigation. It cost far more to retrieve the car than the widow was able to get from its sale. In fact, the automobile was practically useless. The insurance on the car could not be obtained because it had gone out on the ice.

There is in that home a retarded young man. He is 19 years old now and he had been at one time an inmate at the Smith's Falls institution. The mother gets a disabled person's allowance for him at $75 a month and that is all she gets. She has a home to look after and she has the boy. She is not eligible yet by age for a widow's allowance. She is in her late 50s. She cannot go out and work because she must look after this young man, so that the $75 must cover everything of her needs. She has a fairly large home. She was told to get a smaller one but she finds it is difficult to get any kind of a home in her area at any reasonable rent. With the $75 she must look after herself, look after the home, and look after her son, because she cannot leave him at all. He would be absolutely helpless and he also becomes very emotionally disturbed when his mother leaves.

I agree with the point that the hon. member for Scarborough West brought out, that there should not be these very rigid categories, but the actual need of the situation should be considered. Possibly she may get some supplementary assistance from welfare, but I still think there should be, from the department itself, a change in the regulations so that cases of this nature may be given full consideration.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like, on this vote, to compliment the hon. Minister's staff. I put it to you this way. I appreciate what is being said by my hon. friends, my colleagues here. There are these limitations and rigidity and there is no question about it. But I would also say, sir, that over the past year, when I think back on notifying your department about a number of cases and I am thinking particularly of your Mothers' Allowances Act, that real kindness was shown and obvious dedication. I feel I would be remiss if I did not congratulate you, sir, on some of the people that you have in your department who do a job with sensitivity and with thought and with kindness. But having said that, I would like to say still that I feel because of the rigidity of this Act there are limitations to what they can do, and I align myself with the position that if we could in some way broaden these categories it would be a wonderful thing.

Vote 1810 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I would like to express at this moment that I still love everybody in this House.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, we will proceed with the estimates of The Department of Information and Tourism, and as I said earlier, after that we will deal with the estimates of The Department of Energy and Resources Management.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.25 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15, 1964

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome to the Legislature today in the east gallery students from Ontario Ladies College, Whitby; and in the east and west galleries, students from Central Secondary School, Hamilton.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE ONTARIO MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT SYSTEM ACT, 1961-62

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System Act, 1961-62.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a short explanation, there are two amendments in this bill. One will provide that the Act will be made available to the staffs of district assessors and district assessment commissioners. The second amendment is to provide that the system may enter into agreements to manage other pension funds.

THE MUNICIPAL UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS ACT

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Municipal Unconditional Grants Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, there are two sections to this bill: one provides for grants to municipalities in each year with respect to indigent hospitalization, and the second amendment sets out the schedule of the unconditional grants, in a more proper form than appeared in the previous Acts. The parts and amounts are gathered together in one schedule without any change in the total amount of grants.

THE RETAIL SALES TAX ACT, 1960-61

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-61.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, this bill extends the exemption for sales tax to all bequests of personal property instead of just to bequests made to certain close relatives.

Provision is also made whereby municipalities, school boards, hospitals, universities and certain similar institutions may buy materials for construction of buildings exempt from sales tax instead of paying the sales tax and later applying for rebate. Contracts entered into prior to June 1, 1964, will be subject to sales tax and the present provisions for rebate will apply for contracts entered into on or after June 1, 1964. We believe that this will lessen the administration burden for these organizations.

Buses used to provide public transportation within a municipality, purchased on or after March 1, 1964, are exempt from sales tax.

The present regulation requiring non-resident contractors to provide a deposit for their sales tax liability is being expanded to provide alternatives and is being incorporated into the Act.

The other provisions in the bill are of an administrative or technical nature.

THE SUCCESSION DUTY ACT

Hon. Mr. Allan moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Succession Duty Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make certain clarifications in the Act. The first section clarifies the definition of "child", to exclude in certain cases an adult who might otherwise be technically considered as a child due to a remarriage or a surviving parent in his or her later years.

The exemption from duty provided last year for pension plans administered in Ontario with respect to the estate of a person dying domiciled out of Ontario is now being extended to grant a similar exemption to other types of employee plans.

As mentioned in my Budget speech, the federal government is decreasing the portion of estate tax which it will retain from 50 per cent to 25 per cent, effective April 1 last. As the federal government has a Royal commission studying the fields of federal taxation, and as Ontario has a committee making similar studies of provincial and municipal taxation, we prefer for the present not to make the change in our Succession Duty Act which would be required in order to pick up the amounts representing the 25 per cent of estate tax which the federal government will be rebating. Instead we have arranged for the government of Canada to remit to us this 25 per cent.

THE RACE TRACKS TAX ACT

Hon. Mr. Allan moves, seconded by hon. Mr. Spooner, first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Race Tracks Tax Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Speaker, this legislation has to do with certain administration in connection with the race tracks. It has been our practice to have inspectors at all the main tracks during the days of racing. This we feel to be unnecessary, because the betting is checked by the federal authorities and by the RCMP. In the interests of economy we are therefore withdrawing our inspectors from the tracks.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): The hon. Provincial Treasurer would not think of increasing the tax would he?

Hon. Mr. Allan: You never know.

CONSOLIDATED REVENUE FUND

Hon. Mr. Allan moves, seconded by hon. Mr. Spooner, first reading of bill intituled, An Act to authorize the raising of money on the credit of the consolidated revenue fund.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Speaker, the amount of the authorization is $125 million.

THE INDUSTRIAL FARMS ACT

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions) moves, seconded by hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines), first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Industrial Farms Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, this is tidying up legislation. It is complementary to The Female Refuges Repeal Act which was approved just prior to the Easter recess,

THE PENAL AND REFORM INSTITUTIONS INSPECTION ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moves, seconded by hon. Mr. Wardrope, first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Penal and Reform Institutions Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, there are two sections to this amendment. Section 1 is like the previous bill, complementary to The Female Refuges Repeal Act and tidies up some legislation in that respect. Section 2 makes it clear that municipal by-laws respecting jails, which are now subject to the approval of the Minister of Reform Institutions, will provide that—this amendment will provide that it will except by-laws respecting the appointment and provisions of employment of jail employees and officials. The appointment of jailers is still subject to the approval of the Minister.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask of the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) of which I have already given notice. The question is as follows:

In lieu of the statement made by the deputy Minister of Highways to the London Free Press on April 3, regarding the two south lane sections of Highway 401 in Kent, would the hon. Minister explain why there has been a change since his statement in the House as recorded in Hansard of March 16, page 1655?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): In answer to the question of the hon. member for Kent East, I would say:

(a) that we have already been able to advance the tender call dates for the grading and paving of the south lanes of 401 in the section from Tempo westerly to the Kent county line as stated by the deputy Minister to the London Free Press on the third of this month.

(b) we are presently working to determine the extent to which we can accelerate the tender call and subsequent contract award dates on the remaining sections from the Kent county line westerly.

Accordingly, there is no change in the statement I made to the House as recorded on page 1655 of Hansard on March 16 last.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope). The amenities have been observed—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Indeed they must be.

Mr. Troy: I understand that the hon. Minister was away yesterday in the province of Quebec so I shall ask the question today. Has the hon. Minister of Mines any pertinent information to give to the Legislature about the reported important copper strike in the Porcupine area?

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank sincerely the hon. member for Nipissing and I should like to ask him if amenities is a new word for drill cores or something. However, I have no pertinent information at present but I am advised there will be a full report for the press tomorrow.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Anything the hon. member likes.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, is that report coming from the hon. Minister of Mines?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: This will come from the company officials themselves.

Mr. Troy: Thank you.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. Report of the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation for the year ending December 31, 1962.

2. Report of the Ontario Cancer Institute for the year ending December 31, 1963.

3. Thirteenth annual report of the Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation for the year ending December 31, 1963.

4. Alcoholism and Drug Addiction Research Foundation report on audit for the year ended March 31, 1963.

5. Thirty-ninth annual report of The Department of Health, Ontario for the year 1963.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to inform the House that yesterday I received a telephone call from the Right Honourable Mr. Pearson, Prime Minister of Canada, in which he informed me that his government was negotiating with the government of the province of Quebec in regard to the relationship between the Canada pension plan and the pension plan as proposed by the province of Quebec at the recent federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Pearson did not tell me the detail but wished me to be aware that these negotiations were being carried on. I assured him that, in the studies we are making in the province of Ontario, I would be more than prepared to meet with the government of Canada and the government of Quebec in order to devise a plan which would be suitable for all of Canada.

As I have said on many occasions, I feel that a plan national in scope for Canada is best. At the conference in Quebec City two weeks ago, it became apparent that the province of Quebec would not join with the rest of Canada and thus a national plan became impossible. In the discharge of our responsibility we must speak for the people of Ontario, and when a national plan became obviously impossible of achievement then we felt it necessary to reconsider our position in the light of the interests of the people of this province.

Events in the field of pensions have been fast moving for some months. If this latest development can bring us closer in Canada to achieving a plan national in character, with the best possible benefits for our people containing safeguards to ensure security, and a plan which can be approved by all the provinces, then the great efforts and frustrations of the last few months will have been justified. Certainly the co-operation of this government can be counted on to achieve this goal.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The seventeenth order. House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TOURISM AND INFORMATION

On vote 2106:

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, in vote 2106, I think this has something to do with regional associations. I would like to make a few comments and hope that the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld) would seriously consider exactly what I have to say here.

The Essex and Kent tourist council commissioned a Mr. Charles T. Greenwood of the University of Windsor to prepare a report on the seigneurial system in early French Canada and the Detroit river region. This report, which is some 58 pages in length, was requested to determine the feasibility and the advisability of constructing a representative seigneurie, in Essex county as a legitimate historic attraction.

Long before the French settlers arrived, the Detroit river region was the site of various Indian villages. During the 1640's the Iroquois destroyed and scattered the peaceful local tribes who had originally received Jesuit missionaries. In 1701 Fort Pontchartrain, or Detroit, was founded by Cadillac. The oldest French settlement in Ontario is just outside of the city of Windsor; an area known as Petite Cote, that is LaSalle, or Sandwich West.

Heavily endowed with history is the area. In 1749, the Church of Assumption began its career as the core of the French settlement in Essex county. The people of the region, and particularly of the Windsor area, are especially proud, because their roots are the oldest in the province and were nurtured in the adversity which creates great men and great traditions. The establishment of the seigneurial village project in Essex county should be given high priority. The French settlers were important in creating Essex county and have given this area a history which is more varied and longer than any other place in the province of Ontario.

Essex county, because of its French heritage, is one of the great bicultural areas outside of the province of Quebec. In these times, when the dual Canadian soul is undergoing a vital re-examination, the attention paid by the county to our French and English traditions could and should be an example of understanding and interest which would undoubtedly promote better bicultural relations within the province, even within the nation. It could lead to better appreciation of Canada by the thousands of American citizens who enter Canada by way of Windsor each day. In fact, in the first three months of this year, over 1.4 million vehicles entered at the port of Windsor and over 4.8 million people entered Windsor from the U.S.

Now the oldest French settlement in Ontario is in Petite Cote, and just crossing the border you have the Greenfield Village and you have the Ford Museum, which are national tourist attractions. I think the department should seriously consider matching this after some fashion with something similar to what you have in the Ontario-St. Lawrence development. Here you have a natural place for this. You have well over 5,000,000 people within an hour's drive of a tourist attraction that could be set up on the shores of the Detroit river. The shores are deeply steeped in history, dating back to the early days of the 1700's and I would like the hon. Minister to seriously consider the establishment of something similar to the Ontario-St. Lawrence Park Development.

Would he care to comment on this?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Chairman, I found what the hon. member had to say very interesting. I might say I met with the members of the Essex-Kent association and the hon. member for Essex South (Mr. Paterson) on this very project about perhaps two or two and a half months ago. They submitted quite a full brief on this kind of project and I must admit I think it is a good one.

They asked for comments in connection with certain aspects of the proposed operation of this programme which I sent to them, and I indicated at the time and would indicate again, that we will give them every assistance we can in our department to carry out their programme, particularly through the historical branch and through the trained and experienced staff we have established in connection with the reconstruction of Upper Canada Village.

Quite frankly, I think this kind of project, or these kinds of projects throughout the province, have tremendous benefit, not only for the tourist industry but also to teach our own people something of our own history so, if I could put it this way, our children will not think that Ontario was settled by Matt Dillon. This is one thing in which I have always been interested in connection with Upper Canada Village and Old Fort Henry.

However, I think it will be obvious to all the hon. members of this House that to undertake on a provincial scale the many projects that could be considered, of all sizes, small ones and large ones, all at once, would be very difficult. I would remind my hon. friend that the province has undertaken a further project this year in the Huronia area of reconstruction of Fort Ste. Marie I. It is my hope that when this one has been completed, we will be able to go on further.

However, I would also suggest this: under the centennial grants programme there is a very large sum of money available to the people of the province through their municipalities to undertake just such projects as this and I would hope that this may be receiving consideration in this area. I realize that it requires getting a number of municipalities to join together in a common project, which is not always easy because there may be other projects that are felt to be important in each municipal area. But there is an opportunity there.

I can assure the hon. member that we are very interested, not only in this project but this kind of project, and we will certainly be looking at it.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I bring it up not only from the educational value also, but the hon. Minister knows that we have been blighted for quite a while with a serious problem of unemployment, with almost 7,000 people still unemployed, eight per cent of the work force. A project like this, just as it has had an economic benefit to the Cornwall area, the St. Lawrence Seaway area in the eastern part of Ontario, could likewise have a substantial benefit to the community. It could assist in cutting down some of that unemployment. Are there grants available for the initiation of a project such as this?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Under the grants system which this department administers to regional tourist councils the funds that are granted, up to a maximum of $5,000 on a matching basis to a regional council, could be either partially or in whole applied to such a project. That is the only grant which would be available at the present time, other than the centennial grants with which the hon. member is familiar.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, how was Upper Canada Village started then, was it not started by substantial grants from the province?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Upper Canada Village is in a slightly different category. Inasmuch as it was the Upper Canada Village part of the Ontario-St. Lawrence Development Commission project, it was entirely financed provincially.

Mr. Newman: Could not a similar project be set up in the Essex county area? Could the St. Lawrence Development Commission not extend its scope to go into the Essex county area?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Of course, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member would remember that Upper Canada Village came about in what I might call an unusual fashion. The structures for the village were going to be torn down because they were in the area which was going to be flooded as part of the power project of the seaway, and it was perhaps a happy chance that the commission was set up and the village came about. But as I say, it started in perhaps an unusual way, somewhat similar to the way Old Fort Henry was restored. That was a project in the 1930s. I guess really as an unemployment project in the Kingston area, as a reconstruction. I think it is fair to say that no government in Canada has undertaken this kind of project for the historical value or the tourist value itself. In the first instance, it has come about by a combination of circumstances. I think the same thing holds true with the federal project in Louisburg in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, the grants as given to the regional association of $5,000 are much too small really for an organization to get moving on a project like this. I think there would have to be a little more assistance from the province, especially in view of the fact that the economic conditions in the area are not as good as we would like to see them. They have improved substantially and we find a new Windsor, a new Essex county there now, but substantial assistance from the province could hasten a project which would be of educational as well as financial assistance to the local area. I would like the hon. Minister to do all he can to hasten the day when we can have this project in the area.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can assure the hon. member, as I said a moment ago, that we are very interested in this kind of project. But I would just remind him that as far as financial assistance is concerned there is a golden opportunity at the present time to the tune of approximately $2 per capita under the centennial grants programme, a joint federal-provincial programme, for this kind of project. Anything that we can do to encourage that, we would certainly be glad to do.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, concerning this centennial grants project, there are so many other demands from other bodies in the municipality for projects that it would be most difficult to try to sell this to the community.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, I would raise a question that concerns me. On making a trip last year on the trans-Canada highway west along the Lake Superior route, I found one of the greatest scenic routes that I believe we can find anywhere. But I was disturbed that about every two or three miles you come across a sign that says, "Private property, keep out," or "Private fishing and boating." I will admit there were several very fine public beaches under the supervision of the department. But I would urge that influence be used to provide on that strip from Sault Ste. Marie to the Lakehead, some low-cost or low-rental cabins for the tourists.

I noticed coming back, when I drove through the night, that there were several cars with families sleeping out on the side of the road. I spoke to many of them and they mentioned the fact that there was not enough accommodation and what there was was too costly for a man with a family. I hope that this beautiful stretch will not fall into the same category as many of our tourist areas, which become so highly commercialized that people with families cannot afford to use them in a proper manner, and that we conserve the property along there for public use and not let it fall into private hands completely so that we can use that wonderful strip for what, Mr. Chairman, I believe it should be used for. It is a fine trip, but a long one to make without having suitable accommodation for families to stop at, at a cost they can afford to sleep overnight. I would hope that all departments involved would give this some consideration.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, this perhaps is not proper for me comment on. I would just remind the hon. member of this, that The Department of Lands and Forests has established several parks along Highway 17 from the Soo to the Lakehead. I would say from the policy that has been adopted in the past that, as these become crowded, further parks will be established, and there is a great deal of Crown land in that area as the hon. member knows.

Mr. Gisborn: I agree entirely with what the hon. Minister says, but the point is that there should be, at certain areas, some low-cost cabins. I think the parks are fine, with the tables and the areas cleaned up and cooking facilities, but I think what would help a great deal would be some low-cost cabins that would accommodate a family for the night at a price they could afford.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, in discussing this vote with the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, the hon. Minister mentioned Fort Ste. Marie. Does the money for that rebuilding come in this vote?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am happy to tell the hon. member that we passed that one. It has been passed earlier—I think it was 2102, sub-item 5.

Mr. Nixon: It does not come under the division of archives?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No. In archives there is an amount, you will notice, for archaeological exploration, of I think $5,000, but that has to do with the Archaeological and Historic Sites Board.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I think one of the phases of tourist development outside the regular pattern that we should give some consideration to is the hostel development. This is something that has never developed in anything like the fashion on this continent or in this province that it has in Europe. I have been interested in some of the literature that is available about the hostel development and the nature trails in the whole escarpment from the Niagara peninsula through to the Bruce peninsula. But against that general background I was interested in a story in the Globe and Mail of March 18, which had a little note to this effect:

The Canadian Youth Hostels Association is preparing a brief to the Ontario government asking for the use of the Sigmund Samuel $150,000 Forest Hill mansion as an international hostel by 1967. Samuel gave the mansion to Ontario for the Lieutenant-Governor's residence but Public Works Minister Ray Connell said this month that his department is thinking of selling it. The association's Great Lakes chairman, Doug McLaren, thinks it would make an ideal hostel, and showplace for the association headquarters as well.

I was wondering if the hon. Minister can tell us whether the government has received this brief and what comments, if any, he is in a position to make on the proposal?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid I have to tell the hon. member that I have not seen the brief. As far as I know it has not been received by the government; it may have gone to some other Minister, but consequently since I have not seen it I am afraid I am in no position to comment on it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there is one other point. I am sorry my actual material in connection with this is up in my office—no, it is not, it is on the way here; thanks so much. I wonder if the hon. Minister can comment, or perhaps he can get his hon. colleague on his immediate right to comment, on the public furor—that may be a bit strong—that arose in the Sault Ste. Marie and Wawa area some time ago with regard to land rights that had been given to the ACR years ago and, if I recall correctly, the newly established procedure of the ACR a year or so ago in making a charge for tourists—the result being that a number of the tourist establishments in the area had withdrawn their activities because they were not in a position to operate economically.

It seemed to me that as my hon. colleague, the member for Wentworth East, has indicated, sir, this is one of the new areas for development of tourism in the province of Ontario with the completion of the trans-Canada highway. This appears to be throwing up roadblocks against the fullest possible development of the tourist trade in that area, and doing so on a basis which strikes me as being highly anachronistic. These great land grants that were given to railways years ago and which they still retain, they are still using as though they were a private preserve. I suppose legally they are a private preserve but I question the morality—if I may use that term—of a railway holding on to such extensive amounts of land when they do not serve the purposes of the railway. It just happens to be an inheritance from the past when railways were encouraged to build by great grants from the public Treasury, including millions of acres in land grants.

Would the hon. Minister care to comment on that?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, of course this too is not within the legislation of, or any remedy there might be for this problem, is not within the jurisdiction of, this department. I am aware of the problem that is there and I have met with other members of the government who are involved in it directly. I think there have been a number of meetings between The Department of Lands and Forests and the commercial operators who are also concerned, but I do not think it would be proper for me to comment on action which The Department of Lands and Forests might be taking since it is a matter under their jurisdiction.

Mr. MacDonald: If you—I am sorry.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps I should comment in my capacity as a member representing the riding to which the hon. member refers, to say this: As my hon. colleague has said, this matter has been brought to his attention, to the attention of his department, and particularly to the attention of The Department of Lands and Forests. I have been kept fully aware of the feelings of the tourist operators in the area, and have had many communications from them extending over a period actually prior to my election to this House and throughout the period since. All of the representations which have been made by individual operators, by chambers of commerce, and other associations have been forwarded on to The Department of Lands and Forests.

I think I may be permitted to say this; study of the whole situation is being carried forward. I know this is being done at least, and I have asked for a history of the whole situation with respect to the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway.

This is general. I know that the railway company was given grants, I believe by the provincial Legislature of the time, with the view that it would construct a railway from Sault Ste. Marie northerly to Hudson Bay. It was constructed as far as what is now the town of Hearst, which is a junction on the most northerly trans-Canada railway. The railway was given certain grants, and they consisted generally in staggered townships, of very large areas of land. In 1941, I believe, a change was made by the government of that day in which certain areas were taken back and I believe ostensibly in satisfaction of a tax account. This is as I understand it. I have not got the reports statistically and factually before me at the moment; these are being prepared.

There is a situation of the nature that the hon. member for York South has outlined in the area at the present time. I must recall to you that in the standing committee when the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) was dealing with legislation having to do with his department and when committees were present from the tourist operators and chambers of commerce submitting their briefs, I raised the matter there. Some discussions took place on it and I think some discussions have gone forward with the railway company. I would have to leave any further comment, at this moment at least, to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests.

I would like the hon. members of this

House to be aware of the fact that the whole matter—and I am very much concerned about it because it is in my riding mainly—is being studied and a solution of the problems—and there are problems—is being sought.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I will just say at the moment that if the hon. Minister states, and I can quite understand that this more appropriately comes under Lands and Forests, then we can leave it until then, but I hoped he would intimate to his hon. colleague that I think this is an issue that we should have at least a preliminary report on, if not a definitive report, if the matter is still under continuing study because, I repeat, I think we are faced with a bit of an anachronism. I happen to have the map in front of me and you have great tracts of territory in townships staggered, as the hon. Attorney General just indicated, in that whole area north of Sault Ste. Marie. Now there may have been justification for this in the first instance, but I do not see why any corporation which is not using it for its primary purpose of a railway should be permitted to sit on great territories of this nature.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald: The ACR at the moment claims in one release that they put out after this had developed to a certain stage in public discussion that they have “complete and irrevocable ownership.” I suspect that this is maybe the point that is under study and I will look forward to a report from the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would just like to say that I am glad the hon. member has raised this in the House. I know that it is being thoroughly studied and I hope a solution will soon be brought forward.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, item five, grants to regional appropriations. Would you have the list of people who are getting these grants readily available? Could you read them off to us?

Hon. Mr. Auld: There are 31 of them, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if there is any specific one? I could give the hon. member the total, which is $135,109.13; and I can tell him that all the regional associations, except one, obtained a grant; and this year about 80 per cent of them were qualified for the maximum grant.

I will be glad to send my hon. friend this list. I just thought I would save the time of the House by not reading them all.

Mr. Bukator: I was wondering whether it would not be important to have it in the record because—

Hon. Mr. Auld: It will be in the annual report but—

Mr. Bukator: As a matter of fact I think it is in—

Hon. Mr. Auld: It will be in the public accounts, of course, and it seems to me that it is in this year's annual report, although some of it might not be final. I am informed that it is in this year's annual report which was distributed about a month ago.

Mr. Bukator: I can get that information there. The point that I am trying to make, and the hon. Minister might answer my question if he will this way, that there are certain areas that get a grant of some $5,000, taking in one, two or three counties and it is usually administered, or in some cases administered, under the chamber of commerce. Am I right on this point?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The regional council is generally made up of representatives from a number of chambers of commerce, boards of trade, and perhaps local tourist associations. There is not anything that says specifically of whom a council shall be made up, but it generally represents a number of chambers of commerce and this sort of thing in a region.

Mr. Bukator: To pursue this a bit further, I was making reference to the county of Welland. They have several chambers there, but the chamber of commerce in Niagara Falls—and if my good friend the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Morningstar) would come to and give me some assistance here—

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): I will do that right now.

Mr. Bukator: Anyhow, he will no doubt read it in Hansard.

The chamber of commerce in my riding, in Niagara Falls—the chamber of commerce from Welland, now that my good friend the hon. member for Welland is with me—the chamber of commerce from Welland and the chamber of commerce from Niagara Falls made representation to the former Minister pertaining to the $5,000 grant.

It takes in part of the county beyond ours, and I think that is Wentworth county. They cannot properly administer, in a council or in a group, this $5,000 grant because it is not sufficient to make important men, such as they have on those commissions and in those chambers, sit together to find out who gets a part of the $5,000. There are grants given to parts of counties, not whole counties, I understand.

If I am right at this point, then I can pursue it further.

Hon. Mr. Auld: If I might say this, Mr. Chairman, the tourist regions into which the province has been divided are 32. One of them is Algonquin Park, so there are 31 other regions in the province.

The province was divided on this basis without regard to municipal boundaries. It was divided with the idea of making regions which had a community of interests as far as the tourist business was concerned—one lake, or one attraction, or one river, or something like that. There is no guide by which one can say that a region would have so many townships and another so many counties. One might be part of one county, one might be three counties.

Mr. Bukator: The point I was trying to make, Mr. Chairman, is that it might be part of one county. Under these circumstances, then, I can bring it closer to home.

The city of Niagara Falls has the falls and a lot of people come there naturally to see it. We would like very much for the hon. Minister's department to take another look at the region, because the chamber of commerce in that area has a tourist and travel publicity group. They spend, I would guess now, an annual figure of $20,000 or $25,000. They could very readily and capably, and very well, spend this $5,000 to publicize that part of the province—because tourists not only stay there; they travel around through the province, although they may have their port of entry in that area, in connection with the Welland canal for instance.

I do not believe that these three counties, or two counties, can take advantage of this grant because you cannot get a group of people to sit down to find out where they are going to spend that portion of money.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would say to my hon. friend that the Niagara-Iroquois region did not receive the maximum grant last year of $5,000.

Mr. Bukator: The Niagara-Iroquois region? What region does that take in, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Auld: He may need a magnifying glass, but I will send this over to my hon. friend—

Mr. Bukator: I think this is important to the whole province. I think they all have similar problems.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Supposing I send the hon. member this map. It is region number five and he can see the geographic boundaries. I will just say this: I am sure Niagara Falls could be very happy, as almost every chamber of commerce and board of trade in the province would be, to have a specific grant to itself.

However, the total amount of the Budget I have is $150,000 and I am afraid that we just would not have that much money.

The idea of these regions is to encourage co-operation between municipalities and between local chambers of commerce, so that they can pool their efforts and jointly do a better job, a more effective job than they might do individually.

Mr. Bukator: Well I can just, at a glance, see that this takes in the county of Welland in this region, a portion of Haldimand county—it is a very small map but the area in which to distribute $5,000 is so great that they just cannot do the job properly.

You had representation here again. Your colleague, the hon. member for Welland, made representation to the department before the present hon. Minister took office; and I have met with the chamber, too, to discuss the possibility of dividing it into smaller areas where these people can take advantage of the departmental grants. Because, in the present circumstances, there is too little to go around, and the job cannot be done properly.

The point I am trying to make is that if the hon. Minister will see fit—and I am quite sure that he will, being the type of individual that he is—maybe I can bring the Welland Chamber of Commerce with my friend the hon. member for Welland, the Niagara Chamber of Commerce, and the hon. Minister might consider their problems. They just cannot go into a whole region to administer $5,000, because it is not feasible or financially sound.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would just say to my hon. friend that I will be very glad to see those two groups. I might tell them that, in my own area, I have had a somewhat similar request, and I can think of two or three others; so I can assure the hon. member that we are taking a look at this.

Mr. Bukator: Good. Thank you.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the hon. Minister, with regard to the regional organization grants: I do not see the Nipissing district region; is that the one association which did not get a grant?

Hon. Mr. Auld: They got $5,000 this year. They did not get anything the year before.

Mr. Troy: Did they not ask for it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: They made no application the year before.

Mr. Troy: Is that so?

How far does the Upper Ottawa Valley Association's jurisdiction extend?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As soon as I get my map back I will—I think it is the north end of Renfrew county. Yes, the top end of Renfrew county.

Mr. Troy: Why is the real upper Ottawa area not included then, because the Ottawa extends away beyond Renfrew riding north? Where would, for example, Mattawa; in what—

Hon. Mr. Auld: That would be in the Madawaska Valley.

Mr. Troy: No. Mattawa, at the confluence of the Ottawa and the Mattawa rivers.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I must apologize to my hon. friend. I should have brought a magnifying glass because unfortunately the print on this map is rather small. That would be in Nipissing I am informed—in the Nipissing region.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have one question I would like to ask the hon. Minister. Many provinces have taken steps to co-operate with the existing or prospective new tourist development, by the provision of funds. I can think of Nova Scotia for one. I was quite impressed with their programme, throughout that province a few years ago, when I happened to be down there. In all of the various developments in the province of Ontario, such as the Ontario Development Agency, is there any source now where the government is willing to go into partnership in the development of the tourist industry, or at least to make loans available?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, Mr. Chairman, of course the federal authority — The Small Loans Act, or The Small Business Act, I believe it is—makes provision for this and I am informed a number of people in the industry have been able to get funds there. The Ontario Development Agency I believe, has or is in the process of processing several applications provincially. But I would say that while this perhaps more properly comes in the estimates of my hon. friend, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall), the agency has been of great assistance to a number of operators in a way that might not appear to one as likely.

A number of operators have made application. The agency people have gone out to look at their operation and to look at their books, and by giving them assistance in their administrative practices, their bookkeeping practices—in other words, by getting them on a little better administrative basis — these people have then been able to go to the normal agencies and obtain funds. One of the purposes of the staff of this branch is to do that very thing, and with some of the staff that we are in the process of recruiting, primarily graduates of Ryerson's hotel administration course, we hope to be able to be of considerable assistance to the industry in this very way, in helping it have good administrative procedures to that it can tell whether operators are making or losing money and so it can approach the normal lending agencies effectively.

Mr. MacDonald: I am glad to hear the hon. Minister say this and obviously good management under any circumstances is a very important factor. Will he forgive me if I take a rather jaundiced view of these stories in light of the one prize example of an attempt to introduce more effective management? I am now referring to the Fairfield episode up in Owen Sound. That is the one case in the Ontario Development Agency which was publicized, by the government's own decision. One of the efforts there was to introduce more effective management. However, I leave that matter.

There was one other point, but it now escapes me. If it comes back, I shall raise it, Mr. Minister.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, on that fateful day of March 19, the same day which I had the pleasure of speaking at some great length, the whole context of my approach to this department was that with the increased competition that our province is facing, we must substantially increase the development of tourist attractions and resorts in this province if we are going to compete in this market. As you will note in the financial statistics, we are spending approximately $1.25 million on advertising and promotion of our province and slightly less than $500,000 in the development of the resort areas.

In my speech, I stated we must develop major attractions in all parts of the province and a variety of attractions. We must provide the attractions or harness the existing ones so they will appeal to the tourists. I would just like to reiterate a few of these suggestions I did make at that time and possibly get some comments from the hon. Minister.

One item, sir, was that the province should develop marinas or dockage on the Great Lakes and our inland waterways, in order that we could create more of this type of tourist traffic into our province. Another was that more provincial parks should be introduced into southern Ontario, where they have proved to be economically reliable and they certainly serve the mass population of our province, as well as our neighbours to the south.

A further suggestion was zoning of the type of business established at the entrances or near the entrances of the provincial parks. A suggestion came out of one committee meeting that as new lakes are opened in the development of our province, zoning should be instituted in that commercial establishments be located in one section and the other sections be reserved for the public and private cottaging. Another suggestion I made which could aid in the development of our tourist industry was the idea of strip maps on some of our highway routes, which would indicate the key points of interest and give a concise description of them.

These were a number of the suggestions I made and I would appreciate some comment on them. To follow the comments of my friend, the hon. member for Niagara Falls, in regard to regional tourist councils, that they are devised in relation to a lake or river front or specific area, I just wonder if the hon. Minister could inform the House why the Sarnia-Lambton tourist region was devised as one region in this province?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to go on at length with these areas which my hon. friend has raised. We did discuss them and I think I commented on them on March 19. Perhaps properly they are not under this vote; they would be on the general comment on the first vote. But the question of zoning around parks is a rather difficult one to deal with, as is all zoning where you divide types of business. It is fairly simple, and it is established practice to zone for industrial, commercial, residential and that kind of broad general division. I am not trying to embarrass my hon. friend, but I would say that one could look forward to a fair amount of difficulty in trying to carry out his suggestion of zoning certain kinds of businesses around a park or recreational area.

For instance, there are so many businesses these days which are not in any specific field. By that I mean that one drug store may sell only drugs and in another drug store you may have an awful time finding any drugs. How we would establish this kind of thing, supposing we decided to attempt to do this, is something that escapes me at the moment. I would say that the practice which I think The Department of Lands and Forests has carried out pretty well to date, of trying to acquire sufficient property to protect the main recreational area, is probably the most effective one.

In connection with strip maps, I presume my hon. friend is speaking of the kind of map which say, the Ontario Motor League produces. This indicates a route and certain things adjacent to that route, within, say, ten or 15 miles. I might say that one of our publications indicates a number of suggested motor trips around the province, suggested tours of varying lengths, and does in fact do, I think, what he is suggesting. In addition, of course, The Department of Highways last year produced a strip map which refers only to Highway 401, primarily to assist the tourist industry and industry generally in locating their operations in relation to 401 by numbers. I think this has worked out very well.

There were a number of things in my hon. friend's remarks on March 19 which I have re-read and which we are looking at. I think, Mr. Chairman, to stay in some semblance of order, perhaps that is all I should say on this vote.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Chairman, my hon. colleague from Essex South mentioned marinas. Has your department done anything in connection with promoting marinas throughout the province, or am I on the wrong vote?

Hon. Mr. Auld: We put out a publication called Cruising Ontario Waters, which gives general information for people in boats, where to obtain charts, general information on things to do adjacent to well-travelled water routes, and in addition has an insert which gives, as accurately as we can, gives all the marinas on the waterways, their names, and the facilities they have—for instance, whether they have gasoline and diesel fuel, ice, groceries, repairs, shorelines, this sort of thing.

Mr. Bukator: All private enterprise pretty well, are they?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yes, there are to my knowledge no publicly operated marinas in the province unless the odd municipality may do so.

But I think there are some which may be municipally owned but which are leased out.

Mr. Bukator: I find that we have had co-operation from the provincial authorities, and some of the federal people have been down in the Crystal Beach area, Mr. Chairman, pertaining to the traffic that they have on Lake Erie. There are many boats which come from the American waters into the Canadian waters but have nowhere to land. I know they would like to come into some of our summer resort areas to stop with us and visit and spend some of those American dollars that we need so badly.

I think that some of the people from the department have been looking at the Crystal Beach area for the possibility of a marina that might be operated by the municipality. But we need assistance, if nothing more than engineering and advice from the department, along with assistance from the federal people too, whoever would assist us. I know they have been working for years to bring this about but I can see a lot of potential American dollars coming into this country if they only had a place to land in that area.

We have millions of people to the south of us who have boats, who cruise up and down that lake but have nowhere to stop to land and visit with us.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might clarify what I said, or perhaps we should have defined "marina" before we started. The Department of Lands and Forests, in a number of their parks, do have docks and facilities to land. When I spoke of a marina, I was thinking of a commercial operation which supplies goods and services to the boat operator.

The department, of course, does give technical advice and assistance to any potential operator. We will assist him in getting in touch with suppliers, suggest how he finds out what the potential may be by giving him figures on the boating in the area and this sort of thing. But as for operating marinas ourselves, we do not. I should correct myself, the St. Lawrence Parks Commission has a marina of this kind at Crysler Park which is leased—actually it was built by an operator and in effect the commission has leased the space to this operator.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I now recall the last point I wanted to ask the hon. Minister. There have been a number of stories with regard to tourist operators who have been going on with their business when they were unlicensed, in violation of regulations. There is at least one instance—if the hon. Minister will recall, which I discussed with him privately. Is the hon. Minister in a position to make a statement in such detail as he sees fit within that context, indicating to what extent does the policing, if you will, of tourist operators rest with his department, or if it is just part of the normal operation of the law through the hon. Attorney General's department and local Crown attorneys and so on?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, without going into specific detail, as I think the hon. members would agree might not be wise as far as things under consideration are concerned, there was considerable concern in the French River area. I think the hon. member will remember this. This was about a year ago.

If I could just perhaps recap briefly by giving for this area, which was the most difficult one, the figures as to what happened: There were complaints of some alleged 66 unlicensed operators all over the northern part of Ontario—Kenora region, North Bay region; Kenora would be the northwest and North Bay the northeast. There were 66 investigations made.

It was found that eight were already licensed under The Tourist Establishments Act, which is the responsibility of this department and which is the only provincial statute having to do with the licensing of tourist operations. Municipalities, under that Act, have authority to license also. And I cannot report on what they may or may not have been doing.

It was found that 34 of these investigated were not licensable; in other words they were not tourist establishments under the Act. And I might just say there, Mr. Chairman, under the Act and regulations, you or I or any one of us can rent our own cottage if we wish, but if we have two or more units then we have to be licensed. This is primarily to protect the transients. This does not apply to owners of boarding houses, rooming houses, apartment houses, people on long-term leases.

Subsequently, upon investigation, and when the rules were pointed out, 20 of these were licensed and the remaining four were, in effect, borderline cases. Each one was warned by letter, two of them were such small operations that they preferred to stop doing what was on the borderline; and they just ceased operations. The other two have finally qualified and received their licences. Without going into the detail, I might just say I am informed it was decided not to prosecute these two because they were borderline cases; there was a good question as to whether a licence should have been obtained.

I might say though that, partially as a request by the operators themselves, with the full-time staff which the department will have as of April 1 of this year, we hope to be in a position to take a little closer look at this situation and perhaps be able to follow up some of these things a little more elaborately than we did in the past when a large proportion of our staff were only casual summertime employees.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): I might say that we are all interested in trying to attract as many tourists as possible to this province. I am not an expert in this field but I, for one, feel that good fishing in some of our small lakes is one of the things which attracts tourists. I often wondered if the department ever gave a thought to restocking some of these lakes. Some of them do not seem to have too much fish. Would that not be one way of encouraging tourists to come? I know, if you are talking to a tourist and he has a good day of fishing, he says, "I'm coming back next year".

Mr. Troy: "The damndest big fish . . ."

Mr. Spence: So I think this is just one of the things which would attract more tourists, if we had more fish in some of our lakes.

Hon. Mr. Auld: My, that is a temptation!

Well, I can only say, Mr. Chairman, that of course we realize, and I agree with the hon. member, that good fishing is important; but here again the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests is in charge of the restocking and the fishing. We never suggest to him that he cease doing this.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I wonder could I ask the hon. Minister, through you, whether the Ottawa tulip festival gets a grant from the department?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, it does not. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the department has no authority to make grants other than to the regional associations, and certain associations such as Norglac, and a Lake Superior association, which are joint provincial and certain U.S. state organizations. But no grants are made to the festival, or any of the fall festivals and that sort of thing.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Chairman, would the department consider sending staff to areas which would have something similar to the Ottawa district, like the tulip festival—to advise them as to how to promote a programme?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, we have in the field, through our regional offices, staff who work closely with various organizations, both regional and local, in terms of chambers of commerce and boards of trade, in giving planning assistance, arranging publicity assistance. We do a great deal of photography, for instance, for these people.

In certain areas, if we have the staff available, we will send some of our attractive guides—the girls you see downstairs and from the other tourist section centres—to assist in the registration of large conventions or office work and so on, in connection with some of these festivals. We try to co-operate in every way we can, short of making a specific grant of funds.

Mr. Newman: You do not send specialists from your department into an area to make concrete suggestions to assist the area in the promotion of festivals at all then, do you?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Well, this is, of course, one of the reasons for the establishment of the regional tourist councils we were referring to a few moments ago. Of course various branches of the department—the publicity branch and the development branch are two—hold seminars and area conferences. In fact, we are having an area conference between the regions and the development association in Peterborough later this month for the purpose of getting people together, having them ask questions as to the possibilities of certain proposals, ideas, summer festivals, winter carnivals. We have encouraged the holding of a large number of winter carnivals which I think on the whole have been successful this year. There are summer festivals and the cavalcade of colour in the fall in Muskoka which has become quite an annual event. This kind of thing we do.

Mr. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

My purpose in asking all of this is that we did have an international freedom festival in the city of Windsor-Detroit and it was a most outstanding thing the very first year because of the attraction, sir, and that was Her Majesty the Queen. Since then the festival has not been able to get on its feet to the extent we would like to see it. Now here you have a natural.

Two countries, living at peace with one another; two great cities, one of the great cities of the western world, Detroit. If the department could possibly send some type of assistance into the area, maybe the freedom festival could get back onto its feet and once again be the tourist attraction that it really should be. Here we have two nations living in freedom, at peace with one another; what an outstanding example to show to the rest of the world. There is no Berlin wall separating the two nations.

I think the department could come along and give some sort of assistance. Maybe the municipality did not ask for it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That may well be the answer, but I can assure my hon. friend that if there is a request we always try to oblige; but on the other hand we do not poke our nose in without an invitation.

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, could I ask a further question of the hon. Minister regarding the tulip festival? Has the board of trade or any organization from the Ottawa area ever asked for a grant in order to promote the tulip festival?

Before I sit down, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the Ottawa tulip festival is certainly one of the outstanding events in eastern Ontario and thousands upon thousands of people come from all over Canada and many states of the United States to see the tulips at that season. I am wondering whether a request has ever been made by the authorities in Ottawa for a grant towards the publicizing of that festival.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Chairman, I am informed that from the knowledge of my officials here today, no request has been made. But in all fairness I would say that probably no request was made because it is not very likely it would be granted.

Vote 2106 agreed to.

On vote 2107:

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, in this vote I presume that it is the historical advisory board that recommended to the hon. Minister that the development of Fort Ste. Marie be proceeded with, is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The project of Fort Ste. Marie is, as I say, in vote 2102 which we have passed. But in connection with it and the vote we are now on, 2107—

Mr. Nixon: Was the development recommended by the historical advisory board?

Hon. Mr. Auld: We are now on vote 2107, are we, Mr. Chairman?

No, the archaeological and historic sites board is, of course, aware of Fort Ste. Marie and the other historic sites in the area. As a matter of fact, the chairman of the archaeological and historic sites board and two other members of the board are also members of the committee which is in charge of the restoration of Fort Ste. Marie in the Huronia project. But as far as it being generated by the archaeological and historic sites board, the answer is no. It was a project which, I suppose, has been discussed at many levels of government and by many groups in the province as a project and the government decided it should go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to ask if the hon. Minister and his advisors consulted the historical advisory board as to the historical value of this particular site for the expenditure of such a large amount of money to develop it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Oh yes. As I say, as a matter of fact three members of the archaeological and historic sites board are members of the committee which is charged with carrying out the restoration of Fort Ste. Marie. The board has been well informed about the plans for establishing the project for some time before it was decided to go ahead.
